THE WORK TO BE DONE—NO. 1.

Ezekiel 21: 27—"I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until He come whose right it is, and I will give it him."

The prince here spoken of is Hezekiah, the last king of the nation of Israel; and in this prophecy his destruction and the final termination of a kingly government, in him or in his descendants, is foretold. This destruction he evidently brought upon himself; he had turned away from the counsel of God, and in his movements were governed by human oracles, believing that his fate would be determined accordingly. God by the prophet gives him to understand that the sword raised against him by the king of Babylon would come, and he would then learn, to his own sorrow, that his divinations were false. There had been a succession of kings in Israel, from the days of Saul down to this wicked prince, it being about six hundred years. This was not the system of government that God had established; it was given to the people while in a state of rebellion. They were not satisfied with the national code given them from God by the hand of Moses. They said, "Give us a king." Under the reign of some of those kings, they lived prosperous and happy; others cruelly oppressed them, "putting on them burdens that they nor their fathers had never been able to bear."

Various efforts were made, after the death of Hezekiah, to restore the kingdom, and again establish a king. All efforts made against the determined purpose of God proved unavailing. The passage quoted is evidently a confirmation of those literal judgments that were to come upon Israel, and of the final triumph and universal reign of Jesus Christ. Zedekiah had no successor to fill his place as king of the ten tribes, who at his death were dispersed all over the world, and continue so to this day. His successor, that God promised to raise up, was evidently the Prince of Peace, the Lord of our righteousness. And we have no doubt that He will bring about this great work of restoring Israel, and gathering in the Gentiles, by a succession of remarkable revolutions among the people and nations of the earth.

The crown, the diadem, and every mark of royalty, should be taken from Hezekiah, and given to one who would have a right to wear it, and in justice rule all the nations. Such a king God has promised should sit on his holy hill of Zion. The Apostle has this in view when he says, in Hebrews 1: 2—"Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his son." And to Matthew Christ says, "All honor is given unto me, both in heaven and in earth." God will bring about the glorious reign of Christ, by overturning and destroying all things that stand in the way of it.

We may inquire, what these things are?

I. Every species of tyranny stands in the way of Christ's reign. As soon as he commenced his labors in the flesh, all of the then existing governments were united in opposing him. Pilate and Herod, who had long been enemies, were made friends to oppose the work of Christ. And the strongest accusation that was brought against him was, that "he was a friend to Cæsar." Fears were entertained that he would take away their place and nation. Wherever religion has been established by law, it has in it a species of tyranny that the gospel will never tolerate. God has given a law by which religion is to be regulated, and he will not sacrifice his own honor by giving it into the hands of men to regulate by any human legislation. Ecclesiastical tyranny is equally opposed to the government of Christ. The church has been delegated by Jesus Christ to administer the gospel discipline by which her members are to be governed. This is and must be confined to its own members. "If thy brother trespass against thee," &c. This government cannot reach those who are not connected with the church; and the authority thus given is limited; no punishment can be inflicted upon them, but, "let him be unto thee as an heathen man," &c. No being but a God would have extended such benevolence to the trangressor. To establish a set of officers to administer discipline, and to make laws for the government of the church, is a species of dangerous tyranny. Jesus Christ has invested the church with authority to do its own business, and it has no right to attempt to invest others with it.

Idolatry is a species of tyranny. With what fervency and zeal do idolaters cling to their favorite deities. The largest proportion of the human family are idolaters, and their religion is interwoven with their civil government, which makes them formidable enemies of the religion of the Bible. The Mahomedans are a church of idolaters, ascribing that to a pretended prophet which belongs to GOD, and exercising authority which the church of God never possessed. The Greek church are blinded by the delusions of idolatry. That numerous people occupy the most of Greece, the Grecian Isles, Wallachia, Moldavia, Egypt, Abyssinia, Nubia, Lybia, Arabia, Mesopotamia, Syria, Cicilia, Palestine, the Russian Empire, and some smaller kingdoms. They practice the invocation of saints, and worship images, thus adapting their religion to the natural passions of men; and this species of corruption has banished true religion from those countries where it once flourished, and it will not be restored until idolatry is destroyed from their midst.

Infidelity and deism are species of tyranny, that oppose the best interests of man. Though there are different shades of them, yet they have all been manufactured to accomplish the same end. What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness? Infidelity has been greatly emboldened, in that some of the learned have been and are still its advocates. German divines, while in heart deists, have corrupted all Germany with this pernicious poison; and in this country hundreds of baptized infidels in the orthodox churches, by reason of their pernicious ways, have brought upon us leanness and poverty. And as long as any part of God's requirements are treated with neglect, so long there will be a species of infidelity among us, that will oppose the gospel and the reign of Christ on the earth. Some of the learned sciences of the age are used to propagate this pernicious system. And a large proportion of the floating literature in the form of tracts, newspapers, and books, with handsome covers, beautiful without, are but the advocates of deism and infidelity.

Heresy or corrupt doctrines are a species of tyranny, and opposed to the spread of truth. We are all governed in our acts by the principles we embrace; hence no one can disbelieve the fundamental principles of the gospel, and be a Christian. To disbelieve any of the fundamental principles of the gospel will seriously affect us; it will reduce the zeal, alienate the affections, direct the attention, and weaken the hands of those who are trying to build the Zion of God on the earth. To be more anxious for numbers than for graces—to be satisfied to live, and to live only, while we are doing nothing in the vineyard—to have the name and the form, and not to be a working people—is to be satisfied with some corrupted heresy, and to cling to that abominable thing which God hates. The many millions who are now without the gospel, are trusting to a delusion. The Jew, with the Pentateuch and the Talmud, and the millions under popish rule and the dogmas of the Greek church, with all the followers of Mahomet, and the many nominal Protestants, with those in pagan darkness; and we have before us a work, in "turning the world upside down," that cannot be done without the help of a God.

II. By what means God will overturn or remove all these things, which stand in the way of the glorious reign of Christ. These evils are numerous, and we may suppose that God will employ various means to prepare the way for the latter day glory.

We learn by the Prophets that public calamities and national judgments will be a powerful means of bringing about this event. Isaiah—"Who is this that cometh from Edon with dyed garments from Bozra, this that is glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine vat? I have trodden the wine press alone, and of the people there was none with me, for I will tread them in mine anger and trample them in my fury, and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment."

Some of the prophetic threatenings in the Old Testament have been fearfully fulfilled against God's ancient people, the Jews. We as a nation boast of our liberty and of our prosperity, and of the rapid increase of our numbers, wealth, and popularity; but this great confederacy at an unexpected time may be completely overturned. The famine, the pestilence, and the sword that has laid waste large countries and mighty empires, may spread a similar destruction among us. Wickedness, infidelity, and rebellion cannot be tolerated here as in other countries, "where much is given, much is required." And we as a people have enjoyed great and uninterrupted privileges from its earlist history, and under these circumstances to be wicked and irreligious would be aggravated dishonesty. Then we may inquire, Does religion and piety increase in proportion to our numbers? If not, we should raise the alarm, "Cry aloud and spare not."

The sciences and literature of the age will do much in breaking down tyranny and oppression. Ignorance is the mother af superstition, and this will never be destroyed, except by imparting proper instruction. While nations are chained in ignorance, there is no hope in their case. The people must be taught, the church of God must furnish teachers of the right kind; they must learn and practice the principle of universal brotherhood—that God is our father, and that no man is our master. Steamboats, railroads, and telegraphs, are so many connecting chords to unite the different nations of the earth. Those who but a few years ago were strangers, have become our neighbors; they are now in speaking distance; and if they are not used to benefit and bless the nations, they will be among the many instruments by which the judgments of God will be sent upon us. Human learning is one of the handmaids of religion, and every minister knows that more dependence may be put in the reading, intelligent family, than in those who are satisfied with the knowledge already obtained. Ignorance is one of the greatest barriers to every benevolent enterprise. The ignorant are governed more by feeling than by sound judgment, and their movements are all spasmodic; while the man properly taught, goes up to the work expecting to accomplish it, not as a work for the present hour only, but as a work for life, which will only be done when he has done with earth. As such men increase in our churches and in the world, in the same proportion, we expect to see tyranny, infidelity, and heresy disappear. For this we will wait, and for this we will pray. May the Lord hasten it in his time. W. B. G.

SHILOH, N. J.

STANZAS.

There are three lessons I would write—
Three words—as with a burning pen,
In tracings of eternal light,
Upon the hearts of men.

Have Hope! Though clouds environ now,
And gladness hides her face with scorn,
Put thou the shadows from thy brow—
No night but hath its morn.

Have Faith! Where'er thy bark is driven—
The calm's disport—the tempest's mirth—
Know this—God rules the hosts of heaven,
The inhabitants of earth.

Have Love! Not love alone for one,
But man, as man, thy brother call—
And scatter like the circling sun,
Thy charities on all.

Thus grave these lessons on thy soul—
Hope, Faith and Love—and thou shalt find
Strength, when life's surges wildest roll—
Light, when thou else wert blind!

From the American Messenger.

THE GAMBLER'S WIFE.

In the village where I am a pastor is a gambling-house, to which multitudes resort to play billiards and cards. It was kept a few years since by a Mr. ——, whose wife, a most interesting and amiable young woman, who was in the habit of attending my church, became hopefully converted, and made a public profession of religion. He never visited the sanctuary, and studiously avoided all means of grace, devoting himself entirely to his miserable business. Indeed, he had been trained to it from his childhood, having from early years been employed as a rider at horse-races, and always mingled in the society of the profligate.

From the moment the Spirit touched her heart, the Lord poured out upon her the spirit of grace and supplication for him; and she pleaded earnestly and fainted not, that he might be brought to see his sins and flee from the wrath to come. Often would she await his return from the billiard-room at midnight, upon her knees; sometimes expecting when he opened the door to see him under conviction of sin, and disappointed when she found it otherwise.

Month after month rolled by, and no cloud of mercy seemed to gather about her habitation, and yet, like the prophet Elijah's, her eye of faith saw the rain descending.

Much to my surprise, I was summoned one morning to the house of Mr. ——, to converse with him on the subject of his salvation. I found him in the deepest agony under the pressure of his guilt, and earnestly inquiring, "What must I do to be saved?" His sense of sin was very vivid, and his apprehension of the perfect justice of God in his perdition very clear. Among the burdens which crushed him, was that of having taken money from others which did not belong to him. I advised him to make immediate confession and restitution, and at the same time abandon his ruinous business. I then prayed with him, and left him weeping bitterly.

He instantly set about the work of repentance in good earnest. Going to his partner, he said, "I shall never enter that billiard-room again." To those whom he had wronged, he made a full confession and offer of restitution. That evening for the first time I found him at our weekly prayer-meeting, when he requested the people of God to pray for him. From that day he has been a burning and shining light among us. His trials have been very great, but his faith has never failed, nor has he lost his first love, although five or six years have elapsed since he gave his heart to Christ.

But it may be asked how, under his peculiarly unfavorable circumstances, was he awakened? The answer will add another testimony to the truth of the sovereign grace of God, as conclusive as that which the conversion of Saul of Tarsus furnishes. Mr. —— was awakened at the billiard-room and at the card-table. Two men had been playing, and one, by false shuffling of the cards, plundered of his last cent. Filled with despair, he rose, caught a chair, and dashed it in his agony through the window. A sight of his countenance was the sermon which the Holy Spirit blessed to the conviction of Mr. ——. He resolved that hour to seek the Lord, and he sought him with his whole heart.

How naturally do reflections such as the following arise in view of such a fact:

1. Never despair of the salvation of any man, so long as he is spared by God to live in the world of mercy.

2. All things are possible to him that believeth, and who prays in faith.

3. Let wives who have ungodly husbands who will not attend the sanctuary, hope in God and pray on.

4. How rich is the distinguishing grace of God! What would have become of Paul, or Mr. ——, or you, or me, or anybody else, were it not true that God "hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and compassion on whom he will have compassion?"

CRITICISM.

It ought to be a sacred rule of conscience with every man, not to carry a spirit of literary censorship into the Sabbath. If it cleaves to you in going to the house of God, shake it off, as Paul did the viper. The dignity and sanctity of the place forbid its intrusion. If you have no other way to subdue this spirit, which is so hostile to the ends of religious worship, adopt the precaution of avoiding altogether remarks on the preaching, till the Sabbath is past. Then limit your observations to those things which cleaved to your memory at that time, without any effort of attention as a critic.

These suggestions result from experience. For many years. I have not allowed myself, in the regular worship of God, to hear sermons as a critic; but have aimed to avoid, on the Sabbath, all conversation respecting preaching, that could promote in myself or in others a criticising spirit. In a congregation of students, and even of Christian students, there are probably some special tendencies to the indulgence of this spirit; but still, the habit of freely discussing the merits or defects of a sermon, so soon as we have ceased to listen to it from the pulpit, is so adapted to frustrate the proper influence of the Sabbath, that Christian theological students, and ministers especially, should guard against such a sacrifice as to spirituality of feeling.

This habit of criticising the preacher is injustice to him. It assumes that he sets himself up to act a part for the amusement of others; and that every time he preaches, even the first time, he ought to be so faultless that a critic can perceive no defect in the performance.

It is injustice to the critic himself. Why does he go to the house of God? Professedly to hear the gospel, to unite in religious worship, to have fellowship with angels, to get ready for heaven. When Moses came down the mount, his face shone; but this critic comes from the sanctuary like worldly people from a tea-party or a theater. His conversation shows that his mind has been occupied by a literary or vagrant curiosity. The house of God and the gate of heaven have only furnished him with subjects of religious small-talk. Many seem to think that it must be a good employment to talk about sermons; while they do this in such a way as, in fact, to profane the Sabbath, offend God, and harden their own hearts. [Dr. E. Porter.

GREATNESS OF SOUL.

We have met, in the course of our reading, with the following instance of true greatness of soul, which has towered before our mind like a mountain, not unattended with sublime emotions. Louis De Leon was a Spanish scholar of much celebrity, and a lecturer on sacred literature in the college of Salamanca. At the request of a friend he made a version of the "Song of Solomon," explaining that book as a pastoral eclogue. It was entirely a private affair, and the Professor had taken pains to have his version known only to the individual for whose benefit it had been made. But by the treachery of a servant his manuscript was copied and circulated. It constituted a grave offense against the Catholic church, and in 1812 the author was brought before the Inquisition of Valladolid. For five years he was imprisoned, "in a way," says Ticknor, in his history of Spanish literature, whose words we now quote, "that seriously impaired his health, and broke down his spirits. But the University remained faithful to him. He was reinstated in all his offices, with marks of the sincerest regard, on the 30th of December, 1576; and it is a beautiful circumstance attending his restoration, that, when for the first time he rose before a crowded audience, eager to hear what allusion he would make to his persecutions, he began by simply saying—'As we remarked when last we met,' and then went on as if the five bitter years of his imprisonment had been a blank in his memory, bearing no record of the cruel treatment he had suffered."

THE UNWELCOME PASSENGER.

Some years ago, in traveling one evening towards London, I happened to be the only passenger inside the mail. There are seasons when we would not willingly travel without company, but being at the time in a reflective mood, I hoped that no one would disturb me. For some miles I had my wish; suddenly, however, the mail stopped near the gate of a farm-house, and a man of unusual size soon clambered up the steps into the coach. From the glance I had of him, assisted by the bright lamp on that side the mail coach, I concluded at once that he was some honest famer, would talk of nothing the whole of the way, but of turnips, clover seed, barley, pigs, sheep and cattle. I speak not of these things disparagingly; they are each, and all of them interesting and important, but I was no farmer, and besides, my head was full of other things.

To defend myself as well as I could from so unwelcome a trespass on my reflections, I affected to be sleepy, and leaned back my head in the corner of the mail; but my fellow traveler was not to be so easily defrauded of a friendly chat; he began at once, just as I had anticipated, to speak of the effect of the late rain on the turnips.

To all he said, I replied yes, or no, as the case required, and hoped that he would soon relapse into silence, but in this I was quite mistaken. Finding it impossible to evade his conversation, I tried to submit with a good face, and endure patiently what I could not avoid. But here it will be well honestly to confess, that I thought very little of the farmer, and plumed myself highly on my superior knowledge. In short I felt, in talking to my companion, like a man who confers a favor by his condescension. Such is the weakness, the folly, the pride of the human heart.

After speaking of the produce of the ground, of cattle, and of the high prices of some things, and the low prices of others, my companion ran into other topics, and so completely astonished me by the extent of his practical information, that I began to wonder whenever and however he had contrived to pick up so much knowledge.

He spoke of the value of human labor as compared to machinery, of the population and resources of the country, of its mines, its manufactures, and its commerce, of the poor laws, of capital, and of the influence of paper money. In short, he got so far beyond me, that I felt like a school-boy in the presence of his master. Yes, the very man whom I had estimated so low as to think myself greatly his superior, was as a giant on practical subjects, and I as a dwarf.

On inquiry, I ascertained that he was a man largely interested in mines, that the workmen employed by him amounted to several thousands, that the advantage of his practical knowledge was sought for by his Majesty's Ministers, that at the time when he traveled with me, he was on his way, with calculations of an important nature, to the first lord of the treasury, the Prime Minister of England.

I felt little in my own eyes. O, it does us good, when puffed up with an undue notion of our own importance, to meet with a reprimand like this. It was a rap on the knuckles that I shall not soon forget, nor do I think that, from that time, I have ever undervalued a man on account of his appearance. What my companion thought of me I cannot tell, but I know well what I thought of myself. It was altogether an humbling affair, and taught me to prize more highly than I did before, the injunction of holy writ—"Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits." Rom. 8: 16. [Old Humphrey.

WOLF SCALP—SPECIAL PROVIDENCE.

The old log meeting-house in which a Presbyterian congregation in Western Pennsylvania had long worshipped, had fallen so much into decay, that a meeting of the church was called, to consider the propriety of taking measures for the erection of a new house. Moved with a zeal for the honor of God's house, and with a spirit of self-denying liberality, not too common in these more prosperous days, the meeting resolved at once to commence a subscription for the purpose. A paper was properly headed, and handed to the ruling elders of the church first, as it was naturally expected that they should set an example of liberality to the people. One of them was a poor man in this world's goods, but rich in faith, who walked with God, and acknowledged him in all his ways. He felt constrained to set down his name for eight dollars, a large sum for a man in his circumstances, and in those days—more than a half a century before California had begun to pour her golden treasures into the land. He hoped, by industry and economy, with the blessing of God, to raise the sum before the time of payment should arrive, which was many months ahead; but everything seemed to go against him. With all his exertions, he had not been able to save a dollar, after defraying his most frugal household expenses. To add to his perplexity, he owed a bill of two dollars for taxes, which was to be paid at the same time. With a heavy heart, he started on foot to the place of meeting, which was at the county town, several miles distant, with his rifle on his shoulder—the back woodsman's inseperable companion in those days, when a hostile Indian or a wild beast might be expected at any moment to cross his path. As he proceeded on his solitary way through the woods, he was permitted to talk familiarly with the Lord on the subject of his painful dilemma; and we may suppose that he plead with him somewhat in this manner:

"Lord, thou knowest that it was not in any spirit of vain boasting that I took on me this obligation, but in humble reliance on thy providence, and with a single eye to thy glory. Wilt thou not, then, graciously interfere to save thy servant from the disgrace of a broken pledge, and thy holy cause, which is dearer to him than life, from discredit and reproach? Thou hast all power in heaven and earth. The silver and the gold are thine. I ask not for my righteousness' sake, but for thine own name's sake. I believe; Lord, help mine unbelief!"

While thus pleading, all his burden was removed, and he felt an assurance that all would be well; but how, he could not imagine. He had nearly reached his destination, when he perceived a large wolf standing right across his path, as if spell-bound, and awaiting his fate. Raising his trusty rifle, and taking an unerring aim, he brought the animal to the ground with a ball through the heart. In a few minutes he had its bleeding scalp removed, and deposited safely in his pocket, and went on his way rejoicing in the Lord. But what was the ground of his exultation and gratitude? Was it deliverance from danger? No; he was too true a backwoodsman to fear any monster of the forest while he had his rifle in his hand. Wait, reader, and you shall learn. When he reached the town, he proceeded straight to the office of the county treasurer, and handed him his wolf scalp, and at the sume time his bill for taxes. The farmers had suffered so much in their flocks from the depredations of wolves, that a reward had been offered for the scalp of every wolf killed within the county. The treasurer taking it, said, "I need not put you to your oath that the wolf to which this belonged was killed within the county; I find it is still warm."

Putting a receipt on his bill for two dollars, he handed him eight dollars, the balance of the premium. Thence the good man proceeded to the church meeting, and, with feelings of delight, which may be more easily conceived than expressed, he paid his subscription to the new meeting-house.

Let the skeptic talk of a lucky accident, and laugh at the credulity which can see the finger of God in this; I envy him not. To me, it is a most rational, as well as consoling truth, that not a sparrow falls to the ground without our Heavenly Father; and while I believe that Elijah was literally fed by "ravens," and not by "merchants," or "Arabians," or by the "inhabitants of Arbo," as some neological commentators would translate the word, in order to ignore a special providence, I am prepared to believe any well authenticated fact of Divine interposition in behalf of God's afflicted and believing people. NAMES OF DAYS AND MONTHS.

They are derived from certain objects of worship, as Sunday from the sun; Monday from the moon; Tusico, the same with the Roman Mars, gave name to Tuesday; Wednesday from Woden their god of battle; Thursday from Furanes, the same with the Danish Thor, the god of winds and weather; Friday fron Friga, otherwise called Venus, who was sometimes worshipped as the goddess of peace and plenty; Saturday from Seator, the god of freedom, or from the planet Saturn.

The Romans named nearly all the months from some of their divinities or emperors, viz: January from Janus, who was represented with two faces, one looked towards the new year, the other towards the old; February named by Romulus from Februa, the mother of Mars; March from Mars, the god of war; April from Aperio, a Latin word, signifying to open the year or blossom; May from Maia, the mother of Mercury; June from Juno, the wife of Jupiter; July was named by Marc Anthony, in honor of Julius Cæsar, a celebrated Roman; August from Augustus Cæsar, a Roman Emperor; September from Septem, the seventh month of the Roman year; October from Octo, the eighth month; November from Novem, the ninth month; December from Decem, the tenth month of the Roman year.

The Romans commenced their year in March, and consequently December would be the tenth month; but we commence the year in January, and then December will be the twelfth, or last month in the year. September, October, and November, instead of being the seventh, eighth, and ninth months, will become the ninth, tenth and eleventh.

THE DEATH OF INFANTS.

Those who have never lost a child, are unable to understand how great a void the death of one little one can make. There is, we think, nothing on earth that can cast so long and wide and black a shadow as a small coffin. It is emphatically the shadow of death which freezes the parent's heart.

Small as is an infant's tomb, it sometimes is capacious enough to hold all the brightest hopes and dearest joys of a whole family circle. The little child is often the bright focus, where all the rays of gladness of a household center, and from which they are reflected again over happy hearts; and when this central light is eclipsed, great darkness falls upon all.

How many there must be in heaven, gathered up from all climes, even from heathen shores, who have died so young as to retain no memory of earth, and to whom that world of glory seems as their native land; whose souls were washed and regenerated so early, that no stain of this world was ever visible upon the soul.

Whatever wound of sin there may have been, has healed without a scar; their every thought has been moulded by the society and scenery of heaven, and they stand continually before the face of the Father. In how large a sense may we say, "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven?" [Christian Press.

A LECTURE FOR RICH MEN.

Col. Cummings, of the Evening Bulletin, read the following brief discourse touching the indebtedness of rich men:—

"I can pay my way, and am obliged to nobody," is a frequent expression of the selfish rich man. We fancy we can see him, while he utters it, with his purse-proud, defiant look, buttoning up his pockets as if he thought you a thief.

You can pay your own way, can you? You are obliged to nobody? Good sir, we don't believe you know what you say. That you can pay your pecuniary debts we have no doubt, but those, it seems to us, are the least part of your obligation.s You owe duties to society as a man, a citizen, and a millionaire, of which, perhaps, you have never thought; certainly not as debts to be paid, in your own person, and by an expenditure of your own time, and thought, and money. My dear sir, consider this well. Do not live and die in the false belief that because you owe this debt to society in the abstract, Heaven will never require its payment at your hands. Do not imagine either that you can delegate its liquidation to others. No well-salaried minister, no sleek visitor of the poor, can become your middleman in this matter, doing your work for you. Monopolize your time in mere money-making, and suffer your heart to grow hard as steel, as all hearts will that never come into contact with human misery.

"I can pay my way," you say, "I am obliged to nobody." Perhaps, as you utter these words, you look rebukingly at some poor debtor who has failed to meet his engagements. Beware. O, rich man! "judge not lest ye be judged." You know not what defects of early training, what disasters of fortune, what treachery on the part of others, may have led to his bankruptcy. With all his errors, and even faults, for probably he has not been entirely free from either, he may yet be a better man, taken all in all, than you, with your bank stock, your mortgages, your ships, and your real estate. He may not neglect his children, as you, absorbed in your speculations, probably do, leaving their moral training to others, instead of superintending it yourself. He may be a truer husband, not acting as you perhaps do, as if a wife was either a slave or a plaything, and not a companion. He may be a kinder friend, a more conscientious citizen, a man better imbued with the thousand sympathies of humanity. Believe us, there are more crimes than being in debt, though, where debt comes from imprudence or a reckless spirit of speculation, it is, heaven knows, bad enough.

"I can pay my way," you say, "I am obliged to nobody." You are obliged, on the contrary, to every fellow-creature with whom you are thrown into contact, either in social life or in business. Without their courtesy, their attention, their kindness, their society, you would be the most miserable creature alive. Every hour you live you are indebted to some fellow-being for some attention or other, and it is only because they are so freely and commonly given, like the air of heaven, that you do not realize their value. The time will come, if it has not come already, when some great family affliction shall teach you that, with all your riches, you are but a frail, helpless, human creature; and in that hour of grief and heart-wringing agony, you will recognize at last, even if but for a moment, the precious boon of common sympathy; you will feel how much you owe, after all, to your fellows.

Thank Heaven! all rich men are not like you. There have been many, in every generation, who acknowledge that they owe other debts than pecuniary ones, and who strive faithfully to liquidate them. Their number is increasing, morover, with each successive generation. When the day arrives, as we believe most firmly it will, when all rich men shall recognize the obligations they owe to society, the millennium, in one sense at least, will have come. Then may the rich man truly say, "I can pay my way; I am obliged to nobody."

REGENERATION.

Reply to D. E. M.—continued from last week.

Your position, distinctly stated, is this: that "the office of the Holy Spirit is, not to regenerate, but to teach the truth, that men may have no excuse for their unholiness"—"to awaken and convince the sinner, by applying the truth to his intelligence." And, (if I apprehend your meaning,) this teaching of the Holy Spirit, no matter to what extent it may be carried, does not make sure the sinner's regeneration. The Spirit may have done his utmost—all that he can do—and the sinner yet remain unreconciled to God. "He [the sinner] often resists the Holy Spirit, and dies unregenerate, after God has most faithfully done all that belongs to him to do in the work of regeneration." "God's work is performed, and all performed, when he sends the Holy Spirit to hold and urge the truth to the sinner's mind." "A clear perception of truth, though a necessary antecedent of regeneration, is no part of it. Something yet remains to be done, and that something is a change of the will from an attitude of opposition to truth into an attitude of acquiescence with the truth." This change of the will is "entirely the work of the subject." You exclude God from all participation in it; for (you say) "God, in the exercise of his function as moral governor of mankind, could not regenerate the sinner, or turn his will, without destroying the glorious attribute of free will, with which he has created him."

But this is not the whole of your holding. You maintain, that all this teaching of the Holy Spirit—this holding and urging of the truth to the sinner's mind, that he may have a clear perception of it—is granted to all men universally. "Upon every unregenerate sinner on the earth, who has the light of the gospel, God has performed his share in the work of regeneration, and now calls upon the sinner to do his share also." Thus, if I understand you, between those who are actually converted to God, and those who live and die in their sins, there is no difference, as it respects the "necessary antecedent of regeneration;" the one class is favored with as clear a perception of divine truth as the other.

My position is different from this. I hold that, by the reading of the Scriptures, or by hearing the truth as it is presented in a powerful sermon, a man may be enlightened to such an extent as to know that the wrath of God lies against him. Thus Felix was enlightened, and made to tremble, when Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come. Acts 24 : 25. This kind of illumination is very general, where the light of the gospel shines; and, so far as the argument between us is concerned, I am willing to admit that it is universal. I will admit, that the clear perception of divine truth which it supposes—and, in some cases, it is quite clear—though a necessary antecedent of regeneration, is no part of it. But I cannot admit, that this is all that the Holy Spirit does, by way of enlightening the minds of those who become truly converted. Even admitting that the office of the Spirit is only to instruct, or convince of sin, I must still contend, that he carries his instruction to a point which you seem not to recognize. I contend that he carries it to the point of regeneration, the very light which he communicates being "the light of LIFE." His instruction is so thoroughly, and all-pervadingly, communicated to the soul, that the spiritual death which was upon it is destroyed.

The passage which I would cite, as bearing upon this point, you yourself have quoted, without being aware of its full import. "When he (the Spirit of truth) is come, he will convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." John 16 : 8. You employ the passage, as if it were a promise of divine instruction to the world at large, so as to secure to "every unregenerate sinner on the earth, who has the light of the gospel," all the conviction in regard to sin, righteousness and judgment, which it is necessary for him to have that he may be saved; relying (as I suppose) upon the term "world," and interpreting the passage upon the same principles as Universalists do those texts which set forth Christ as the Saviour of the world. But I feel quite confident that you are in error here. For, though all the world has, and ought to feel, a deep interest in Christ and his salvation, yet you yourself will admit, that multitudes live, notwithstanding, in a state of condemnation. Just so all the world has an interest in the teachings of the Spirit of truth, nevertheless the great majority walk in darkness, and have no such conviction as that which is promised in this text.

The nature of the conviction promised in this remarkable passage is described in the following verse: "Of sin, because they believe not on me." Showing that the office of the Holy Spirit is to work such conviction as will make the sinner feel his need of Christ; such as will make him see, not only that he is a sinner, but that he must forever remain under sin's power, and perish eternally, unless he believes on Christ; such as will make him see, not only his sins, but his sinfulness—not only his actual transgressions, but the deep, damning corruption of his heart—not only his defects of character, but his lost state. Such conviction as this is not felt by "every unregenerate sinner on earth, who has the light of the gospel." It is felt only by those who certainly come to Christ; for those who feel it, will no more refuse to rest on Christ for salvation, than a person tormented with burning thirst will refuse a draught of cold water when it is offered to him. Under such conviction the sinner says, 'Give me Christ, or else I die.'

This conviction not only gives the sinner a clear perception of divine truth, but of the truth as it relates to him personally. He sees it, so as to make a self-application of it. Those who remain unregenerate may have very clear perceptions of the truth, but it is of the truth as it relates to the conduct of others, rather than as it relates to themselves. They say that a man should not steal, yet steal themselves. They declaim against adultery in others, yet are guilty themselves. To deliberately plot how he may defile his neighbor's wife, appears a horrible wickedness in any body else; yet in himself, the adulterer imagines it to be quite excusable. He finds a great many extenuating circumstances in the condition in which he is placed. His constitution is ardent, his propensities are strong, his temptation was great; and so, notwithstanding he has a clear perception of the truth, as it relates to his neighbor, he fails to see it in its application to himself. Nay, he actually imagines that the wrath of God does not lie against him so directly as it does against his neighbor. So far as truth relates to himself, he is blind. But when the Holy Spirit becomes his instructor, in such a sense as is promised in the passage under consideration, immediately he sees the truth in its application to himself. He sees, and feels, that he has as little excuse for his wickedness as his neighbor, whom he was so ready to condemn. He sees that adultery, or any other form of wickedness, is just as vile when committed by himself, as by any body else. Nay, he considers himself, if possible, a greater sinner than others, and, from his inmost soul, justifies the law which condemns him. "Behold, I am vile," is his language. "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight. Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me. God be merciful to me a sinner." Such language is not heard from those for whom (as you say) "God has performed his share in the work of regeneration:" they are too much in the dark, too ignorant of the plague of their own hearts, to use it.

As corroborative of my views, I appeal to universal Christian experience. When a person becomes concerned about his future welfare, he begins to review his life. He condemns himself, at once, for all his flagrant, outbreaking sins—for swearing, lying, stealing, adultery, Sabbath-breaking, and such like; but unbelief, or a rejection of Jesus Christ as the only name under heaven whereby he must be saved, is about the last thing that gives him any concern; and this, for the simple reason, that he is slow to find out that superlatively desperate depravity of his heart, which places him in need of a Saviour. Slow, do I say? He does not find it out at all, till the Spirit of God teaches him, as the unregenerate are never taught.

Where a sinner is thus taught, he is "taught of God," as it was declared in prophecy that all Zion's children should be. Isa. 54 : 13. Compare Jer. 31 : 34. And having thus "heard and learned of the Father," his coming to Christ is certain; for this is the way in which the Father "draws him." John 6 : 44, 45. Indeed, this one text is a sufficient refutation of your doctrine, for it declares, that "EVERY man who has heard and learned of the Father, comes to Christ."

It is very certain, however, that the unregenerate are not thus taught. Their understanding is darkened; they are alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them; they walk in darkness, and perish for lack of knowledge—expressions which are more literally true than is generally imagined. They know not the Father, because the Son has not revealed him to them. Matt. 11 : 27. They confess not that Jesus is the Christ, because the Father has not made it clear to them. Matt. 16 : 17. They love not the brethren, because they are not taught of God. 1 Thess. 4 : 9. And should any of them, without this necessary, inward, spiritual teaching, make a profession of religion, they are sure to apostatize. (See 1 John 2 : 19, 20, 27. Compare Ps. 119 : 102.) Perseverance in the Christian life, or a complete renunciation of "the old man," is the only thing that dissipates all doubt whether professors have heard Christ, and been taught by him. Eph. 4 : 21, &c.

Having thus fulfilled my promise, and shown that the conviction, illumination, or awakening, granted to those who continue unregenerate, is not equal to that enjoyed by the saved, I can the better afford to grant you the benefit of your position, that the office of the Spirit is simply to instruct. For if now you choose to maintain, that instruction, mere instruction, is the mode in which the Holy Spirit accomplishes the New Birth, be it so. I will not aver that there is any physical operation. It may be that light in the mind, provided it be sufficiently clear, causes all the enmity of the heart to vanish. Such may be the constitution of the soul, that when the truth is distinctly seen, in all its bearings, not only as it relates to others, but as it relates to one's self, the sinner can no longer refuse to love God. But this is a question upon which we need not enter; let metaphysicians settle it. The question between you and me is simply this: 'Is there a point in the process of regeneration, where the Holy Spirit drops the work, and leaves the sinner to complete it himself? You affirm, and I deny. Grant it, that the office of the Spirit is simply to instruct, yet this instruction is not suspended, till the enmity of the heart gives way before it. It is a light which shines more and more unto the perfect day.

There is a sense, I admit, in which the Holy Spirit strives with all men; and a sense in which the unregenerate resist his work. Whenever the Scriptures, which were given by his inspiration, are urged upon the attention of sinners, or whenever a sermon embodying more or less of Scripture truth is preached, the Spirit may be said to strive with them; and their refusal to obey the doctrines and precepts thus urged upon them, is their resistance of his work. But, in all such cases, the Spirit works upon them remotely and indirectly; whereas, in cases of regeneration, he acts more immediately and directly upon them, rousing up their minds to action, so that they take hold of the truth earnestly, understand it, and apply it to themselves. Gen. 6 : 3, which you have quoted, presents a case where the Spirit strove with sinners, not by a direct action on their hearts, but indirectly through the preaching of Noah. (See 1 Pet. 3 : 19, 20.) Neh. 9 : 20 presents a similar case; the Spirit in the prophets, (see ver. 30,) furnishing them with messages from God to the people, did in this manner instruct, testify against, and strive with, the Jews. And when the Jews mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, (see 2 Chron. 36 : 16,) they resisted the Holy Ghost, as their children did, where they rejected the preaching of Christ and his Apostles. Acts 7 : 51. In short, there is not a passage within the lids of the Bible, showing that the Holy Spirit ever operates directly upon the hearts of those who continue impenitent.

I must invoke the patience of yourself and our readers, while I extend my strictures still farther. The importance of the subject is my apology; but I hope to finish them next week.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday Desecration—College Extension—The Pope and the Emperor of France.

GLASGOW, May 27, 1853.

Last week the Estimates for Civil Service were voted by the House of Commons, and, among others, those for the maintenance of the Kew Botanic Gardens and Grounds. On the vote being proposed, Lord de Stuart called the attention of Sir W. Molesworth, First Commissioner of Works, under whose care and management are the Royal Parks, Pleasure Grounds, &c., to the fact that they were extensively visited during the week, and said it would be of great advantage if they were open on Sundays, when alone the working classes could visit them. Sir W. replied, that he had given orders for this, and that the Gardens had been open the previous Sunday. Lord de Stuart said he was happy to hear it, and hoped that not the Botanic Garden alone, but that part denominated the Pleasure Grounds also, would henceforth be opened on Sundays all the year round. The vote was agreed to, without animadversion. The facts are at the present moment significant of what help the Sunday opening of the Crystal Palace is likely to receive from the Government when that question comes to be considered by the Legislature. The only difference between the two cases is, that at the Crystal Palace the visitors on Sunday would be required to pay for their admittance directly, while for the maintenance of the Kew Gardens and Grounds the nation pays indirectly. The difficulty is not such as to seem insurmountable to people correctly designated as "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," were it even the law of the Lord, rather than the tradition of men by which that law is made void, that stood in the way. The influence of the newspaper press is great; and a very small proportion withhold approbation of the contemplated alteration of the law. Little credit is given to the motives of those who strive to stem the progress of Sunday descretion. Without exception, I believe, the metropolitan daily papers, and a decided majority of those published less frequently, have expressed their approval. Some of them, indeed, both in leaders and through correspondents, keep the subject and their views of it continually before their readers. The London Record, organ of what is termed the Evangelical Episcopalian party, is one of the most decided of the opposite class. It is strenuous in its efforts for Sunday observance; and this week, it refers to it as one of the sad signs of the times, that a petition has been presented in the House of Commons, from certain members of a Baptist chapel at Hayton "for repeal," as the Record states it, "of all enactments for the religious observance of the Sabbath." More and more is the difficulty being felt by the church to maintain her ground in this matter; and in the Assembly of the Free Church, this week, their Committee point to the threatened dangers of their self-adopted day from the Exhibition at London and the proposed steamboats on the Clyde. Some of the members spoke of the necessity of striving to secure for working men a half holiday, that they might not be tempted to neglect the church. In this connection they even quote the law of God, while they propose to spend half the Sabbath in play, in order that they may be the more induced to engage on Sunday in prayer. Meanwhile, however, as the old laws remain in the Statute Book, from time to time they are used to restrain the growing tendency to such desecration. And the proprietors of the Chinese Junk, now being exhibited at Liverpool, were prevented from doing so last Sunday, as they had intended—the authorities having intimated that the infringement of their prohibition would incur a penalty of £100.

Among subjects of interest to the Free Church, discussed this week, at their Assembly in Edinburgh, has been the question of College Extension. Since the Disruption, it has been the aim of this denomination to occupy the place of the Established Church, from which they then seceded. It was therefore designed to have Colleges corresponding in number, and, if I mistake not, also in the same cities, with those of the Establishment. Hitherto, however, the principal College has been that of Edinburgh; there being one of much smaller pretension maintained also at Aberdeen. The amount of funds at their disposal has not encouraged them to increase the number of these Institutions, and the chief care of the leaders seems to have been, fully to maintain the efficiency of that in Edinburgh; while the recent death of one of their Professors at Aberdeen, has led to a consideration of the question whether it even should not be discontinued. For various reasons, the discussion of the question was anticipated with considerable interest, and the opening speech of Dr. Cunningham, for the suppression of the Aberdeen College, occupied two hours and three quarters. Dr. Candlish was the chief speaker on the opposite side; and a majority of 222 against 147 have decided that they maintain both establishments, and appoint another Professor at Aberdeen in room of the deceased.

Notwithstanding the repeated refusals of the Cardinals at Rome to allow their Pope to crown the French Emperor, it does not appear that the latter altogether despaired of ultimate success. This it is which probably accounts for the numerous petty acts of persecution of Protestants, and the favor shown to the Romish Church, in France. It is at least in this light we are disposed to read the fact that one day this week we are informed that "the Minister of Public Instruction has ordered a crucifix to be placed in all the class-rooms in the Governmental Colleges and Lyceums," and the next day that "the Emperor has sent a secret messenger to the Pope, hope being still entertained that he may be prevailed upon to come." It is melancholy even to suppose the probability of one ruling over a great nation authorizing the shutting up of Protestant places of worship—which, in numerous instances, has been done of late—for the purpose of currying favor with an apostate, for whom personally he has no respect, only that he may give eclat to a pageant, or even under the expectation that it will in any degree give stability to his throne. But it seems difficult, in regard to the present Emperor of France, to come to any other conclusion. And yet, if the latest telegraphic announcement be correct, such reward he will not attain, for it is affirmed to be again and definitively settled, that the Pope must not leave Rome. At Rome, he and his cardinals continue their old work. Macaulay's History of England has, by a decree dated April 24th, been honored with a place in their Index of forbidden books. Even the Scripture Lessons prepared for our Government Irish Schools, published 18 years ago, and from which, at the request of Irish Papal dignitaries, certain portions of the Word of God were excluded, have also, even at this late date, been placed in the same black list. Yet in the face of such facts our Government show a degree of favor to Popery which they do not to a better cause. In their Estimates last week, they had put £1,235 13s. 1d. for repairs of the Irish Popal College of Maynooth—independently of the large sum accorded for the College itself—and struggled hard to get it retained against Mr. Spooner's motion for its exclusion. The Government was defeated; but, in the discussion, Lord John Russell indicated very clearly, that he is quite prepared to endow the whole Irish Papal priesthood.

The duel between Sir R. Peel and Mr. Osborne, announced with so much circumstantiality to have taken place, was an entire fabrication. We are sorry, therefore, to have at all contributed to its circulation.

OUR HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society have resolved on a mission to Palestine, the one in comtemplation to Canada being for the present postponed. Two brethren and their wives have been appointed as missionaries, with instructions to sail for that country as soon as practicable. The undersigned is now laboring as an agent of the Board, collecting funds and promoting the general objects of the Society, including the proposed Palestine Mission. Renewed attention is solicited to those interests, so much blessed of God, which we as a people have commenced in the West and in China. The churches are requested to have their usual contributions in the course of collection for the approaching Anniversary at Adams. Special attention is also requested to the Palestine Mission, for which we need $3,000 collected by the first of September. Of this amount, about $1,000 have been pledged, and a portion of it paid.

Next week, I leave this place for Alfred and the Anniversary of the Western Association. After a few weeks spent among those churches, I propose to visit Brookfield and Adams, and perhaps Verona and Petersburg. The churches in Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, and Wisconsin, are respectfully requested to lend us a helping hand. Those to whom I have presented the claims of our Missions, are very much united, and give freely and liberally of their substance to help forward the good work.

WM. M. JONES.

SCOTT, N. Y., June 10, 1853.

THE CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The 18th Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association was held with the Church in Scott, Cortland Co., N. Y., on the fifth and sixth days of last week, June 9th and 10th. The number of delegates in attendance was not as large as usual, but the meeting was one of more than common interest, and we cannot doubt that its influence upon the brethren present, and through them upon the churches represented, will prove most salutary. The Eastern Association was represented by a delegate, but the delegate appointed by the Western Association did not appear. Bro. Wm. M. Jones, the agent of the Missionary Society, was present, and took an active part in the deliberations of the meeting.

The Introductory Discourse was preached by Eld. James Summerbell, of Adams, from Psalms 122 : 6—"Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee." We did not hear the whole of the discourse, and therefore will not attempt to give a synopsis of it. Suffice it to say, that it was considered and spoken of as well suited to the occasion.

The Association was organized by electing the following officers: EPHRAIM MAXSON, Moderator; JASON B. WELLS, Rec. Sec.; D. P. CURTIS, Assistant Rec. Sec.

The Letters from the Churches were then read, and indicated a good degree of interest in the Association, and in the cause of Christ generally. The 2d Church in Brookfield reported a pleasant revival within the year, which resulted in the addition of some thirty members. The 1st Church in Verona had also enjoyed a revival, and received seventeen additional members. A small revival in the 1st Brookfield Church was also reported. There are several churches within the bounds of the Association from which no letters were received this year, and from two or three of which no reports had been received for several years. Their case was taken into consideration, and much interest in their welfare was expressed. Brethren James Summerbell and Joshua Clarke were appointed to visit them, inquire into their condition, and report to the Association at its next session. These churches are Pinckney, Diana, Richland, Newport, Preston, and Otselic.

The reading of letters from the churches was followed by reports from the officers of last year.

The Treasurer's Report was read, but we have not before us a copy of it, and can not state the amount of money which passed through his hands.

Reports were made by the delegates to the Eastern and Western Associations. In connection with these reports, and a proposition to appoint delegates for the ensuing year, a discussion arose as to the policy of sending such delegates. The result was, we believe, a general conviction, that if the delegates make full reports of the doings of the Associations they attend, the Association sending them will be amply compensated for the money expended, while the Associations they visit will be effectually aided, and feelings of mutual interest and attachment will be increased. James C. Rogers was appointed delegate to the Western Association, and Wm. B. Maxson to the Eastern Association, James Summerbell being alternate to the Eastern.

The Executive Board of the Association was last year located differently from former years, and so located that meetings were scarcely possible. The consequence was, that nothing had been done by it. Much interest was expressed by the delegates in the condition of the feeble churches, and a Board was appointed for the ensuing year, of persons so located as to meet frequently, and carry out the evident wishes of the churches. The Board consists of Ephraim Maxson, Moderator of the Association; Jason B. Wells and D. P. Curtis, Recording Secretaries; James C. Rogers, Corresponding Secretary; John Maxson of DeRuyter, Treasurer; together with Joshua Clarke, James Summerbell, and John Maxson of Brookfield.

Sixth-day, morning and afternoon, was occupied in receiving and considering the Reports of the several Standing Committees. We give below the Reports of the Committees on the State of Religion, and on Education, and the Resolutions. The Report on Education gave occasion for a full explanation of the present condition of DeRuyter Institute, and drew forth interesting remarks on the subject of Sabbath-Schools. The resolutions on Missions, War, Slavery, Intemperance, Tobacco, &c., furnished themes for interesting remark by a large number of members of the Association. The discussion of them occupied most of the afternoon.

After an uncommonly interesting and pleasant session of two days, the Association adjourned near evening of Sixth-day, to meet again with the 2d Church in Brookfield, on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, 1854. James R. Irish was appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse on that occasion; Christopher Chester alternate.

The religious exercises connected with the Association were more numerous than is common on such occasions. A prayer meeting was held at the meeting-house each morning at sunrise. On the evening following Fifth-day, there was preaching by Christopher Chester; evening after Sixth-day, by Joshua Clarke. On Sabbath, Wm. B. Maxson preached in the morning, Joel Greene in the afternoon, and Geo. B. Utter in the evening. On First-day, Wm. M. Jones preached a missionary discourse in the morning, which was followed by a collection for the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society. In the afternoon, James Summerbell preached the closing discourse.

Resolutions.

1. Resolved, That we commend the precious interests of our China and Western Missions to the earnest prayers and more abundant free-will offerings of the people, and pledge ourselves to do all in our power to enlist our brethren more heartily in the missionary cause.

2. Whereas, we learn that the Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society are now taking active measures to establish a Mission in Palestine, therefore Resolved, That we regard said enterprise with feelings of joy and devout gratitude to God, and commend its claims to the special attention, the fervent prayers, the liberal and prompt support of the churches of this Association.

3. Resolved, That we are fully convinced that aggressive war is incompatible with the principles of the Gospel (the latter being a perfect system of peace and good will to men,) and that it becomes all Christians to discountenance war between nations and individuals, and to pray and to labor for the hastening of that blessed time when they shall learn war no more.

4. Resolved, That we reiterate our abhorrence of American Slavery and the Fugitive Slave Bill, and pledge ourselves to pray, to labor, and to persevere in our labors, for their complete overthrow.

5. Resolved, That the continued and increasing ravages of intemperance, with the numberless evils which follow and attend wherever it prevails—viz: destruction of social happiness, waste of time and property, the commission of crime, and the obstacles thrown in the way of the philanthropist and the Christian, in his efforts to reform and evangelize mankind—call loudly and imperatively on us as a people for renewed diligence, and firm reliance on divine interposition, for the suppression of this monster vice.

6. Resolved, That we recommend all the members of our churches to commit themselves—heart, soul, and action—in favor of a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage.

7. Resolved, That the use of Tobacco in various ways by people of all ages and classes and of both sexes in this country, is an alarming and rapidly increasing evil, which calls on the patriot, the philanthropist, and the Christian, to unite in an effort to apply a corrective, and arrest a habit which is destructive of health, onerous as to its expensiveness, disgusting as to its filthiness, and revolting as to its tendency to demoralization and intemperance.

8. In view of a growing indifference in community to Sunday sanctification, and quite a general admission on the part of professed Christians that the weight of Sabbath argument is in favor of the seventh day of the week, Resolved, that we renew our efforts, in public and private, in our closets, families, and sanctuaries, and among our neighbors, for the restoration of the long-neglected and rejected Sabbath of the Bible.

Report of the Committee on the State of Religion.

Your Committee on the State of Religion, submit to the Association the following Report:

In perusing the letters from the churches which have communicated with the Association, we are gratified in discovering that our churches are, without any exception, enjoying union and harmony, and are at peace among themselves, and appear to be generally contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. And the genial expression from the churches is cheering, and calculated to encourage and strengthen each other's hearts and hands in prosecuting the Christian warfare.

Some of our sister churches have enjoyed precious seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and have received pleasant accessions to their numbers. We find, also, that God has visited us by death, and some of those with whom we have in time past gone to the house of God, have gone to the spirit world, to receive their reward. There is, however, a small increase in the number of members reported. There appears also to be an encouraging attention to the religious instruction of the youth in our Sabbath-Schools. On the whole, we are in the persuasion that the religious interests of the Association are rising generally. But we have great cause for regret and humiliation, that our movements are so tardy, and that we are still so far behind what we should be, and what our privileges and our God demand of us.

While, in view of God's mercy and kindness and forbearance toward us, we look up with humble gratitude and devout thankfulness, we are led to ask, in view of our backwardness and tardy movements, Is there not a cause? It becomes us to review carefully the past, and ascertain how far we have fulfilled or neglected the duties of our holy profession. Among the items of an investigation so important as the one suggested, we would respectfully call the attention, not only of the churches respectively, but of the members individually, to some of the things which to us seem intimately to belong to our peace. Do our brethren and heads of families live in the habitual practice of family prayer? Are we habitually pleading with God in secret prayer? Attention to these duties, we believe, is essential to our religious prosperity. Do our brethren and sisters, as far as practicable, attend the prayer and conference meetings?—and, if there, are they of one accord in participating in the devotional exercises of these meetings? Are they habitual attendants upon public worship on the Sabbath, and do they carefully enjoin this duty upon their children? Do our brethren and sisters indulge themselves in reading the trifling publications which are constantly flowing from the press and inundating our land, and neglect the sacred word of God? In reference to these important duties, we would most affectionately entreat our brethren of the Association, without exception, to engage in them as the Heaven-appointed means of our religious and spiritual elevation, and as giving the surest promise of our future religious prosperity.

Report on Education.

The Committee on Education take pleasure in reporting the continued prosperity of the Literary Institutions connected with our denomination. DeRuyter Institute has now a complement of teachers, whose competency for their stations can not be questioned. The Trustees, in their anxiety to secure the permanence and highest usefulness of the institution, have recently assumed a larger amount of responsibility than they have heretofore borne. In doing so, they have entitled themselves to the sympathy and coöperation of their brethren. If in return they shall enjoy that measure of patronage which the institution deserves, and the welfare of the rising generation demands, they will doubtless feel themselves amply repaid for the risk they have ran. Alfred Academy, also, has within the past year completed a large Chapel, which will supply the necessary room for lectures, recitations and exhibitions, greatly increasing the facilities of that school. Through the agency of these and kindred institutions, it is believed that the young people connected with our churches and societies are increasing in that knowledge which is power.

But, convinced as they are that knowledge, without moral principle, is of comparatively little use to the would, the Committee would not, from the increase of knowledge alone, augur the prosperity of our cause. They think, however, that there is evidence of a growing interest in the moral and religious education of the young among us, especially through the agency of Sabbath-Schools and Bible Classes. In this they see substantial ground of encouragement and hope. And while the Committee would urge upon the Association and the churches the duty and policy of liberally patronizing our strictly literary institutions, they also urge, as of equal or superior importance, the sustaining of that institution which is one of the most effectual instruments of moral and religious culture—the Sabbath School.

Corresponding Letter.

To our Sister Associations :—

Under the kind auspices of a patient God, we have been permitted to enjoy another annual meeting, and take this method of communicating to you an expression of our sympathy with you in all those religious enterprises and reforms in which you are engaged, and which will ever find a hearty response in the bosom of our Association. Our deliberations have been enlightened, and our resolutions have been strengthened, by the presence and the counsel of the delegate, Bro. Geo. B. Utter, and other brethren, from the Eastern Association; and we gladly reciprocate by appointing Bro. James C. Rogers our delegate to the Western Association, and Bro. Wm. B. Maxson our delegate to the Eastern Association, J. Summerbell alternate.

We think the prospect of our Association for the future looks more encouraging than formerly. Our Churches are well united, and we think they are moving forward in the great work to which they are called. Some of them report gracious visitations of the Spirit of the Highest, accompanied by the converting power of God, so that we begin to hope that the night has passed, and the golden tints of the morning are spreading light and life among us. Brethren, pray for us, that our faith fail not. A few only have fallen from our ranks by the hand of death; and whilst we rejoice in this preserving mercy of our God, we will not forbear expressing our condolence with the Eastern Association in the death of our beloved brother James H. Cochran. May an increase of union and love pervade our beloved Zion, so that, having but one interest in the main, we shall urge forward to new and more glorious conquests the cause committed to our trust.

Laying a Corner-Stone.—The Baptist Church recently worshiping in Hope Chapel, New York, under the pastoral care of Rev. A. D. Gillett, have commenced building a new place of worship on 23d-st., between 5th and 6th-avs., one of the best locations in the city. The corner-stone was laid on the afternoon of the 6th inst., when Rev. Messrs. Gillett, Jackson, Taggart, Magoon, and Wescott took part in the services. The Church will be a handsome specimen of the Perpendicular Gothic, 98 feet in length, and 65 in width, and will cost $40,000.

The Hartford Anti-Bible Convention.—A dispatch from Hartford, Ct., dated Second-day, June 6, says that this Convention broke up in a row, on the previous evening, the Chairman announcing that they should meet again before a great while, in some other part of New England. None of the resolutions introduced were passed, and the whole affair seems to have been a failure.

Desperate Attacks on Father Gavazzi at Quebec and Montreal.—Father Gavazzi delivered his Second Lecture in Quebec on Tuesday night, June 7, at the Free Church. In the course of his remarks, happening to say that the inquisition was extended to Ireland by the agency of Ribbonism, a man in the body of the Church exclaimed, "That's a lie." This appeared to be a signal for a large party of rowdies who were gathered outside the Church. A shower of stones first came rattling through the windows, and then an infuriated crowd, armed with sticks and stones, rushed into the Church and attacked Gavazzi in the pulpit, trying to pull him out. The lecturer defended himself, knocking down several of his assailants. He was at length thrown from the pulpit by one of the assailants. A further struggle ensued on the floor underneath, when the lecturer was finally rescued by his friends. Gavazzi's Secretary was also very badly beaten. Several ladies and gentlemen of the audience were likewise injured. A detachment of soldiers ended the matter. Father G. left the city the same night.

Another riot occurred at Montreal on the evening of Thursday, June 9. As advertised, Signor Gavazzi met a numerous audience in Zion Church, at 6½ o'clock P. M. Many of the most respectable citizens, with their families, were present. At about 7¾ o'clock a band of ruffians attacked and overpowered the police, and proceeded to force their way into the Church, from which a body of fifteen or twenty repulsed them, several shots from guns and pistols being fired from both sides. The assaulting party were effectually routed—two or three of their number were left dead or severely wounded on the ground, but were afterward removed in cars by their friends. A company of military then made its appearance, and all seemed perfectly quiet, and remained so until about 8¼ o'clock, at about which time the Lecture was concluded, and the audience inside the church had begun to leave for home. A good deal of hooting and noise prevailed at this time, and some disturbance with the lowest line of troops occurred, and two or three shots were fired; in other respects, all seemed peaceable, when the troops fired two distinct, running volleys, among the apparently peaceable citizens. According to the latest dispatch, ten or twelve were either slain outright or mortally hurt, and about fifty others were more or less injured. Several attempts at outrage upon solitary way-farers were made on Friday night, and one person was killed, although the streets were patrolled by flying artillery.

The Thirty-seventh Annual Report of the American Deaf and Dumb Asylum at Hartford states that the whole number of pupils during the past year has been two hundred, of whom 1852 were State beneficiaries, 15 were paying scholars, and 3 were supported by the Asylum. The operations of this institution are chiefly confined to beneficiaries from New England.

Austria is in a difficult position just now. If she support Russia, she must give great offense to her German allies. If she resist Russian pretensions in the East, the relations between the two powers must naturally be weakened. It is doubtful what her precise course of action may be in relation to Turkish affairs.

In China, the surrender of Nanking into the hands of the Chinese insurgents seems to be put beyond doubt. The rebellion has gained a very important place in taking Nanking; and we see no cause that is likely to arrest its further advance.

Execution of Arthur Spring.

On Thursday night, March 10th, two innocent, helpless women, were brutally murdered in their house, No. 260 Federal-st., Philadelphia. The details of the fearful scene can never be forgotten. It is needless to rehearse the gradual course of justice in tracing the author of the tragedy. The first trial and conviction; the shocking conflict in the statements of Arthur Spring and his son; the plain, convincing story of the latter, and the base effort of the former to fasten the crime upon his offspring; the excitement of the public; the upsetting of the first verdict by the criminal conduct of a false juror; the second trial and conviction; the subsequent conduct of the hardened villian; the shocking contradictions of his statements, and the recent interviews with his son—these are all too fresh to need a new narration.

Friday, June 10, was appointed by the Governor for the execution of the sentence of the Court. It has been looked forward to with pain, but with a satisfied sense of the necessity of the event, and a feeling of relief that the world was to be rid of a monster of crime whose career and character are almost without a parallel in criminal history. All have felt that, although the execution has been commendably prompt—only two months having elapsed since the last conviction—it would have been better if it had taken place ten days after it. Justice would have been better served by an immediate punishment, and the public would have been spared the pain created by the horrible ravings of the criminal monster, which have thus far only increased the popular excitement, while no softening of his feelings has been produced. Throughout the whole of Thursday, Arthur Spring, Sen., maintained the bearing of hardihood that he has almost uniformly exhibited for some time. He was kept as much as possible by himself, only the spiritual advisers appointed to wait on him, and the necessary officers of the prison, being admitted to his cell. There was no token of contritition or of an acknowledgment of his guilt, and his conversation was a shocking tissue of blasphemous allusions to the Saviour, of complaints against the law, and of contradictory assertions in reference to the tragedy for which he was to suffer, all day and night Thursday. Rev. Mr. Alexander, the moral instructor of the prison, was with him, and during most of the time he was accompanied by Rev. John Street and Rev. Mr. Kensil. They were unwearied in their efforts to turn his thoughts into a proper channel, and to induce him to make some sort of confession of the crime which every body feels was committed by him and him alone. Two gentlemen, for whom he had sent, and who had on a former occasion befriended him, also visited him; and as his wish to see them was to assist him again in procuring, if possible, Executive clemency, they were requested to assure him of the hopelessness of his case. They did so, and bade him farewell. Rev. J. Street and Rev. Mr. Kensil remained with him till near midnight. Shortly before their departure, after having gone into a lengthy detail (like that so often told) about his son going down to Mrs. Shaw's and Mrs. Lynch's at midnight, and bringing home the money, he then in positive terms declared he was in bed on the night of the murder; and that, although the son brought home the money and put it in the pocket-book, yet he declared that he believes his son had no hand in the murder of the women, and that he is entirely clear. After having got through this statement, he then commenced to joke and laugh. Although reminded of the necessity of being solemn, he said—"I have got a long journey to take in the morning, but I don't think they will get me off until after dinner, as I want to lay in a good stock of provisions." The prisoner ate a hearty breakfast, and afterward joined in prayer with the reverend gentlemen present. Several appeals were made to him to confess the truth and save the reputation of his son, but all vain. Up to the time of leaving his cell, he declared his own innocence, and intimated the guilt of his son.

At a few minutes before 11 o'clock, the Sheriff entered the cell of the culprit, for the purpose of preparing him for the gallows. His arms were pinioned, and at a few minutes past eleven, he was taken from the north corridor, by the eastern gate, into the avenue. The clergy sang a hymn as they passed along the avenue, in which the prisoner joined. When the scaffold was neared, Rev. Mr. Allen read the service for the dead of the Episcopal Church, commencing with—"I am the Resurrection and the Life," &c. The culprit mounted the scaffold with a firm step, and exhibited little or no emotion. Sheriff Allen, Marshal Keyser, and the reverened gentlemen already named, ascended with him. A dialogue then took place between Mr. Street and the prisoner, in which the latter declared himself innocent of the murder of the two women, and his belief that his son had nothing to do with it. He also declared that he never saw the man Rink, with whose murder he is charged. After this conversation, Rev. Mr. Street delivered a prayer. The white cap was adjusted over the head of the prisoner, the rope was fixed about his neck, and the gentlemen around shook hands with the criminal, who was in a moment after left standing alone in his fearful position. Those who watched him closely at this terrible moment could discover no tremor in his frame, or anything which betokened emotion or fear. The reverend gentlemen then bade the prisoner farewell, by shaking hands with him, and the Sheriff proceeded to the execution. At a given signal the cord was pulled, and in an instant Arthur Spring was dangling between heaven and earth, a lifeless corpse. He died as he lived, a bold, bad man. The execution took place precisely at 13 minutes past 11, and the body hung until 20 minutes of 12, having hung just 27 minutes. It was then taken down and examined. The vertebræ of the neck were found to be broken, and death must have been instantaneous. Thus ended the closing scene of one of the most fearful dramas that has ever been enacted in Philadelphia, or perhaps in the world.

A Highway Robbery and Murder.—Messrs. W. H. Van Tassell and John Secor, of Newcastle, Westchester County, have been traversing the North-eastern portion of our State, in company, in quest of horses, of which Mr. Van Tassell had previously been a purchaser in that quarter, for sale among his neighbors. He is a thrifty farmer, of some 40 years of age. Secor was a younger man—perhaps 25. They were traveling from Fort Covington to Malone, in Franklin Co., on Monday, 6th inst., each on horseback, with two or three led horses which they had purchased, when Mr. Van Tassell was startled by the report of a gun close at hand, and instantly saw his companion reel and fall to the ground, shot through the body. Instantly there emerged from the woods two young men whom the two had freely conversed with respecting horses to be purchased, and who knew the route they were traveling, and that they had considerable money in their possession. Of these Mr. Van Tassell, in some doubt, inquired, "Is this an accident? or what does it mean?" No answer being returned, he wheeled his horse, and fled at the top of his speed to a village a few miles distant, where he gave the alarm, which was immediately spread far and wide, and every one turned out to surround and scour the woods in which the tragedy was enacted. This was done so speedily that the young wretches who committed the deed were caught before they had made their escape, and one of them was seen to throw away something, just before he was arrested, which proved to be the watch and money ($150) of the murdered Secor. They were both secured.

The Chinese Insurrection.—We learn that the British, French, and American naval forces in the Chinese waters have undertaken to protect Shanghae, Nanking, and the mouth of the Great Canal, against the successful insurrection that for some time past has threatened to change the government of those cities, along with that of the rest of the Celestial Empire. The precise terms on which this act of intervention is undertaken are not yet made public. The opening of the entire Empire to foreign trade, the admission of foreign merchants, travelers, and missionaries, to all parts of it, and the complete toleration of the Christian religion and of its various sects, no doubt form prominent concessions in the new treaty between the representatives of France, Great Britain, and America, and the Tartar dynasty which the native rebellion has so nearly expelled. SUMMARY.

The Alleghany Valley Railroad is destined to bring Pittsburgh within eighteen hours of New York City, and the Great Coal Basin of Western Pennsylvania within six hours of Buffalo, Rochester and the Lakes. The Pennsylvania portion of the Road is 175 miles long, and is estimated to cost $5,000,000, of which $3,000,000 have been subscribed as Stock. The Road is all under contract to be finished in 1855, and 800 men are now at work on it, being all that can be obtained at present. The Alleghany Valley is one of the healthiest in the world—fevers being unknown there. Wages $1 per day.

The Committee of the Connecticut Legislature to inquire into the facts of the Norwalk Railroad Massacre, have reported. They state the cause to be, primarily, the carelessness of the Engineer in charge of the train, and the insufficiency of the signals at that dangerous locality. The report is also severe upon the management of this important line, and states that the President is especially negligent in the discharge of the duties devolving upon him

A monument of bronze is about to be erected at Weimar, in honor of the two great poets of Germany, and an appeal is circulating in that country which calls upon all Germans to contribute to the fund for the purpose, sufficient means not having as yet been provided. But the reputation of Goethe and Schiller, and the knowledge and appreciation of their works, are not confined to Germany, and it is very probable that many Americans may desire to participate in this honor to their genius.

A singular act of malice was performed in Wall-st., on Friday. A quantity of strong acid was poured into the locks of a couple of Holmes & Butler's Phenix Burglar-Proof Safes, made for the Marine Bank, and about to be placed in that building. The locks were of course spoiled.

A new mode of Ventilation was recently tried on the Naugatuck Railroad with decided success. The plan is that of Messrs. Atwood & Waterbury—the latter an officer of the Road. Its general outline is this: The passenger cars of a train are all thrown into one long saloon by means of a flexible cloth or rubber platform, and, the windows being kept closed and the train opened at the rear, a strong current of air is received just over the engine, through a pipe or bag as wide as the train, and some six to twelve inches deep, which passes in at the top of the front car, and so along through all the cars, and out at the rear. The exemption from dust was perfect, the sensation of coolness and freshness delightful, while the perfect facility and safety of passing from end to end of the train sensibly enhances the pleasure of the journey.

George Lake, a clock and watch repairer in the town of La Grange, Duchess Co., killed his two children, aged two and four years, and also fatally wounded his wife with an ax on Tuesday, 7th inst. He immediately armed himself with sword, pistol and rifle, and his captors were obliged to shoot him with shot before they could take him. The shot took effect in his breast and shoulders, but did not seriously injure him. He was captured and lodged in the Poughkeepsie jail. The cause of this inhuman butchery is unknown. It is said that he always appeared fond of his family. He had before been arrested on charge of attempting to shoot his brother-in-law, but was acquitted.

William R. McCrary, aged 18 years, left the Suffield Institute, at Suffield, Ct., on the 27th of April, and has not since been heard from. He is the son of Dr. McCrary, of Agawam, West Springfield. It is feared that the young man may be laboring under a slight mental aberration. Papers copying the above will greatly oblige the afflicted parents and friends, and any one having information respecting him, will confer a favor, and be liberally rewarded, by communicating the same to Dr. Edwin McCrary, Springfield, Mass.

A paper was lately read before the Institute of British Architects, setting forth that, contrary to the opinion of the London Board of Health, soft water, instead of hard, is injurious to animal life. The position is sustained by numerous facts, showing the low tone of the system, and the glandular affections induced by the absence of lime, in any form, in the water, to be as destructive as the excessive development of the sanguine temperament produced by too great a proportion of these substances.

In the N. Y. Court of Common Pleas, last week, the proprietor of Watts' Nervous Antidote was prosecuted for alledged malpractice. It is said the patient was effected with epilepsy; defendant undertook to prescribe for the patient, and recommended Watts' Antidote, offering to return the money if it was not successful. The medicine, it was said, had the effect of throwing the patient into fits, and her life was in great jeopardy. Verdict for plaintiff, $1,100.

The New York and New Haven Railroad Company have settled with one of the passengers by the late catastrophe at Norwalk. Mary Jane Williams, the Irish woman, on her way to Cabotville, who went down in the broken car, and lost her gold, amounting to $250, (not to $750,) had the same restored to her by the Company at New Haven, before it was found, and $500 in addition, for which she gave a receipt in full for all damages.

Enoch Reed, convicted last February by the United States Circuit Court, in Albany, of having rescued a fugitive slave from the Marshall, was awaiting the punishment prescribed by law—a fine of $1,000 and a year's imprisonment. But one day last week he died. Perhaps at that higher Tribunal to which he is summoned, it may not be deemed so gross a crime in him, to have remembered that he was neighbor to "one that fell among thieves."

Brevet Major-General Riley died at Buffalo, Thursday night, aged 66 years. He went to California in 1848, and was ordered to take command of a Regiment on the Rio Grande, but he returned home, and being unable, through ill health, to return to active service, settled in Buffalo. He has been suffering for some time from cancer, and leaves a widow and five children.

Two students of the junior class of Union College, Schenectady, Rev. Ira S. Watkins, of Chester, Va., aged 30, and Ethan Clark, of Ovid, Seneca County, aged 29, were drowned about 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, June 4, by the capsizing of a sailboat on the Mohawk River, the wind being very high, and they unskilled in navigation.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company have determined to reduce the price of passage upon the Washington Branch Road from $1 80 to $1 25; and that for "round tickets," entitling the bearer to go to and fro on the same day, but $1 50 will be charged; this arrangement to have effect from and after the first day of July next.

Abraham Griffin, of Newcastle, Westchester Co., while on a tree, last Thursday, attempting to hive a swarm of bees, fell head foremost some fifteen feet, breaking his neck, and of course killing him instantly. He was a substantial farmer, about 50 years of age, and leaves a family.

The British ship Leander arrived at New York last week, bringing the Earl of Ellesmere and the other British Commissioners to the Wold's Fair. The party were all in good health, and propose to visit Canada immediately, returning (possibly through our western country) before the day of opening.

The property now occupied by the New York Institute for the instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, on Forty-ninth and Fiftieth-sts., New York, between Fourth and Fifth-avs., comprising seventy-five lots, was sold the other day at an aggregate of $213,930, subject to a lease of two years.

Wm. Price, a youth about 20 years of age, plead guilty before the United States Court at Indianapolis, to an indictment for robbing the mail, as a carrier between Terre Haute and Bloomington, and abstracting therefrom $80. The Court sentenced him to confinement in the State Prison for 10 years, being the shortest time fixed by law.

A passenger car on the Macon and Western Road while going into Macon, Georgia, Tuesday evening, June 7, was thrown off the track and down an embankment, by running upon a cow. The car was demolished, the mail guard killed, and five passengers severely injured, among them Hon. A. Stevens.

A dispatch dated Washington, Thursday, June 9, 1853, says: The Woodward murder case was submitted to the Jury this afternoon, and in ten minutes after retiring they brought in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. Motion was made for a new trial and arrest of judgment.

The Albany police arrested a counterfeiter from New York, while attempting to pass a spurious five dollar bill on the Rhode Island Central Bank. He gave his name as George Shaw, and is about 21 years of age. About $60 in bills on this bank were found on him.

From Key West we learn that the brig Cushnoc, from Cardenas for New York, sprung a leak on the 2d of June, when the master ran her ashore off Cape Florida, and she proved a total loss. Part of her cargo was saved by Key West wreckers, and was libeled for salvage.

George Peabody, Esq., the American banker in London, is said to be worth about five millions of dollars. He was born in Danvers, Mass., in 1795, and in 1827 went to Europe to reside. In 1834 he commenced his present business in London.

A Railroad Festival was had at Savannah on Thursday, which was attended by a large number of guests from Columbus and other points. Senator Berrien gave a public dinner and ball on the occasion.

On Sunday last, says The Ellenville Journal, the wife of Mr. John Steele, of that village, presented her husband with three daughters at a birth. The mother and daughters are doing well.

Letters have been received at Boston from Australia as late as the 13th March. Gold continued abundant, and things looked well. Flour was selling at $12 per bbl. All kinds of produce realized fair prices.

On and after the 15th inst. the steamer Francis Skiddy is to run both as a day and night boat between New York and Albany, leaving Albany every night and New York every morning, Sundays excepted.

Wm. Dearing, a prominent citizen of Georgia, the proprietor of the first cotton factory establishment, in the State, died at Savannah on Friday, June 3.

The brig Pembroke, which arrived at Boston June 8, from Mobile, had on board 42 Choctaw Indians, on their way to New York, to attend the World's Fair.

MARRIED,

At Scott, N. Y., June 10th, by Eld. James Summerbell, Mr. Alexander C. Crumb, of Brookfield, to Miss Charlotte Larkin, of Scott.

In Darien, N. Y., on the 2d day of June, 1853, by Eld. Rowse Babcock, Mr. Anson P. Saunders to Miss Mary Jane Williams, both of the above place.

DIED,

In Hartsville, N. Y., May 22d, Mrs. Angeline Burdick, wife of Leroy Burdick, in the 32d year of her age. Sister Burdick gave her heart to God at the early age of nine years, and united with the Second Seventh-day Baptist Church of Alfred, with which she continued (with the exception of a few years that she was a member of the Church in Persia) a worthy member to the day of her departure. By her death a husband has been bereft of a kind companion, four children, one of whom is an infant, of an affectionate and tender mother, a large connection a relative, the cause of benevolence a friend, the church a faithful member, and the world a praying Christian. Her last communication with earthly friends was to the effect that she was not afraid to die, but was willing and ready to wing her glad spirit home to rest. J. K.

Clothing Establishment.
THE subscribers, under the firm of Titsworths & Dunn, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

Church Bells.
CHURCH, FACTORY, AND STEAMBOAT BELLS constantly on hand, and Peals or Chimes of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron Yokes, with moveable arms, are attached to these Bells so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and Springs also which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. Hangings complete, (including Yoke, Frame, and Wheel,) furnished if desired. The horns by which the Bell is suspended, admit of the Yoke being changed to a new position, and thus bringing the blow of the clapper in a new place; which is desirable after some years' usage, as it diminishes the probability of the Bell's breaking, occasioned by repeated blows of the clapper in one place.
An experience of thirty years in the business has given the subscribers an opportunity of ascertaining the best form for Bells, the various combinations of metals, and the degree of heat requisite for securing the greatest solidity, strength, and most melodious tones, and has enabled them to secure for their Bells the highest awards at the N. Y. State Agricultural Society and American Institute, at their Annual Fairs, for several years past. The Trinity Chimes of New York were completed at this Foundry, as were also cast Chimes for New Orleans, La., Oswego and Rochester, N. Y., and Kingston, C. W., and also the Fire Alarm Bells of New York, the largest ever cast in this country.

My Native Home.

BY JOSEPH MERREFIELD.

I have trod the soil of England—
And the merry fields of France,
And on Scotland's heath-clad mountains
Have cast delighted glance!

I have wandered 'mid the beauties
Of wild, romantic Wales;
'Mid thy crags and purple hill tops,
And thy soft and sunny vales.

And thou, down-trodden Erin—
Fair emerald of the sea—
From Belfast to Killarney,
My steps are traced on thee.

And too in happy Belgium—
Where fields of golden grain
Now gild the field of Waterloo,
And hide its gory stain.

I have mingled with each nation,
I have worshipped at each shrine
From Holyrood to Westminister,
From Paris to the Rhine.

But not in Britain's lordly isle,
Or Erin's emerald mountains,
On happy Belgium's peaceful plains,
In France, at Versailles fountains—

Have I forget that other land—
Fair freedom's home on earth!
That opes its arms to the oppressed.
The land that gave me birth!

And wheresoe'er my lot be cast,
Where'er my steps may roam,
My heart will ever turn to thee,
AMERICA!—my home!

Philadelphians—as Viewd by a Western Man.

A western man, now on an eastern tour, writes to the Davenport (Iowa) Gazette an account of mercantile and fashionable life in Philadelphia, which will answer well for all other cities. Under date of March 27, he says:—

Here am I in the City of "Brotherly Love;" and, notwithstanding they frequently get up a riot here, and more frequently cut one another's throats, the mass of the citizens appear to be quite as orderly and as intelligent as the citizens of Davenport. But it is evident that the wealthy portion of the population, as well as a majority of the middle-class, consider their principle mission on earth to be to dress fine and promenade before each other, in order to exhibit their good looks and the merchandise they carry on their backs, in the shape of silks, satins, velvets, broadclothe, and various articles of silver, gold, and stone-ware.

I have taken considerable trouble to collect statistical information respecting the actions of, and the manner in which these people live; their ability to keep their families, and the preparations they are making for old age, &c. I have ascertained that the children of the wealthy are most generally brought up in extravagance and idleness, that they receive but little instruction that tends to their future usefulness, and the example of the parents of a majority of the families is rather a discouragement than an advantage to their offspring. These children are taught to consider that music, dancing, and dressing according to the fashion of the day, are the most essential portion of their educations; the consequence is, that the third generation ran through with their grandfathers' estate—that is, provided their fathers did not spend it all before them—and I now find the fourth and fifth generations of the once wealthy families boating oysters from the bay and stitching broadcloth for their now more wealthy neighbors, who are descended from good, honest, hard-fisted blacksmiths and bricklayers.

It may not be uninteresting to you to know how that numerous class, the shopkeepers—big and little—work their way through the world. Dress and extravagance is the support of many of this class—they eat, they drink, they dress and die as they began, with a stock of goods purchased on time and renewed from year to year throughout their lives. But, you may say, are there not a few of this numerous class, who surround with their neat fancy shops one hundered squares of this great city, who better their condition by their business? Yes, there are a few, and but a few. I have, after much inquiry, ascertained that in the wholesale department seventeen out of each hundred fail without paying their debts; that twenty-one out of one hundred fail, but pay their debts; that thirty-eight out of a hundred are able to keep their families and square with the world, but nothing more; nineteen out of one hundred, retire and are classed with the upper ten; three out of a hundred are classed with the one hundred thousand and upward; two out of one hundred class with the half million and upward. In the retail department, twenty-two in a hundred fail; eighteen in a hundred, after paying rent, cannot with every exertion and strict economy, procure a sufficiency of proper food, but sussist by depriving themselves of certain articles, such as butter, fruits, groceries, &c.; nineteen in a hundred are enabled to keep their families respectable, and pay their debts; fourteen in a hundred dress extravagantly, visit the watering places, and live up to their income; seventeen in a hundred leave a stock of goods paid for and a home for their children; nine in a hundred retire with the upper ten; one in a hundred rates with the half million and upward.

"Forty-Six Years Ago."

Under this head, the Brooklyn Circular has the following graphic picture of the growth of New York and its chief suburb:—

As we took our seat in one of the boats of the South ferry a few evenings since, an elderly gentleman in a social mood seated himself beside us, and commenced remarking upon the contrast that the present conveniences for crossing the river presented with those of forty or fifty years ago. "Forty-six years ago," he said, "we had to cross this ferry by means of a horse-boat. We were then an hour in crossing, and the fare was twenty-five cents. Now we cross in five minutes, and the fare is one cent." "Brooklyn," he continued, "was then only a little village, and the population of New York was 75,000. Now the City of Brooklyn numbers 100,000, and that of New York about 600,000 inhabitants. Steamboats, railroads, the telegraph, and gas, were things unthought of then." Each of these had come into use and effected a revolution since he was a young man. He witnessed the starting of the first steamboat that ever made a trip up the North River. The foot of Fulton-st., New York, (the present site of the Fulton ferry buildings, but then a sand-bank, with no buildings in its vicinity,) was the point of departure of Fulton's strange little craft on its trial trip. A temporary staging was erected along the sloping shore of sand, upon which was assembled the gazing multitude that both cheered and hooted the advent of steam, as it made its first successful début before the people of New York City. Our informant further told us that in a newspaper printed at the time it was stated that as the boat moved up the river, puffing, smoking, and snorting, against the tide, it so frightened some of the sailors on other vessels that they fell on their knees, praying to be delivered from the Evil One!

The first steamboat that was ever applied to any practical purpose was built by Robert Fulton, at New York, in 1807, and was named the North River. Her engine was 18 horse power; and she was 33 hours in making the passage between New York and Albany. The same passage by steamboat is now made in from six to nine hours, and by railroad in 4 hours.

The Seamstresses of London.

A correspondent of The London Times gives the following facts with reference to a great mantua-making establishment in that city:—

"Work is commenced every morning at 7 o'clock and continued till 11 at night—a period of 16 hours, the only intervals allowed being about 10 minutes for each meal—viz., breakfast at 8 o'clock, dinner at half-past 1, tea at half-past 5, and supper at half-past 9—the total amount of time allowed for—eating their food, I was going to say, but surely 'bolting' it is the more appropriate phrase—being 40 minutes per day; thus leaving 15 hours and 20 minutes as the period devoted to work. And this, be it remembered, is not merely during the busy season, as at the west end, but for all the year round, from January to December; for you must understand that at the establishment to which I refer the greater part of the sewing is given out to slop-workers in the busy season—the city dames, I suspect, have no notion of the kind of dens their dresses are made in—and all that is done indoors is the original cutting out and ultimate fitting together of the separate parts; but, that when the slack season comes, there is always as much sewing reserved as will keep the girls of the establishment employed up to the full pitch—so that there is, in fact, no 'slack season' at all for them. And yet for this continued and unrelenting pressure of 16 hours' work per day, from year's end to year's end, this firm assume to themselves the greatest possible credit. They thank God that they are not as other firms are at the west end—oppressors and destroyers of young women. They never—not even for a few weeks in the busy season—make their people sit up till 3 or 4 in the morning. Oh no! their gas is always turned off in the workroom by 11 o'clock. Why, sir, the west end system, with its few weeks of severity, followed as it is by months of comparative leisure, is mercy itself when viewed alongside of this unmitigated 'never-ending still beginning' slavery to which I am referring.

"The only day of leisure which the girls of this establishmet have is Sunday. Then they may go where and do what they please; but from from Monday morning to Saturday night they are as complete prisoners as any in Newgate. They know not whether the sun shines or the rain falls all that time. They are not allowed to cross the threshold even to purchase a pair of shoes or a new gown for themselves, and must employ their friends outside to do this for them.

"Nor is the accommodation indoors such as in any way to reconcile them to this close confinement. The workroom in which 10 or 12 of them are employed is only about 12 feet square, and is entirely devoid of arrangements for ventilation, which is the more to be deplored as during the evening they have to encounter the heat and foul air of three flaring gas burners right over their heads, every door and window being shut by which a breath of pure air could possibly enter. The bedrooms are equally uncomfortable, no fewer than six persons being huddled into one, and four into another."

Broadcast Corn.

As a soiling crop there is nothing superior to Indian corn, and it is but fair to hope that our readers will see the propriety of manuring and preparing a few acres to be sown to broadcast corn, with the view of provided forage to feed out to their stock. The lot or lots selected, should be convenient to the barn and stable. It should be manured with at least twenty double horse cart loads of rich animal manure or four hundred pounds guano, one bushel of plaster, and two bushels of salt; or ten bushels of bone dust, ten bushels of ashes, and two bushels of salt per acre.

If the first manure be used, it should be evenly spread over the ground, plowed in to the depth of eight inches; the ground should then be thoroughly harrowed and rolled.

If guano should be used, it must have the lumps broken; and the best way to facilitate this operation, is to thoroughly moisten the lumps with salt brine, throw them into pile, and after remaining so a day, to pulverize them; when pulverized, the guano should be mixed intimately with the plaster and salt, spread equally over the ground, and be plowed in to the above depth, and the ground harrowed and rolled.

If bone dust is used, it should be moistened, and then formed into compost with the ashes and salt, and after remaining in bulk a week or ten days, the ground should be plowed 8 inches deep, and harrowed; then the bone dust compost should be sown, harrowed in and the ground rolled.

The ground being prepared in either way, three or four bushels of Indian corn should be sown on each acre, and harrowed and cross harrowed in; a bushel of plaster per acre should be sown on it, and the ground rolled; and here the labor of cultivation would be at an end.

In six weeks this corn would be fit to cut, to be fed out to the horses, working animals, and stock generally. Three acres, if judiciously managed, would serve to feed twenty or thirty head from June until frost. Whatever quantity of ground may be devoted to this purpose, should be divided into three or four parts, and be seeded at intervals of two weeks apart, in order that the supply of green forage may be kept up continually.

Now suppose the milch cow, instead of being turned out to the woods, roads, and old fields, of nights, were provided with soiling food from June to October, and yarded upon some twelve inches of mould from the woods or mud from the marsh, river or bay shore, during that time; suppose every fortnight, fresh, rough material were spread over the cow yard, and the surface sown over with plaster, we say, suppose farmers and planters were to adopt this course, and we ask, what would be the consequence? Why, five hundred loads of rich manure could be thus made in a season, every load of which would be worth two dollars. [American Farmer.

Life in Oregon.

A gentleman who has taken up his residence on Puget Sound, Oregon, writes to the Pittsburg Dispatch in the following strain:—

Should a man take a prairie claim, he can go at once to work putting in crops, only he must possess enough money to keep things moving in the meanwhile, or in the intervals must "hire out," helping some wealthier neighbor to clear his claim, or working at wood chopping, at which even such a town-bred diminutive "atomy" as myself got $3 per day. Should he take a timbered claim he can do as we are doing—get some four or five together, and get out hewn timber, which has always sold heretofore for $10 per 100 feet, costing $3 for delivery by cattle—putting in crops as he can spare time for clearing.

Potatoes are the most profitable, because the least troublesome crop. They now are, and have been ever since my arrival, $2 50 per bushel. The ordinary crop is 300 buhels, realizing $750 per acre. They will doubtless be lower next season, but they will always command a good price, as there are none now shipped, and California will always cause prices to rule high. The farmers here never pay any attention to them after planting, and frequently the second year a crop of "volunteers" spring up, almost as full as the first year. Some of the farmers are planting now, it being their customary time, while others do not plant until the last of June. Onions are $4 per bushel. Turnips here don't sell by the bushel, as you could not get more than one in a measure.

There are splendid openings here for dairies. Cheese sells at Portland at 50 to 75 cents per pound. Here, it don't sell at all, for the simplest reason in the world. Butter is scarce here at $1 per pound, and yet, on the broad prairies, any number of cattle could be kept, year after year, with no outlay for feed, save the cutting of one stock of hay, for fear of such a severe winter as the last, the severest known here for seven years. So says the old "Pere Ricarde," at the "Mission," upon referring to his journal. California will always furnish a market for butter and cheese; and in our growing trade with China, there is no telling what a hole these long-queued Celestials may eat into our products. To a man of capital, the milling business offers inducements seldom to be met with. A steam saw-mill upon the Sound is of itself a fortune. The hewn timber we are getting out is taken to California, and sawed into lumber there, because vessels cannot get cargoes here—mills are so few in number. At the falls of De Shute river, above Olympia, is the only saw-mill upon this end of Sound. It runs by water power, and is now rented at $840 per month. The whole concern, built when labor was much higher, cost $5,000—thus paying for itself in six months. Lumber has sold at $50 per M., and never less than $25, with a steady demand much greater than the supply. The lumber is all sawn from white, red and yellow fir, and cedar, which is all the variety of merchantable timber we possess.

Ride and Tie.

In the slow old times when Vermont was the Land of Promise for the hardy sons of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and the Holland Purchase more remote and inaccessible than Oregon now is, the lads who set out to seek their fortunes in the new settlements used to manage in this fashion: vehicles were neatly out of question, for lack of roads and bridges; making a long journey on foot was not pleasant; and to ride superfluous horses to the West, beside diminishing the scanty outfit, was taking them from a dear market to a relatively cheap one. So two of them would buy or hire a nag jointly and start, No. 1 riding off smartly some ten miles to a point agreed on, where he would see the pony well rubbed, watered and fed and then step off on foot. In due time No. 2, who had stated on foot, would come up, find the pony every way refreshed and ready for work again, jump on his back, ride him off smartly a further ten miles, passing No. 1 on the way, and dismounting at the stipulated spot, to repeat the watering, currying, feeding process, and step briskly on. Thus forty miles per day were easily made, the bipeds traveling twenty each and the quadruped, forty, or just ten miles per leg all around all arriving in due time at their destination in good condition, and with no fatal depletion of pocket money.

Advice to Working Men.

Mrs. Swisshelm, in her Saturday Visitor, proffers the following suggestions to Working Men as to the ways and means of commanding a fair reward for their labor:—

"We have long known an unfailing remedy for all the ordinary oppressions of Capital. We have a prescription which, if well shaken and regularly taken, would cure the evil which strikes, as they now occur, do only aggravate. It is, 'In time of peace, prepare for war.'

"If our laboring men, before making war on employers, would only build unto themselves fortifications and lay in stores, they could stand any length of siege. The way to do this is for every man to live on half his wages, or less if possible, until he buys and pays for an acre of ground, fences it, builds on it a house large and close enough to shelter himself and family from a winter storm. This is his fort. Then let him take all the time he now spends in taverns and other lounging places, to lay in stores of ammunition and provisions, in the shape of useful knowledge gleaned from books and papers, and grape-vines, trees, potatoes, and cabbages growing in his enclosure. If he plants every foot of it with something pleasant to the eye and good for food, no tyrannical employer can starve him into any degrading submission. It is extravagance and improvidence, and nothing else, which keeps the laboring classes in the power of Capital. We know very few capitalists who have not become so through a self-denial and perseverance which poor men scorn to use.

"We know men who, on the wages of a common laborer—seldom more than 75 cents a day—have lived comfortably and accumulated property, while thousands earning twice that sum live 'from hand to mouth,' and are starving if a week out of employ.

"Our impression is, that the majority of these would not be one bit better off if they got ten dollars a day—that, in fact, they would be more likely to prosper on fifty cents. Those people who need contributions to sustain them when unemployed a month, are generally those who know nothing of the value of money, but calculate to spend all they get, be that little or much; consequently, an advance in their wages is sending more money to beer-shops and cigar establishments, or fancy stores. Before any man can be independent, he must learn to live within his income, be that little or much. When he has fixed himself in a home stead, with the cellar well filled, and a bit of ground to raise his cabbage, and some spare change in his pocket, he can afford to strike any system of oppression he has a mind to; but as long as he prefers indulgence to self ownership, he ought to be a slave, if anybody who can take care of him will only take the trouble to do it.

"We would live on mush and molasses, and dress in fip calico, all the days of our natural life, rather than live by sufferance, and be in daily danger of starvation, or be compelled to work how and when somebody pleased, whether we liked it or not. 'Make unto yourselves friends of the unrighteous mammon'—save your money, and thereby your independence.

Singular Phenomenon.

A correspondent of The Tribune, writing from Dundas, (C. W.,) informs us of a singular obstacle to the progress of work on the Great Western Railroad. The following is his account:—

"At Capetown, five miles from here, as they were digging through a swamp, they came across a stream of quicksand and another substance so fine that you cannot feel the least grit to it, and on putting your hands in it, they become, as it were, greased. The stream is of a pale lilac, and so fine is this substance, which colors the water, that it will not settle to the bottom of the stream as it flows along toward the lake. The result of all this is yet to be seen. As this substance runs out from below, the top of the ground falls in. The track they had laid for drawing the dirt cars on has in many places fallen in, leaving the end of the rails sticking out in some places, while in others they have been swallowed in toto. It is a curiosity to behold the springs at the source of this fluid. It boils up like a pot over a fire, depositing the heavier particles around the mouth of the crater, until it assumes the shape of a mound, the top of which is flat, and in boiling motion. In the center of these mounds or springs yon can feel for the bottom in vain with sticks of 10 or 12 feet, and I am not prepared to say that is it not the bottomless pit. In many places are to be observed sands of various colors boiling up in the center and returning by an exterior course to where they came from, to be again brought to the surface through the center. The sand being of different colors makes the cone seem continually striped, and ever changing those stripes, which make a most beautiful appearance. Some seven miles east of this, where the road runs along the side of the mountain, some annoying slides or avalanches have occurred this spring. I visited one 600 feet in extent, and to a stranger it would appear as though it had been in its present situation for centuries. It bore with it a growth of large forest trees, which stand as erect as formerly. The plank road has already 'caved in,' and the citizens of Capetown are in danger of caving in also, for they have already been obliged to move a blacksmith shop and a carriage house, and one of the citizens has sold his dwelling on account of its dangerous position, the ground already giving way under it.

Live Within Your Income.

Few directions are more valuable for success in life than the above. It is applicable alike to all ages, and of paramount importance to all. It is a good starting point for the young man just commencing the race of life. Here the early habit may be so formed of regulating the expenses, crushing all unnecessary desires, and avoiding those temptations that lead beyond the income, that the whole future life of property, inflnence and respectability may depend upon it. A young man commences life with a salary or with wages a little beyond the supply of his ordinary and proper wants. By carefully living within his income, not only will there be laid up a supply for the future, when it will be needed, but a habit of self-control will be acquired, more valuable than the money. Fictitious wants will not become real ones, and the mind will be better prepared for those days of need which will come upon all.

The young man who spends his whole income upon his present wants and pleasures, will be apt to do so when that income increases, and will never be a prosperous man. Wants increase with time, and habit grows with its indulgence. Let the young, then, regard this precept and learn wisdom.

Young married people are too apt to indulge in foolish expenses, because they think they can afford them then. Perhaps they can; but if they live up to the extent of their income, with their present small family, what will they do when that family increases? The habits of expense that they have acquired will adhere to them, and they will soon be beyond their means.

It is a very unhappy condition for a family, who have been brought up to consider certain luxuries as indispensable, and who have not early been learnt to regulate their expenses, to be constantly stepping over the boundary line of their income. How many mean things, how many disreputable things, how many unpleasant things, must be resorted to, to keep up appearances! There is hardly a more pitiable condition. The children are imitating the extravagance of the wealthy, while the father is harrassed with debts and duns, and the mother has often to deny herself the comforts of life. Such children would show at once their energy and their wisdom, by relinquishing at once this foolish contest for fashion, and by their endeavors to earn their own livelihood, exhibit to the world how superior they are to its follies.

He who is spending more than his income is guilty of dishonesty. What he thus spends must be from the pockets of his neighbors. He is incurring debts that he knows he can never pay, and is thus undermining the foundation of moral integrity in his own character, and teaching his children one of the worst lessons that he can spread before them. His situation too is a most uncomfortable one. He cannot look his creditors in the face as an honest man should, but is obliged to resort to supterfuge, false promise, and, eventually, lies, to satisfy those he does not pay. Any man that has any regard for his own happiness, or respect for his own character, will avoid these evils.

But what shall be done? Give up this struggle for appearances. Conform to circumstances, and live poorly and dress poorly, if necessary, until debts are paid. But above all, go to work. Work is not dishonorable or disgraceful. In this country, independence is of more value than gentility; and the satisfaction of an honest conscience worth more than the notions and splendors of society. No man or woman degrade themselves by honest labor; but the struggle to keep up appearnces must be a degradation, always in our own eyes, often in the eyes of our neighbors.

TACTICS FOR STYLISH CHURCH-GOERS.—The follwing on "Church Etiquette," is not much of an exaggeration of what sometimes happens, after services have begun, to the edification of the curious in the congregation, and for the comfort of the nerves of the pulpit:—

Let the lady advance on one pace beyond the door of the pew she wishes to enter, halt, about face, and salute. The pew must then be vacated by such gentlemen as are in it, by a flank movement. The squad should rise simultaneously, when the lady presents herself, and face by the right flank, then deploy into the aisle, the head man facing the lady, and the rest passing to his right and rear, the direction of the line being changed by a right countermarch, and forming again in a line, up and down the aisle, still faced by the right flank. The lady, when she sees the coast is clear, completes her salute, and advances to her position in the pew. The gentlemen break off by angles from the rear, and resume their places. Great care should be taken, of course, by other parties, not to enter the aisle, when this evolution is in progress, until it is completed.

COLONIZATION IN AFRICA.—A Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune says that Commander Lynch, recently returned from his preliminary expedition of observation for his grand exploring expedition into the interior of Africa, is now in Washington, engaged in preparing for his report. He was on the coast in Liberia and that vicinity from early in January last to late in March, and explored all the rivers of the region. He found none navigable more than twenty-one miles above the mouth. He is possessed of no very exalted idea of the feasibility of white colonization of the West Coast of Africa, even in a temporary way, and for commercial purposes only. Capt. L. intimates that there is but a single Englisman known to have survived the climate of Sierra Leone for five years, at the end of which time the fever carried him off. It will be recollected that perhaps forty years since, the Portugese colonized an island in the immediate vicinity of Guinea, sending thither 7,000 souls. At this time there is but a single individual living in whose veins the blood of any of these colonists is believed to course. This is a fact making stubbornly, indeed, against the idea of a much more profitable trade with Africa, as the result of any possible effort of our Government to compass that end.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS IN ENGLAND.—The following paragraph shows the way they do things in England when an accident happens on a Railroad. We copy from the London Times:

"The responsibility of railway companies is commencing in right earnest. On the 5th of this month an engine-driver and a stoker lost their lives by an accident on the York and North Midland. An investigation into the causes of the catastrophe was instituted on the day following, was adjourned for a short period, and was concluded by the verdict of a jury on Tuesday last. This verdict is nothing less than Manslaughter against the Directors of the company; so that now, for the first time, the actual managers of a railway are brought to personal account for the casualties of the line under their control."

FATALITY OF FRENCH EMPRESSES.—From the wives of Charlemagne down to the marriage of Louis Napoleon, says the University Magazine, some sixty-seven in all of the royal and imperial consorts, there are but thirteen on whose names there is no dark stain of sorrow and sin. Eleven were divorced, two died by the executioner, seven were very early widowed, three were cruelly traduced, three were exiles, thirteen were bad in different degrees of evil—the prisoners and the heart-broken made up the rest. About twenty were buried at St. Denis who were denied the rest of the grave; their tombs were broken, their coffins opened, their remains exposed to the insults of a revolutionized populace, and then flung into a trench and covered with quick lime.

CURE FOR TOOTHACHE.—We know nothing of the safety or efficacy of the following recipe for toothache, which we find imputed to a practitioner in an Eastern paper: "Gum copal, when dissolved in chloroform, forms an excellent compound for stuffing the holes of decayed teeth. I have used it frequently, and the benefits my patients have derived from it have been truly astonishing. The application is simple and easy: I clean out the hole, and moisten a little piece of cotton with the solution; I introduce this into the decayed part, and in every instance the relief has been almost instantaneous; the chloroform removes the pain, and the gum copal resists the action of the saliva; and as the application is so agreeable, those who labor under the dreadful malady would do well to make a trial of it."

SINGULAR GEOLOGICAL FACT.—At Modena, in Italy, within a circle of four miles around the city, whenever the earth is dug and the workmen arrive at a distance of 63 feet, they come to a bed of chalk, which they bore with an auger, five feet deep. They then withdraw from the pit before the auger is removed, and upon its retraction the water bursts up with great violence, and quickly fills the well thus made—the supply of water being neither affected by rains or drouths. At the depth of fourteen feet are found the ruins of an ancient city, houses, paved streets, and mason work. Below this again is a layer of earth, and at twenty-six feet walnut trees are found entire, with leaves and walnuts upon them. At twenty-eight feet soft chalk is found, and below this vegetables and trees.

THE BIBLE IN OUR COMMON SCHOOLS.

Number Five.

BY C. ROLLIN BURDICK, A. B.

I favor the introduction of the Bible more extensively into our public schools, because I believe its teachings are the only means of elevating the human family. Many means have been tried to find an antidote for the evils which man has been heir to, but all have failed. First, a long life of a thousand years was given to man, to furnish a fair opportunity of trying his own strength in bettering the condition to which his sins had reduced him. But his course was still downward. The light shone upon a few only, that God's holy name might not be utterly forgotten upon the earth. In the morning of man's existence, the hands of a Cain were stained with fraternal blood. The dying groans of a brother called aloud to God for vengeance upon the fratricide. An unnumbered train followed in the footsteps of this wicked man. Long life only added facilities for the commission of crime, and the thoughts of man were only evil continually. Violence was in the earth, and God sent his floods to destroy man. His natural life was shortened tenfold, to curtail, no doubt, his facilities to do evil. But still man degenerated; idols made by hand were worshiped instead of the great and living God, and finally man's sun set in the gloomy night of savagism. Ignorance and superstition held their carnival over a fallen and apostate world.

Again efforts were made to redeem the world. Science shook her golden pinions over man, and shed her glorious light upon him. Poetry attuned her harp and delighted his ear, while eloquence lent her enchaining and enrapturing power to accomplish the work. Painting and sculpture were also brought into requisition, and lent their magic charms. Greece and Rome became in turn the cradle of the arts and sciences, and they carried them to great perfection, so much so that the unsanctified look upon these countries as models of happiness. And it is quite natural that there should be a halo of glory thrown around the land where Leonidas bled —where Demosthenes poured forth in such strains his volumes of eloquence—where Homer sung—where Sophocles froze the blood by his tragic sallies—where Aristides submitted with meekness, and almost Christian fortitude, to the insults of his ungrateful countrymen—where Socrates taught his almost Christian lessons, and submitted with such meekness to the death he had not merited at the hands of his countrymen—and where Plato reasoned so profoundly of the soul's immortality. That city is a consecrated spot, where a Cornelia preferred death to a life of ignominy and shame—which gave birth to a Cincinnatus, who preferred the humble avocation of tilling the soil to the dictatorship of Rome—about whose walls such constancy was manifested as that of Regulus, who preferred death to the betrayal of his country's interests—where Cicero and Virgil flourished, and where a host of bright luminaries have lived and labored, such as have done honor to the human intellect. There is something in genius which instinctively commands the admiration, and we pay a kind of reverence to the countries that have given it birth. Hence it is perfectly natural that the scholar should feel an inspiration in the contemplation of them. But the Christian can see under this covering (I might say) of desirable earthly glory, what was wanting to make these nations happy—to give permanency to their institutions—the seeds of corruption and final disolution. It was the want of a pure system of religion, such a system as is embodied in the Bible. Greece, though polished and highly intellectual, was given to the most blind idolatry. Venus, the voluptuous goddess of love, was one of the divinities worshiped here. At Corinth, once the queen city of Greece, her temples were filled with the hives of lust. The priestesses that ministered in her temples were required to prostitute themselves as acts of worship at her altars. Such a state of things as this system must have introduced cannot be fully imagined. Virtue lay entombed, in the grave of oblivion, and the devotees of unrestrained license held their midnight revels upon the turf beneath which she slept. Bacchus, the god of wine, celebrated in mythology only as a drunken sot, was also adored here. At the feasts in honor of him, nothing less was expected than that his votaries should all be drunk. Young men and women, reeling and staggering under the influence of wine, ran howling through the fields and woods, like so many wild beasts, and were guilty of the most disorderly conduct. The petty states of Greece were almost constantly engaged in intestine wars, when not repelling foreign foes. With all these things working against them, it is not a little wonderful, that the arts and sciences achieved as much as they did. But the meridian glory of Greece was of short duration. It soon began to wane. Things so unfavorable to the elevation of man, were gnawing like a gangrene at her vitals. She could not stand under such a load, and she finally fell back to barbarism.

Rome's history is precisely similar in this respect. The Romans as a nation were not so much given to licentiousness as the Greeks, at least during many centuries of their existence; but their system of religion was imperfect—it was idolatrous, and consequently insufficient to accomplish the elevation of the people. Whatever of good they enjoyed, came from science rather than religion. In fact, their religion operated against science, instead of promoting it. Their gods were generally apotheosized heroes, warriors, and blood-thirsty men. The effect of such a worship can easily be seen. Wars are always hindrances to the promotion of the arts and sciences. Mars, the god of war, was worshiped at Rome. He was represented in statuary as mounted on a war-chariot, and driving home the bolts of death to the hearts of feeling men. They gloried in their origin as having been in a rape committed by this famous god upon a vestal virgin. As a consequence of their worship, they gained their ascendancy by violence and war—they held their power by war and aggression—and their sun finally went down dimmed and ghastly, quenched in a sea of blood. Desolation and ruin chanted their funeral dirge. Where now is the glory of Greece and Rome? Gone as a tale that is told. A few memorials only remain to tell of their once living, and of the blessings that science can give, even when unaccompanied by her handmaid religion. Such has been the fate of every nation which has attempted to build its superstructure upon any thing short of the Bible.

God, foreseeing how all these things would end, had conceived, in his own infinite mind, a plan for the redemption of man—for his elevation to that happy state which he had lost by his sins; but, in the mean time, willing that he should learn how perfectly impotent he was, he permitted all these schemes for happiness and perpetuity to be tested, that he might thus demostrate that there was no other way given under heaven whereby man could be saved, except the way prescribed in the Bible. With such a preparation, the gospel was promulgated in the world. In it the yearnings for immortality found consoling assurances, and from it the healing light of truth shone into the darkened souls of men. The religion of the Greeks and Romans, inculcating as it did the spirit of war, licentiousness, and almost every form of wickedness, stood an impediment in the way of the triumph of the arts and sciences—as indeed all systems of error do, since truth and falsehood cannot harmonize, though in different departments of God's empire. Truth in the moral world goes hand in hand with truth in the physical and intellectual, each being promotive of the other. Hence it is only when we see intellectual and physical truth going hand in hand with moral, that we may expect to see a complete triumph of either science or religion. Science, as we see in the case of the Greeks and Romans, does not necessarily prepare the way for Christianity, but Christianity always opens the way for the triumph of science and art. Wherever the glorious doctrines of the Bible have been disseminated, there has science pitched her tents. In the language of Ruth to Naomi, she says to religion, "Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." Whatever nation or people has been most thoroughly indoctrinated into the great truths of the Bible, that nation has made the most rapid marches in civilization. It directly or indirectly promotes the progress of every thing useful in the world. Its doctrines abolish war, and establish the reign of peace. This breaks up the fallow ground, and prepares the way for the growth of the arts and sciences. How this is so, is obvious from the following considerations. That nation, which is constantly spending its blood and treasure in war, can find but little time to build railroads and canals—neither is there much encouragement, as the next gale of war that sweeps over the land may carry away every vistige of them. It is so with respect to every thing. If there is no security for property invested in improvements, as a matter of course there will never be any made. Again, in whatever mind religion has established her mild and peaceful reign, that mind is prepared for the reception of all truth. Nay, more, as religion creates a love for God, it will invariably create a love for his works, and a desire to search their hidden mysteries, their beauties and glories; and as it creates a love for man, it stimulates to do all that can be done for his amelioration. Hence the domain of nature is explored to give to him all her secret agencies for helpers in his labors. Religion gives to its possessor patience and perseverence in the pursuit of knowledge. The foundation is therefore laid for all those benefits which civilized man enjoys over his brothers of less favored climes.

It is just, then, for me to claim for the Bible all the blessings we as a nation, or as a member of the family of nations, enjoy. To it we owe all improvements in the science of agriculture, of shipbuilding, and of navigation. It has given us our steamboats, our railroads, our canals, our telegraphs, and our printing presses. It has brought us to a point of civilization, compared to which that of the Greeks and Romans was but a dim and uncertain twilight to the full blaze of the noonday sun. Their civilization was of such a transient nature, that a few incursions of northern barbarians swept away almost every vestige of it. But what power could blot out the civilization of the nineteenth century? We see this state of things resulting from a little leavening principle, introduced in the mass of human society, for as yet but a small proportion of those who live in Christian countries, live up to any thing like the teachings of the Bible. What might we not expect, were all obedient to its precepts? Still more glorious marches into the domain of art and science. I, then, would have the Bible taught in our common schools for what it has done.

WATKINS, N. Y., June 20, 1853.

THE MORNING AIR.

"The breezy call of incense-breathing morn."

The morning air, the morning air!
What is there that we can compare,
For freshness, with the morning?
As rushing upwards from the vale
Its balmy fragrance we inhale,
There's nothing that we can compare,
For sweetness, with the morning air!

From whence it cometh who can tell?
From yonder hills or from the dell,
The darkness of whose inmost cell
Transparent with the light is growing,
That down those hills is gently flowing;
Dispelling, as it spreads so bright,
The shadowy retreat?

It is the breath, as poets say,
Of her, the harbinger of day,
Who on Apollo's brow each ray
Disposes, ere she gives the reins
To guide him o'er the fervid plains—
It is her breath, the heat distending,
All purified whilst with it blending!

No, no! nor comes it from the hills,
Nor whisp'ring groves, where rippling rills
The trembling air with music fills.
From whence it comes, and how its sweetness,
No phantasy can tell with meetness;
It is a mystery, and known
To Him who made the morn, alone!

Then ask not why so fresh, so sweet;
From whence it comes, where its retreat?
Enough that thou with dewy feet
Inhal'st its balm; and if thine heart
Beats loyally in every part,
'T will swell with that divine emotion
That solves all mystery in devotion.

BIBLE HOUSES AND BIBLE OPERATIONS.

Abridged from the N. Y. Tribune.

One of the largest, if not the largest, building in New York, is the new Bible House, occupying the square bounded by Third and Fourth-avs. and Eighth and Ninth-sts., recently completed for the use of the American Bible Society. Its construction has been rendered necessary because of the rapid extension of the field of this Society's operations. For some years past much inconvenience has been experienced from the want of greater accommodations for furnishing the increasing demand for its publications—notwithstanding the magnitude of the establishment in Nassau-st., which has, up to this time, been occupied. In January, 1852, the Society secured the lot on which the new building has been erected. Its area is about three-fourths of an acre, comprising between eleven and twelve city lots. The shape of the building is nearly a triangle, with unequal sides. It has a front of 198 feet 8 inches on Fourth-av., 202 feet on Eighth-st., 96 feet 11 inches on Third-av., and 242 feet 6 inches on Ninth-st.—making a total front over 700 feet. The depth of the building is 50 feet. There is a large area in the center. The hight of the building from the sidewalk is over seventy feet, and it is divided into six stories. It is substantially built of brick, with brown stone trimmings, and when ready for occupation will have cost between $250,000 and $300,000. The building is commanding in appearance. Occupying a block by itself, it is safe from exposure to fires, and from damage to books in the process of manufacture, by dust, smoke, or vapor from other buildings, as none are adjoining. It also has every facility of light and air; and from it is had a most commanding view of the surrounding city and country, land and water.

The Bible enterprise had its origin in London. The British and Foreign Bible Society was formed in 1804. It led to the organization of Bible Societies in this country, the first one of which was instituted in Philadelphia in 1808; the second, the Connecticut Bible Society, in May, 1809; and the third in Massachusetts, in June, 1809. Similar Societies sprung up, until, in 1816, they numbered 70. A central organization was deemed expedient. On the second Wednesday of May, 1816, a Convention of sixty delegates, representing twenty-eight local Societies, met in the lecture-room of the Dutch Reformed Church, in Garden-st., organized a Society, adopted a constitution, and issued an address.

The Bible House in Nassau-st. was erected in 1822, fifty feet in front, and one hundred in depth, and five stories high, at a cost of about $22,500, which was paid by the citizens of New York. The printing and binding part of the establishment, afterwards added; six stories in hight, cost about the same amount of money. By the increase in the value of property, this more than doubled in value, and was sold to the Baptists for $105,000, to be occupied as offices for their Bible and Missionary, Foreign and Domestic operations. The Baptists sold the northern part of the property for $50,000, to be converted into stores.

The first President of the American Bible Society was Hon. Elias Boudinot, of New Jersey, who continued in that position from May, 1816, until his death, in October, 1821. His successor, Hon. John Jay, of New York, performed the duties of that office until in 1828, when he resigned on account of his infirmities. The third President was Hon. Richard Varick, of New York, who continued his services until his death, in 1832. The next was Hon. John Cotton Smith, of Connecticut, who continued in the office until his death, in December, 1845. The fifth and present incumbent of the presiding Chair is Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey. The receipts of the Society the first year of its operations, 1816–'17, were $37,779 35; and it issued 6,410 Bibles, but no Testaments. Its income has continued to increase, with some fluctuations, but rapidly, until, in the thirty-sixth year of its operations, 1851–'52, its receipts reached the sum of $308,744 81; and its distributions amounted to 221,450 Bibles, and 444,565 Testaments. Since its organization, the Society has received about $4,500,000, and has put into circulation an aggregate of about 9,000,000 Bibles and Testaments. The issue of the current year will reach 700,000. Of the above income it has made grants amounting to $500,000 to aid in the publication of the Scriptures at various missionary stations in foreign lands. It has supplied thousands of seamen with the Scriptures; and sent them by seamen to nearly every part of the world. Criminals in jails and penitentiaries have been supplied; rooms in many of the hotels, and many of the Railroad Station-houses, have been furnished. The inmates of various humane institutions throughout the country have been supplied. The Bible has also been carried into hundreds of thousands of families throughout the country. Depositories for the Bible have been opened in every part of the land. Auxiliary Societies to the number of 1,400, with 2,400 minor branches, extending from Maine to California and Oregon, increase the facilities of the Society in collecting funds and distributing its publications. Thirty traveling agents are constantly employed, forming new and reviving old auxiliaries, collecting funds, &c. At the present time the Scriptures, in whole or in part, are in print in over 200 languages. The American Bible Society has published the Scriptures, or portions of them, in 24 tongues, and aided in issuing them in others. Among the languages in which the Scriptures are now being published by this Society, are the English, French, German, Danish, Swedish, Spanish, Dutch, Welsh, and other European languages; two or three African dialects; and the tongues of the Choctaws, Cherokees and Ojibbewas among the Indians. This general idea of the Society and the extent of its operations, will serve to show the urgent want of such an establishment as has been erected. The corner-stone of the new house was laid on the 24th of June last, in an appropriate manner.

The dimensions and uses of the different parts of the building are as follows: The depth of the cellar is 8½ feet. The first story is 12 feet in hight, and, with the exception of the offices and depository, which are appropriated to the use of the society, has been finished into stores. These are on the Fourth-av., Eighth-st., and Third-av. fronts, and are let for business purposes not incompatible with the general purposes of the building. The second-story is 13 feet in hight, and is mostly divided into offices, that portion of it fronting on Fourth-av. being entirely occupied as offices. The third-story is 11 feet in hight, and that portion of it which fronts on Fourth-av. is finished into offices. The fourth story is 10 feet 4 inches high; the fifth story 10 feet; and the sixth 9 feet four inches high. Access to the offices is mainly had by the entrance on Fouth-av. side. Besides office-rooms used for the purposes of the Society, the following organizations have taken rooms: American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; American Home Missionary Society; Protestant Episcopal Foreign and Domestic Committees, Protestant Episcopal Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge; New York State Colonization Society; The Society for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Jews; House of Refuge; Children's Aid Society; Home of the Friendless, and the New York Society Library. The Room of the Managers of the American Bible Society is a chapel-like building, extending into the yard from the Fourth-av. front, from the second story of which access is had. It is fire proof. In the first story of this, under the Managers' room, is the Depository and Library, also fire proof. This part of the structure, in which are the Managers' Room and Library, is thirty feet wide and fifty feet deep. The Managers' Room is twenty-five feet high, and is lighted by high windows and a dome. The remainder of the building is occupied by the Society for its mechanical operations. Its plan comprises many improvements and facilities for the convenient dispatch of work—saving much heavy labor by machinery. On the Ninth-st. side are places where teams can back into the building far enough to discharge stock or receive freight, which is hoisted and lowered by steam power to either story of the building. The different departments of work are so arranged, that the process of manufacture commences in the upper part of the building, and the books descend by a progressive movement from one department to another, as they approach completion, until received, as completed work, in the Depository on the first floor. The stereotype foundry, and store rooms for stock, &c., occupy a portion of the sixth story. In this story, on the Fourth-av. side, is a space about 180 by 50 feet in extent, in which the women employed in the building can take air and exercise at their leisure. From the windows of this play-ground a splendid view is to be had. The fifth story is to be appropriated to the printing department. Here the type setting, wetting of paper, printing, drying and pressing will be done. In this department about 65 persons will be employed, including stereotypers, compositors, pressmen, and those employed in wetting paper, drying sheets, roller-washing, &c. There will be fourteen Adams presses in use. No other kind of printing-presses will be used. The sheets descend to the bindery, which is on the fourth story. Mr. Charles Starr is the Superintendent of this department. There can be accommodated and are to be employed under his supervision about 350 women and 150 men. The sheets are received into the sheet-room from the fifth story, whence they are taken into the folding room on the same floor and folded: thence they go into the gathering and pressing-room, where the work is prepared for the sewers. Next they pass into the sewer's-room on the same floor. Thus the fourth story is occupied entirely by the sheet room and the rooms in which the women work. The tables and seats have been arranged with a view to the comfort and health, as far as possible, of those employed. There are cloakrooms on this floor for the use of each ten of the young ladies. From this story the unbound books descend through a trunk to the third story, which is chiefly used as a bindery. Here the books pass through the series of operations regularly, going through the hands of the rounders, backers, forwarders, gilders and finishers in their turn, and when completed arrive at the trunk through which they descend the depository.

The building is supplied with Croton, lighted by gas, and warmed by steam. The steam boiler room, from which power and steam for warming will be provided, is located in the yard—so that it will not be dangerous. The building is divided into four distinct parts by fire-proof walls and doors. There is to be no fire in any part of the building, except in the stores. Altogether, this immense building has been put up with the best materials, and in the most approved manner, combining all the conveniences desirable.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, AND SYRIA.

BY DR. J. V. C. SMITH.

Jerusalem is tolerably clean—from its location on a steep side hill, and not because the inhabitants are disposed to keep it in good condition. Filth appertains to Arabs wherever they are. Deep cisterns abound, cut into the solid rock, in which rain water is carefully collected, which is used for all domestic purposes. Water carriers bring some in skins on donkeys from the pool of Siloam, but only a few are able or desirous of a supply without the walls. A fine stream is conducted to the city from Bethlehem, winding about the mountains, which is exclusively devoted to the purposes of the celebrated mosque of Omar, on the very plot once occupied by the temple of Solomon.

Wood for fuel is always dear—being sold by weight—and is principally roots of olive trees, brought from a distance on camels. If trees were planted, fuel would be abundant and reasonable. No house has a fire-place or chimney. A little charcoal in a copper dish placed in the center of a room, is the extent of an attempt at a social fire. At Bishop Gobat's, and one other house, stoves were noticed. At Dr. Spaulding's Missionary Room at Damascus, a regular Boston stove diffused a comfort that could no where else be found in the town.

Old as Palestine is, as the residence of civilized man, there is not one decent road, five rods long, in the whole territory. Paths are struck out where there are the fewest stones or the least mud, over any one's field, and through any premises the rider chooses to go. If Herod the Great, whose passion for building magnificent cities was equal to Abba Pasha's in Egypt for creating palaces, had made five miles of good road from Jerusalem towards Jaffa, he would have conferred a blessing on his abused and degraded country. I have roamed over the stupendous ruins which mark the ambition of that energetic but wicked wretch, with feelings that were never called into activity in stepping from one fallen column to another in any province. With all his determined ambition to leave enduring monuments in granite, that should withstand the assaults of the elements, or the destructive agencies of conquerors, in after years, the besom of destruction has swept them all, all away, and Cesarea, the magnificent capital of Judea, has not one human being within its boundaries. The only living thing in sight, where there were the finest specimens of architecture—palaces beyond palaces, and an exhibition of wealth and refinement, while he was in the meridian of his glory—was one solitary horse feeding among crushed fragments of sculptured stone, as I passed over the lonely site of a once grand and beautiful residence or splendid court.

From the days of the Jebusites, whose capital was the present rock on which Jerusalem stands, every successive people who have had possession of Palestine have fixed their habitations on the very pinnacles of the mountains. Every town and village, therefore, is up somewhere. No one resides in a valley. From some hill-tops the spectator has an admirable view of many distant places, that appear quite near; but to reach any of them he must descend a mile or so, and cross a horrible ravine or yawning gorge, and subsequently wind up and onward like the gyrations of a corkscrew, for ten or twenty hours, to get at the proposed settlement. Miles are unheard of things in Palestine. Every body speaks of hours who describes a movement. It is seven hours to one place, for example; two to somewhere else; and forty to another. The making of a jaunt through the Holy Land or Syria, is an expensive affair indeed. There must be pack mules for carrying beds, food, and all that may be required from day to day. Three persons could not do well without two; and there must be a cook, a muleteer, a dragoman, who does all the talking and answers all your questions, for the Arabic is difficult to acquire, and, without an interpreter, it is impossible to know where you are, or what you see. Finally, each traveler is mounted on a horse, who is followed by a groom, and he too must have a mule to carry the provender. All this makes a kind of caravan—a long string of animals slowly winding up and down the horrible trails of the land, single file, at the rate of two or three miles only an hour.

In the course of the day, many places of peculiar interest mentioned in the old Testament are distinctly seen, which are not approached. When I stood at Bethel, Ramah was in full sight, and the mosque over the tomb of Samuel the prophet. Both Horan the Upper, and Gibeon also, where Joshua took a position when he said, "Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou Moon, in the valley of Ajalon," and other localities of immense interest to the biblical scholar and sacred geographer. At night it is necessary to seek a stopping place in a village, for security. Beyond a town or hamlet, there is not a single habitation. All lodge in the same apartment, on the ground or on your own beds, surrounded by armies of insects eager for your blood. Poor things, if it were not for strangers, fleas would soon be extinct, for they seem to despise an Arab, who sleeps sound in defiance of their nippers. Horses, cows, camels, goats, dogs, and the family, are not unfrequently congregated in one room. The night before reaching Damascus, we suffered exceedingly on account of the multitude of lodgers in one room—for the landlord had, in addition to the beasts and creeping things of Noah's ark, three wives, with their restless children.

The reason for taking hills for towns has reference, in the first place, to security—they can discover the approach of visitors, and if they don't like them, keep them at bay with the balls always at hand, great stones, which, once put in motion, would sweep through all opposition. Secondly, when the winter rains set in, the gorges are filled with angry torrents, that gorge out the side hills, so that not a resting place for a house could be found. An air of desolation reigns every where outside the town—and every person you meet is armed to the teeth with pistols, blunderbusses, long guns, dirks, spears, down to a simple club.

Although an advocate for peace, and almost a non-resistant in sentiment, I have been lugging a stout horse pistol all over the country, not knowing what might happen. Had an attack been made upon our train, I am quite sure I should have run instead of giving a shot, for I have a mortal antipathy to powder.

The majority of the inhabitants are idle—time is of no account. A very few do all the drudgery, and the rest smoke. Why, it is the great pursuit of a long life to smoke. The richer the individual, the better is the quality of his tobacco, and the longer the flexible stem of his nargelch. One everlasting cloud of smoke, the product of more pipes than there are virtues in the possession of the twelve tribes, is perpetually rising to the zenith throughout the length and breadth of the Land of Promise.

THE LESSON OF DEATH-BEDS.

Lord Chesterfield said, at the close of his life, "I have recently read Solomon, with a kind of sympathetic feeling. I have been as wicked and as vain, though not as wise, as he; but now I am old enough to feel the truth of his reflection—'all in the world is vanity and vexation of spirit.'" Gœthe, the distinguished German philosopher and poet, declared, at the age of eighty-four, as the lights of time went out, and the great lode-stars of eternity were beginning to open out on his vision, that he had scarcely tasted twenty-four hours solid happiness in the whole course of that protracted career. Lord Byron, the great poet, gifted beyond measure in genius, destitute more than many of grace, wrote his experience in his own beautiful but unhappy strain, when he said, upon the verge of the tomb:

"Though gay companions o'er the bowl
Dispel awhile the sense of ill,
Though pleasure fill the maddening soul,
The heart, the heart is lonely still.

"Ay, but to die, and go, alas!
Where all have gone, and all must go,
To be the nothing that I was
Ere born to life and living wo.

"Count o'er the joys thine hours have seen,
Count o'er thy days from anguish free,
And know, whatever thou hast been,
'Tis something better not to be.

"Nay, for myself, so dark my fate
Through every turn of life hath been,
Man and the world so much I hate,
I care not when I quit the scene."

The bitter sarcasm of the poet contrasts indeed with the glorious pæan of the apostle, "I have fought a good fight; I am ready to be offered up; there is reserved for me a crown of righteousness."

Voltaire, the French atheist, pronounced the world to be full of wretches, and himself the most wretched of them all. Mirabeau, one of the same school, died, calling, in his last moments, for opium to deaden the terrible forebodings of coming wo. Paine died intoxicated, and blaspheming. Hobbes prepared to take a leap in the dark; and Hume died joking and jesting about the boat of Charon, very much, I suspect, in the way which school boys whistle when they walk through a dark and lonely place, just to keep their spirits up, and their terrors down; but Paul, of far different character, breaks forth as he departs, in the euthanasia indicated in the text, "I have fought a good fight."

Why should there be this contrast? Was Paul a fanatic? He was the sobrest of men. Was he a mere mystic dreamer? He was the most logical of reasoners. Was he a novice? He had been in perils by land, in perils by sea, in perils amongst false brethren, arrested, tried, beaten, scourged, imprisoned; and yet, at the close of all, conscious that he had a rock beneath him, and a bright light above him, and a glorious hope before him—he breaks forth in these thrilling—almost inspiring—certainly inspiriting, accents, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which God, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day." I do indeed believe, that a sober and extensive comparison of the death-beds of those who have repudiated the gospel, with the dying moments of those who have accepted and rejoiced in it, would alone convince mankind that Christianity is true—that infidelity, practical or theoretical, is a deception, a delusion, mischievous in life, and miserable in death.

WITH HANDS AND FEET.—The last days of Andreae, the eminent and pious Chancellor of Tubingen, in the sixteenth century, were occupied in writing a book to expose the pernicious doctrines and maxims of the Jesuits. It is in the form of a dialogue. He seemed while writing it to be under a strong and inexpressible pressure of spirit. He told his friends that his thoughts came so rapidly, he wanted to write with hands and feet at once to put them down. Some one, he said, seemed to stand by his side, and urge him forward, saying, Press on, make haste! He completed the work in a fortnight, and the same day on which he finished it, he was taken ill of a sickness of which he died a few days afterwards. Does not some one stand by your side and mine continually, saying, Press on, make haste! "Whatsoever thine hand findeth to do, do it with thy might!"

To repress a hard answer, to confess a fault, or to stop (right or wrong) in the midst of self-defense, in gentle submission, sometimes requires a struggle almost like life and death; but these three efforts are the golden threads with which domestic happiness is interwoven; once begin the fabric with the woof, and trials shall not break or sorrow tarnish it.

REGENERATION.

Reply to D. E. M.—Concluded.

One of your positions is, that "a clear perception of truth, though a necessary antecedent of regeneration, is no part of it. Something yet remains to be done, and that something is a change of the will," &c. * * "This change of the attitude of the will is regeneration, and this is entirely the work of the subject, and not of God." Thus you boldly avow the sentiment, that regeneration is not of God! I am astonished; perfectly amazed at your rashness! I thought, when you begun your essay, that you intended God should have part of the honor of this great work; but it seems that, before you are half through, you become so jealous for "the glorious attribute of free will," that you rob him of the whole, and give it all to the creature. But as you, by this, put yourself in direct conflict with the Scriptures, so that even a child can see it, why need I spend any more time with you? Does not an Evangelist say, that the children of God are "born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God?" John 1: 13. Yet you say, they are born of the will of man; "this change is entirely the work of the creature." Does not an Apostle say that, "even when we were dead in sins, God hath quickened us together with Christ," &c.? Eph. 2: 5. But you say it is not so; "the change is entirely the work of the creature."

So then, according to your theory, the children of God are self-begotten! James the Apostle committed quite a mistake in saying, "Of his own will begat he us!" He ought to have said, 'By our leave begat he us!' or rather, 'Of our own will, we begat ourselves!' Another one says, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." 1 John 5: 1. But the amended version would read, 'Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, has regenerated himself.' The remainder of the verse—"every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him"—would of course be expunged, as making not even tolerable sense. And when Christians say, "Our Father who art in Heaven," they must be considered as meaning that they are the children of God, not by regeneration, but by their first creation. That passage, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God," (1 John 3: 1,) must be understood to refer to the love of God as displayed in creation, not in redemption. Or perhaps it is only a modest way in Christians of glorifying themselves, and may be paraphrased thus: 'Behold, how great is the love of God, that he accepts this work of regeneration which we have performed upon ourselves, and for the sake of it calls us his sons.'

I assure you, I intend no caricature of your doctrine. It is your own explicit avowal, that regeneration is entirely the work of the subject, not of God. I trust that you did not intend to take such infidel ground, and that you will yet teach the way of the Lord more perfectly.

You talk as if the anathemas of heaven were thundered against the sinner for not being regenerate. "Every unregenerate sinner, when he stands before the Judge of the Universe, will learn that he is unregenerate because he would not be regenerate." If this is so, there must be, somewhere within the lids of the Bible, a law which requires him to regenerate himself. But you have not produced that law. The only passage which looks anything like it, is that in Ezek. 18: 31. But, properly understood, that passage is not a requisition upon sinners to create for themselves the new man, but rather to manifest the spirit and conduct of renewed persons. It is parallel with Eph. 4: 23, &c., where the Apostle charges it upon Christians to be renewed in the spirit of their mind, and to put on the new man, grounding this charge upon the presumption that they had already learned Christ, heard him, and been taught by him. (See also Rom. 12: 2.) So the persons whom Ezekiel addresses were professors of religion, and his exhortation to them was grounded upon the presumption, that their profession had not been kept up for so many years upon a false foundation, but that they had from the beginning recognized the necessity of being inwardly holy.

The anathemas of heaven are thundered against men for their sins, that is, their transgressions of divine law. If there is no command to be born again by a special divine influence, there can be no such thing as refusing to be thus born. There is an indispensable necessity for the New Birth, in order that men may not continue to sin; but the anathemas of heaven are pronounced against them, simply for their infractions of divine law. The truth is, sinners are never consulted whether they will be born again, or not. It is a matter about which God does as he pleases. Sinners are put upon their choice, whether they will keep God's commandments or no; they are required to choose between serving him and not serving him; between exercising faith, and continuing in unbelief; between repenting and persisting in impenitence. But in no instance is it submitted to their choice, whether to be regenerated or not. Matt. 23: 37, which you have quoted, is not at all to your purpose. Our Saviour does not say that he had often tried to regenerate the children of Jerusalem, and they refused; but that he had often manifested his willingness to gather them under his protecting care, and they [the governing authorities in church and state] "would not."

The distinction between regeneration and conversion you cannot understand. I will refer you to a passage, which may possibly help you a little. "And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat. But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." Luke 22: 31, 32. Now you have said, that "the distinction between regeneration and conversion finds no sanction in the philosophy of the human mind, or the teachings of the Scriptures. The terms are not of frequent use in the Bible, but when used they are of synonymous import." Well, if this be so, Peter was regenerated twice! For it was before this, that he had confessed Jesus to be the Christ, the son of the living God: and whosoever confesseth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God. 1 John 5: 1. Matt. 16: 17. He was certainly a regenerate man before, and if he afterwards became unregenerate again, Christ's prayer that his faith might not fail, was not answered. I infer, therefore, that there is a distinction between regeneration and conversion, whether you can understand it or not. Perhaps, if you ponder the passage a while, you may discover that conversion means simply a turning about, or change of course, without necessarily implying any thing as to the state of the heart from which it proceeds: while regeneration refers to the state of the heart, as the foundation of all those turnings from wrong actions to right ones, and from error to truth, which are so many conversions. Regeneration is a passing from death to life—a being made alive to God—a resurrection; conversion is that course of conduct, on the part of the creature, which is the result of a resurrection to newness of life. The Apostle recognizes the distinction very clearly in Col. 3: 1—"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above," &c. The course of conduct to which he exhorts the Collosians is a conversion of their affections from earth to heaven; the principle, or foundation of such a conversion, he finds in their being "risen with Christ"—their regeneration.

"The comparison of the regeneration of the sinner to the resurrection of Lazarus, proves nothing, for want of analogy in the cases." Why not go a little farther, and say, 'The comparison which the Holy Spirit makes of the restoration of the whole house of Israel to the resurrection of dry bones, proves nothing, for want of analogy in the cases?' Ezek. 37: 1, &c. Was the dead body of Lazarus "under the law of necessity?" So were the bones in the valley of vision. Nevertheless, the Holy Spirit seems to have considered their revivification a suitable illustration of the restoration of the Israelites, moral agents though they were. The resurrection of Lazarus proves all that I intended to prove by it; or rather, illustrates what I intended, for I did not cite it as proving any thing. You, and all of like faith with yourself, maintain that, if it require an exertion of divine power to make the dead sinner alive, like that which was employed in raising Christ from the dead, "there is no necessity of preaching to him. The injunction, 'Turn ye, for why will ye die?' must fall like idle nonsense on his ear." And you follow up this style of reasoning with a pathetic lamentation over the "many poor souls that have stumbled into hell, waiting for God to come, and do what he has never promised to do, but which he most clearly commands the sinner to do himself." I, on the other hand, believe that there is no more absurdity in preaching to sinners thus dead, than there was in calling upon the dead Lazarus to come forth; or than there was in the call of Ezekiel upon the dry bones to hear the word of the Lord. Both would have been absurd to the last degree, had not divine power accompanied the word. And I am quite ready to admit, nay, to insist upon it as a prime article of my faith, that the preaching of the gospel would be worse than useless, were it not that He who told us to preach it, said, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world." He has promised that the word shall not return to Him void. He has promised to accompany the preaching of it with the Spirit—the quickening Spirit. It is this promise which encourages my faith. Without it, I should as soon think of going into a grave yard, and calling upon the dead to rise. I preach, I call upon dead sinners to rise, and walk in newness of life, because I believe that the Life-giving Spirit is present to accompany the word with his almighty power.

And now about this "waiting for God to come"—this delay on the part of the sinner, which (you say) is countenanced by the doctrine I advocate, let me offer a word. "To tell him that he must wait, and first have his constitution re-created, before he can possibly do any thing but oppose God, is to tell him the greatest, and most abominable and ruinous of falsehoods." And in this ad captandum style you go on, winding up very beautifully with, "O orthodoxy, falsely so called, how false and absurd thou art! What an enemy of God—what a stumbling block to man! What a leaven of unrighteousness and of hell is such a dogma as this!" Were the author of such language a man of cool, dispassionate judgment, I should at once charge him with resorting to sheer, downright, unmitigated misrepresentation. Such insinuations are wholly unsupported by facts. You may have heard it said, that a sinner must first be made alive by the Spirit, before he can do any thing spiritually good; but you never heard any one say that he must wait, and do nothing but oppose God, till that work had been performed. Neither is it a necessary consequence of the doctrine which you oppose. Man's duty to love God, and keep his commandments, is not affected by regenerating grace. It is as clearly the duty of men, who never receive regenerating grace, to love God, as it is of those who receive it. It is as clearly and certainly the duty of devils, who are wholly beyond the reach of grace, as it is of men who enjoy the probation of the gospel. Their relation to God, as the creatures of his hand, makes it their duty; and if God does not choose to do any thing for them in the way of grace, that does not alter their duty in the least. But, aside from this, there is a view of the case which you seem to overlook entirely. It is this; that there is a clear distinction between the order of nature and the order of time. In the order of nature, God must exist, before he can have a purpose; the sun must exist, before it can shine. But in the order of time, God never existed without a purpose, and the sun never existed when it did not shine. So, according to natural order, man must be possessed of the spiritual nature, before he can do any thing spiritually good. But as his actual performance of spiritual duties is coeval with the work of regeneration upon his soul, following instantaneously, without the interval of any duration of time, so his waiting to feel and be conscious of his regeneration first, is an absurdity. He must go about his duty at once: and it is the more necessary that he should do so, because it is the only way in which he can ascertain whether he has been made partaker of the new nature, or not. For as the object of regeneration is to bring the faculties into use in the service of God, so it is by the use of the faculties that the creature discovers whether that work has been performed upon him, or not. So that to wait, till he knows whether he is regenerate, before doing his duty, is to reverse the true order of things. You will, therefore, please to bear in mind, hereafter, when you hear any one telling sinners that they must be born again, before they can do any thing spiritually good, that such a form of expression always has reference to the order of nature, and not to duration or time.

I wish that time and space permitted me to enlarge on this point, but having written at great length, I must forbear. I will only add that, if your doctrine concerning the nature of regeneration is correct, I do not see that complete regeneration can be affirmed of any body. It is a work that is more or less complete, according as one's progress is greater or less in the divine life. You say it is "simply a passing from a state of disobedience to one of obedience, and that this transmutation constitutes the whole of regeneration." Of course, some are more regenerate than others, being more eminently devoted in their lives; and the same individual is more regenerate at one time than another! Perhaps you can escape this absurdity, but I know not how.

CALIFORNIA CORRESPONDENCE.

PLACERVILLE, California, April, 26th 1853.

The chill of winter is past; spring has come, with a somewhat balmy atmosphere; and we have a blue sky over our heads, while underneath and around us the valleys and hills are dressed with nature's gayest flowers. The boughs of the trees, and the little bushes, send out sweet music from nature's happy songsters. April here is doubtless one of the pleasantest months of the year. The rainy season is apparently over, the small streams are beginning to run down, while the unusually deep snows upon the adjacent mountains are rapidly disappearing, and only here and there may be seen in the distance one of old Sierra Nevada's whitened peaks.

The California gold-hunters are leaving here in large companies, for the mountains in the north, in hope of finding good summer diggings; but alas for the multitude! if it should rain or snow, they will doubtless suffer in the extreme. A large proportion of the mining country north, say three hundred miles, and about thirty in width, and about 150 miles south, is literally dug up. Seven-tenths of the mining now done is in old diggings. But the fever is up, and people will come. Somebody made a pile, and I am as smart as he; and not only that, just see what heavy shipments are made to the United States and other portions of the globe. The wise will remember, when they figure up their chances in California, that it is difficult to ascertain the almost innumerable multitude who are engaged in mining. Men of all nations are here; the east, the west, the north, and the south, send here thousands; so also the islands of the sea, and some tribes of Indians are now engaged in mining.

The climate of California I consider rather unfavorable to health and longevity, especially as it regards the male part of the population. Natives living near and east of the coast range, are a dwarfish and feeble race, and usually short-lived. Their average weight is about 100 lbs. The females are usually the largest. The grave-yards of Placerville present a most melancholy and heart-rending sight. One of them I visited last September, and a few days since I made it a second visit. I scarcely recognized it as the same. There were scores of newly-made graves, two of which were just dug to receive the mortal remains of two young men who had fallen victims to the small pox, a disease now prevailing generally throughout the California mines. These men, I was informed, have wives in the Atlantic States, whose hearts are doubtless filled with woman's affection, and who are anxiously waiting the speedy return of their husbands. There are four grave-yards in the immediate vicinity of Placerville, containing the bodies of many whose names even will soon be remembered no more forever, there being no name, in many instances, only a stake or rough stone temporarily placed at the head and foot of the graves. As I gazed upon these newly-made heaps of earth, an almost death-like stillness appeared to pervade nature, while a faint sigh whispered in the passing breeze, They are dead. Yes, cold and silent they sleep, but dream no more of California's glittering dust. The grave-yard never before appeared shrouded in so much gloom. Heretofore I could always see in it something interesting, though solemn. I thought, if it were possible, I should prefer dying twice at home with loved ones, to once in California. As I stood musing, my eyes surveying the pines that clothe the distant hills, and the old spruce that overhangs the mountain crags, I thought, No wonder good old Jacob gave charge concerning his bones.

THE REVOLUTION IN CHINA.

The revolutionary movements now going on in China can not fail to excite a deep and lively interest in every philanthropist and Christian. The Tartar dynasty, which has swayed that vast empire for more than two hundred years, seems to be waning, while the rebellion, headed by native Chinamen, is manifestly gaining strength and importance. Whichever party shall finally triumph, the result must be favorable to the interests of foreigners and to the spread of the Gospel. Should the rebels succeed, the inevitable weakness of their new government will undoubtedly lead them to seek more intimate alliance with foreign powers, especially British and American. On the other hand, should the rebels be subdued, the old government will probably have experienced such a shock as to make it anxious to secure the friendship of foreigners for the future. In either case, that exclusiveness which has so long characterized the Celestials, must be greatly modified, and perhaps the whole Empire may be thrown open to commerce and Christianity.

Thus far, foreign nations have shown no disposition to interfere in the controversy. The prevailing sentiment seems to be, that it is best to leave the Chinese to settle their own disputes; at least, that there should be no premature interference, so as to risk the future opportunity, which is almost certain to arise, of mediating effectually, and for the benefit of the world at large, by the extension of facilities for commercial and general intercourse with the Chinese throughout the vast empire. The British and American Governments will probably have vessels at Shanghae to protect the persons and property of their citizens, but farther than this they will take no action at present.

In respect to the causes of the rebellion, and the change which seems most likely to be effected in the Government, the North China Herald remarks, that corruption is the prominent feature of the present Government, and its officials, the Mandarins; that there is no justice, law, or protection, except by chance; and that it is, in fact, a matter of wonder that a nation so industrious and intelligent should have held together so long as it has under such a lax rule. The ostensible object of the rebel chief, or king as he styles himself, is to redress existing evils; and the general belief among the Chinamen is, that the war is in reality with the officials, the Mandarins. The people, therefore, are not in dread of the rebel army, and are easily led to coöperate with it, passively if not actively.

The North China Herald contains copies of two proclamations, issued by rebel chiefs. One purports to be from Hung, Superintendent of Military Affairs. He pronounces the Mandarins and Government officers throughout the empire as no better than wolves and tigers, and the Emperor himself as vicious and sottish, driving honest people to a distance, while he admits the most worthless of mankind to his presence, selling offices to them, and depressing virtuous talent. He assures the people that they need not be alarmed at the approach of the grand army, which is assembled like clouds to root out the plundering and wolfish Mandarins. Merchants, mechanics, agriculturists, &c., it is said, may pursue peacefully their occupations; they will be unmolested; but the rich must have stores in readiness to sustain the troops, keeping an account of their contributions, which will be paid for hereafter.

The other proclamation is from Yang-seu-ts'hing, who calls himself the especially appointed general of the grand army engaged in sweeping away the Tartars. He says he has put the troops in motion for the punishment of the oppressor, and that in every place the enemy have dispersed before him like scattered rubbish; that he has put to death rapacious mandarins and corrupt magistrates, but has not injured a single individual of the people. Honest inhabitants, he says, have nothing to do but stick up the word "Shun" (obedient) over their doors, and they will be safe. He promises, when Nanking is taken, that all property belonging to temples, monasteries and priests of Budha and Taou, and to keepers of brothels and gambling houses, shall be distributed among the poor of the villages; and announces that he is seizing the priests of Budha and Taou throughout the country and putting them to death.

The following brief outline of the movement, from the beginning, will interest our readers at the present time:—

The rebellion broke out in the spring of 1850, in the south-western province of the Central Kingdom, Kuang Tong and Kuang Si, where the descendants of the ancient dynasty, called in the language of the country Tai Ming, had been in power since the latter part of the seventeenth century. The object of the insurgents was to drive out the reigning house, and call a native dynasty to the throne. The name of Tai Ming was associated with sacred recollections in the minds of the people; still the inhabitants of the distant mountain regions and the members of the secret societies, who were beyond the reach of the Imperial spies, with a feeling of proud self-reliance, calling themselves Ming Schin. The leader of the movement was Tschu Kin Tah, a real or pretended descendant of Tai Ming. The administration of the new ruler was honored with the title of Tien Te, or Celestial Virtue. Tschu is the proper family name. It is now just five hundred years since (1352) the peasant Tschu Juen Tschang revolted against the barbarous Mongols, and drove them to Karakarum, the ancient metropolis of Tschinggis Chakan (47° 32′ 24″ North lat. and 13° 21′ 30″ West long. from Pekin,) situated between the rivers Orchran and Tamir. The dynasty itself, according to a traditional custom of the Central Kingdom, was called Heu Ming, afterwards Ming. In the third year of Tien Te it is written Heu Ming. A short time ago Tien Te held a great festival at the Kuang, at which all the Ming generals made their appearance, paying homage to their ruler on their knees. The celebration continued for three days. A great number of oxen and swine were sacrificed in honor of the ancestors of the people and of Keng Tse.

Next to Heu Ming, the most influential man in the rebellion is Hong Siu Tsiuen, who is designated by the title of honor Tai Ping, Mighty Prince of Peace. Hong is of a slender build, with an open, expressive face, and a sandy beard. Under him there are four generals called according to their local position, commanders of the East, West, North, and South. The two ministers of State are Fong Schi Tschang and Schitaekai. The latter is a man of erudition, and composes all the numerous proclamations of the Ming people.

The Government is completely organized, both in the civil and military departments. Before the reception of a province or a city, the different officers are appointed, who at once enter upon the discharge of their duties. Mandarins of the first rank wear yellow scarfs and yellow turbans; they alone receive the title of Taschin, Excellency. Those of the next ranks wear red, green, and embroidered scarfs, as well as other badges of their position in the new beureaucracy of the Central Kingdom. Persons with red and black scarfs are commissioned to administer an oath of allegiance to the people. Among themselves and in the conquered provinces, the Ming preserve strict order and discipline. Wherever they enter, a placard of red paper is posted on the doors of the public female schools, containing these words: "Young women live here; whoever enters and behaves himself improperly will be beheaded."

Upon the advance of the army into Hu Kuang, General Kno announced to the people, April 2, 1852, that it was an unchangeable law of nature, that the dynasty which has lost the love of the people must fall to the ground. That of Mandschu has never arrived at merit and dignity; offices are arbitrarily conferred, and the complaints of the people are neglected. Our Celestial Son Tien To for three years has fought the oppressors of the people. From compassion toward the virtuous and learned people of Hu Kuang, he hastens to deliver them from the rapacious hands of civil and military officers.

Similar proclamations are made to the people, with the advance of the insurgent army. A full catalogue of grievances is recited, and large promises are made of a "good time coming" by the triumph of the new dynasty.

THE CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

DE RUYTER, June 17th, 1853.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I wish, through the medium of the Recorder, to say to the churches of the Central Association, that at the recent session there should have been presented an order in the hands of Eld. Elias Burdick, for services done and acknowledged the year before. The Treasurer was not in possession of the knowledge of the existence of the order, or of means to cancel it. As this has been assessed upon the churches, those who have not paid can ascertain their proportion by referring to the printed minutes of last year; and they are requested to forward the same, as early as practicable to the Treasurer, as it is very much needed by him to whom it is due.

I would farther state, that at the recent session at Scott, a collection was taken amounting to $28 07, for the general purposes of the Missionary Society, which is subject to the order of the Treasurer of that Society.

JOHN MAXSON, Treas. Central Ass'n.

A WORD TO PARENTS.

You have an important trust committed to you; it is the immortal interest of your children. On your early exertions depend, in a great measure, future happiness or misery. I know that you whose lives are hid with Christ in God, must and do feel it to be an important trust, and are asking yourselves what you can do to secure the happiness of your children. If the Bible is not explicit enough on this point of duty, God grant to teach you by his Spirit the course you should pursue. He gives you these pledges of affection, and says, Train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Now, dear brother or sister, look around you, and see if those immortals exhibit the effects of such training. If they do, it is well; if they do not, on whom will the responsibility rest? Remember the curse that fell upon the house of Eli, because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not. My heart sickens at the picture. Would I could turn from it, and feel acquit; but I cannot, while "my ear is pained and my soul is sick" of hearing the youth of our land, children of Christian parents, profane the name of their father's God, speak irreverently of religion, and debase themselves by indulging in vile conversation. What is the cause of this? Were the restraints of family government brought to bear on them in season? Was veneration for parents, for religion, for the Creator, inculcated with the first openings of the mind? If this was their early training, can it be that it is so soon perverted? Do you say, It is too late—they are past controlling? Some may be, but not all. There are young and tender minds around us, that may be, that must be cultivated, or they will founder among the rocks and quicksands of vice and dissipation. I know we cannot convert our children, but we can inculcate such moral principles in their minds as will give permanence and principle to their character, when God shall see fit to bless the means used for their conversion. Christian parents, let us look well to our duty in this matter, lest our children rise up at the judgment and condemn us.

EAST NEW JERSEY ASSOCIATION.—We learn from the Watchman and Reflector, that the Twelfth Anniversary of the East New Jersey Baptist Association was held on Tuesday and Wednesday, June 7 and 8, at Scotch Plains, N. J. The Baptist church in that place is one of the branches of the old Piscataway, and was organized in 1747. Its first pastor was Rev. Benjamin Miller, of whom his friend, Rev. John Gano, remarked, "Never did I esteem a ministering brother so much as I did Mr. Miller, nor feel so sensibly a like bereavement, as that which I sustained in his death." Rev. Dr. James Manning, the first President of Brown University, was a son of one of the constituents of this church, and was in the same place converted to Christ, baptized, licensed, and ordained to the ministry of the Gospel. The annual letter felicitously welcomed the Association as the representatives of "all the mothers, daughters, grand-daughters, and sisters of the church." The letters to the Association from the churches indicate a measure of prosperity, although the number of baptisms in the thirty-eight churches is only 171. The contributions to benevolent objects considerably exceed those of any former year, and amount to $1,123 24. The paucity of conversions excited attention, and Rev. Dr. Hague, of the committee on Resolutions, recommended to the churches the importance of a special season of prayer, for a more copious descent of Divine grace. The letter from First Plainfield deplored the want of harmony and brotherly kindness in some localities, consequent on the exciting discussions growing out of the Bible question.

THE SCRIPTURES IN CHINESE.—Rev. Dr. Medhurst, the veteran missionary of the London Society in China, who has been many years engaged, in company with Dr. Bridgman and others, in translating the Scriptures into the Chinese language, announces the accomplishment of the task. The moral value of this event transcends all estimate. It opens the Divine Word to millions of readers, and dates the beginning of the Christianization of one-third of the human race. Dr. Medhurst's letter concludes with this reference to existing troubles:—

"We cannot help considering it a remarkable providence, that our translation committee should have brought their labors to a close just at the time when either we may be called to 'take up our carriages' and remove to a place of safety, or to enter upon the wider field of missionary labor opening before us, far exceeding the most earnest expectations and warmest wishes of the friends of China."

DR. KING IN GREECE.—Mr. Bryant, Editor of the N. Y. Evening Post, writes that while at Athens he was curious to inform himself of the controversy which has been going on between the Greeks and Dr. Jonas King, the missionary. The following is the result of the inquiry:—

"At present the triumph seems to be on the side of Dr. King. The Greeks are in a fair way to learn from him the lesson of religious toleration. He is under an ecclesiastical curse, and nobody can even speak to him without incurring the censure of the church; yet everybody now speaks to him; he is exiled for his religious opinions, yet he remains at Athens, and preaches every Sunday, without any reserve in the expression of his religious views. He has behaved throughout the whole affair with the greatest intrepidity, and, if we may judge from appearances, has brought his adversaries at last to the conclusion, that their best policy is to let him alone. I admire his courage, and rejoice at his success."

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.—This institution, located in the city of New York, is one of the most thorough and liberally conducted theological institutions in this country. Its anniversary was held last week, when an address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Wilson, and the following young men graduated:—C. W. Adams, P. M. Bartlett, Elias L. Boing, John H. Brodt, Levi P. Crawford, Richard C. Dunn, Edwin Goodell, George H. Gould, T. A. Hazen, Henry G. Jessup, V. LeRoy Lockwood, Samuel Loomis, Charles F. Martin, Warren Mayo, John McCampbell, James J. McMahon, A. B. Peffers, John Reed, Joseph E. Roy, A. B. Swift, S. Uhlfelder, and Theodore F. White.

THE "OLD BREWERY."—A few months ago this name pointed to a large building at the Five Points, in New York, which swarmed with thieves, gamblers, and prostitutes, and was the scene of untold and untellable wickedness and suffering. Soon after the Ladies' Home Missionary Society commenced operations in that vicinity, they purchased the site, demolished the building, and erected in its place a commodious house for their missions, schools, &c. Last week this new Mission House was dedicated by religious service, of an appropriate and interesting character. Thus one of satan's seats is turned into a place of prayer and praise to God.

PLANS FOR CHURCH EDIFICES.—The public generally will be much indebted to the Congregationalists for a forth-coming "Book of Plans for Church Edifices." After the fifty thousand dollars proposed by the Albany Convention, to aid in building churches at the West, had been secured, the Central Committee set about obtaining from the best architects of the country Plans for buildings adapted to both city and country—a work more comprehensive and valuable than ever before published. These Plans will be published about the first of August.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.—Mr. Lowell Mason has been giving lectures on Sacred Music in Newark, N. J. The Newark Daily Advertiser, in reporting one of his lectures says :—

He strongly urged more attention to congregational singing. This prevailed in ancient primitive times, was an especial object of Luther's care, and was practiced in the ancient English Church. Knox and Calvin had their congregations singing in unison. He wanted congregations to sing, although they could not come nearer the tune than merely reading the hymn. Here, under his direction, the audience sang some verses to the 'Tallis Evening Chant.' These remarks were continued at some length. He condemned the prevalent slowness of music, and stated that Dundee, Old Hundred, &c., were formerly sung much quicker than now rendered. Musical expression must be in a great measure lost in congregational singing, but a grander effect is produced, that of volume and unison of devotion. The audience separated by joining in a doxology to the tune of "Old Hundred."

EMIGRANTS FOR LIBERIA.—One hundred and thirty emigrants for Liberia embarked at Savannah, June 10th, of whom ninety-six were from Tennessee, twenty-seven from Savannah, and the remainder from Augusta, Milledgeville, and Roswell in Georgia. Rev. R. R. Gurley, who was present at the embarkation, gives the following account of several of the emigrants :—

"Among the emigrants from Savannah are several members of Rev. Dr. Preston's Church, (one of them, Shearman, for many years sexton of that Church,) who, with his wife and six children, has received liberty, in great part through contributions from New York and vicinity. Mr. Wood, formerly of this State, but now a merchant of Savannah, gave a servant woman permission to accompany her husband, who was also a member of Dr. Preston's Church. Two other women of worthy character, (one of whom has had a husband for some years in Liberia,) were enabled to secure funds, in a few days, from their white and colored friends in Savannah, to pay the price for their redemption, and joyfully sailed with their friends for the 'Province of Freedom.' Rev. Mr. Pratt, of Roswell, gave liberty to a servant and his family. The former has been a licensed preacher of the Gospel in the Presbyterian Church, and now embarks for Liberia in the true spirit of a Christian Missionary."

HOW MRS. STOWE IS TO USE HER MONEY.—In reply to an article going the rounds of the papers, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher states in the Independent, that it is not true that any part of the avails received by Mrs. Stowe, from the sales of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," or the "Key," are to be used in building a house for Prof. Stowe and family at Andover. The dwellings for the Professors are furnished by the Corporation. The avails are to be appropriated for the establishment of an institution for the education of the colored race in this country, as also will be the contributions Mrs. Stowe receives in Europe.

REV. DR. SHARP, of Boston, who has been an invalid for some months, was at Baltimore on the 10th inst., in a very feeble condition, so much so as to excite fears that he would never be able to leave that city. A correspondent of the Christian Watchman and Reflector, who had been with him in his sickness, says :

"Never will the impressions received in that sick chamber be effaced from the mind of the writer. The faithful soldier of the cross of Christ for half a century—struggling in the contest without fear, now about to meet the last enemy of man, far away from home, the companion of his long life weeping by his bedside—faintly exclaims, 'Whatever may be the result, it is all right, all right, all right.'

REV. J. W. MORTON left New York a few weeks ago, by steamer Glasgow, on a business visit to Paris. Letters were received from him last week, announcing his arrival at Glasgow, after a pleasant voyage. Among the passengers by the Glasgow was Rev. Mr. Gonsalves, of Hamilton, N. Y.

HYMN BOOKS.—A new edition of the Hymn Book (Christian Psalmody) has just been issued. It is printed on superfine calendered and sized paper, very thin, and bound flexible so as to adapt it to the pocket. It weighs about one third as much as the first edition, and about half as much as the second.

THE MINUTES of the Eastern and Central Associations will be issued in a few days. Parcels will be put up for the churches entitled to them, and sent by the first opportunity. Let the churches send for them when they can.

ELD. STILLMAN COON has removed from Southampton, Ill., to Milton, Rock Co., Wisconsin, and requests his correspondents to address him at the latter place.

ORDINATION.—By a letter from Eld. V. Hull, of Milton, Wis., we learn that on Sabbath-day, May 28th, Bro. A. W. Coon was ordained to the work of the Gospel Ministry.

NEW MEETING-HOUSE.—The first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Alfred is building a new meeting-house at Alfred Center.

Rev. J. G. Oncken's recovery from the injuries he received at Norwalk is so slow, that he has been obliged to disappoint many who have looked for an early opportunity of seeing and hearing him, by suspending all public engagements. He has been examined by three physicians, who decide that the injury to his ancle is very serious, it having been badly strained, though without any fracture that can now be detected; that if sufficient rest is allowed him, recovery may be looked for in from three to six months, though absolute rest may be necessary for a much shorter period only; that he should retire into the country for at least a month, after which his ability to labor can be better judged; and that a continuance in public efforts at present might postpone his recovery indefinitely.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Journal of Commerce gives the following statement, showing the great destitution of churches in the lower part of New York. The six lower wards contain a population of 107,361 souls, with only 26 churches; while fifeeen years ago, (with a smaller population, the number of churches was 46, showing that 21 have been given up. Within the past year, four other churches bordering on those wards, and receiving a large part of their congregations from them, have also been demolished or discontinued.

Rev. Dr. Nelson, of Leicester, Mass., now traveling in Europe, writes to the Puritan Recorder from Pisa. After referring to the leaning tower and the Cathedral near by, he says: "But a little distance from this, is the Baptistery; a circular building of great beauty. The interior is filled with fonts and altars, of Grecian sculpture, exquisitely wrought. Much of it is of the finest Parian marble."

The noiseless operations of the London Tract Society may be gathered from the statement that during the past twelve months, the books and tracts circulated have amounted to the immense number of twenty-seven millions; and that, since its foundation, six hundred millions of publications have been issued from its presses, in not fewer than twelve different languages.

Eighteen of the students of Palmyra Academy, Missouri, have united with the church; of the 90 students of West Alexander Academy, Penn., 18 have made a profession of religion; and of the 50 students of Blairstown Academy, N. J., 5 have united with the church. These Academies are all under the care of Presbyterians.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Managers of the Methodist Missionary Society, it was determined to re-organize the mission to New Mexico, and to send an increase of laborers to Santa Fé. The increase of receipts by this Society is reported to be 25 per cent. over those of the previous year.

The new University at Urbana, Ohio, is established, and is to be sustained, by the disciples of Emanuel Swedenborg. This, we believe, is the first educational establishment in the country, of the rank of a University, devoted to the propagation of Swedenborgianism.

At a late Conference of the Mormons in Liverpool, Eng., 160 elders, 21 priests, 28 teachers, 67 deacons, and 2,232 members, were reported. The Mormon paper published in that city says that it circulates 23,000 copies.

A high compliment has just been paid to American scholarship, by the appointment of Mr. Hall, a graduate of Harvard College, in 1846, to the post of Anglo-Sanscrit Professor in the Benares College, British India.

Rev. E. L. Abbott arrived at Boston from Burmah, via England, on Thursday, the 9th inst. His health was much improved by his voyage to England, but has been less favorable since.

A gentleman of New York has pledged himself to give, during the coming year, $1000 for the support at Hamilton College of ten needy students having in view the ministry.

Forty missionaries, male and female, have been sent to Ningpo, since the ports of China were opened in 1843, by different English and American Societies. Of these, only one male and female missionary have died, and only two families have been compelled to retire by sickness.

The Society for promoting Christian Morality (England) has published a new version of the Bible in French, the labors of several eminent French Protestant scholars and theologians. They have published, the last year, scriptures in Arabic, Coptic, Greek, Spanish, and Ojibwa.

Rev. A. D. Gillette, of New York city, has been selected to preach the annual sermon before the Society for Missionary Inquiry, and Rev. E. L. Magoon, to deliver the annual oration before the Literary Societies of Brown University, at the Commencement in September next.

Intelligence has just been received at the Baptist Missionary Rooms in Boston, that Rev G. Dauble, missionary of the Am. Baptist Missionary Union in Assam, died of cholera, March 23, at Nowgong.

M. Madiai, and his wife, passed through Pont-du-Var a few days ago, on their way from Hyeres to Nice, from whence they were to proceed to take up their residence at Geneva.

Mr. Robinson, the translator to the Bengal government, (India,) is said to have in the press a Bengalee translation of "Robinson Crusoe," with numerous wood-cut illustrations.

Rev. E. P. Hastings and wife, and Rev. Joseph Scudder and wife, and a native Hindoo woman, have taken passage in the ship Niobe, at Boston, for Madras. They are connected with the Madras mission.

Father Gabet, missionary in Thibet, along with father Huc, the narrative of whose travels has obtained such world-wide fame, died at Rio Janeiro, of yellow fever, on the 3d of March last.

The late Garrat N. Bleeker, of New York, left in his will $12,000 to Madison University. He had before given $3,000 to the same Institution.

Rev. C. C. Williams, of Honesdale, Pa., has accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the Second Baptist church in Plainfield, N. J.

A grand Temperance Demonstration is to be held in Waterford, Erie Co., Pa., on the 4th of July next. Several eminent speakers are expected to be present on the occasion.

There are 13,362 communicants of the Baptist Church in New Jersey, as just ascertained by reports of their condition and prospects.

David Hunt, an extensive Mississippi planter, has sent the Colonization Society a donation of $5,000 in addition to his annual gift of $1,000.

On the evening of June 14th, the Senate of New York passed the Maine Liquor Law, with a vote submitting it to the people. Ayes 17, Noes 13.

The Anniversary of Shiloh Academy occurs on the 4th of July. Rev. A. D. Gillette is to deliver the Annual Address.

European News.

The steamer Asia, with European dates to June 4th, arrived at New York June 16th.

Commodore Vanderbilt's steamship, North Star, arrived at Southampton on Wednesday, June 1, after a passage of ten days eight hours and forty minutes from New York. The Star will remain at Southampton for ten days or so, and will be free to the inspection of the English public.

Turkey is making extensive preparations for war, there being no further hope of negotiation.

Two brothers, named Reynolds, sons of a Surgeon at Stoke Newington, had carried off each the first prize for English poetry, at Cambridge and Oxford Universities, on the same day, an unusual incident in one family.

Five thousand charity children, from fifty-seven schools, held their anniversary with religious services at St. Paul's Cathedral, London, on the 2d inst.

AMERICAN SILK.—At Newport, Kentucky, opposite Cincinnati, there is an unpretending silk factory, which will hereafter be memorable in the history of American industry. It is carried on by Messrs. Jones & Wilson, employs some half-dozen or more laborers, with five looms and some 150 spindles, consuming annually several hundred weight of raw silk. The manufacture is directed by Mr. Wilson, while Mr. Jones, who is of the Quaker persuasion, and is universally known as Friend Jones, sells the products. These are pocket-handkerchiefs, cravats, vestings, and plain and plaid dress silks. As far as possible, raw silk of American growth is used in the factory, but the imported article has to be relied on to make out a supply. The raw silk raised in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, when tolerable care is used, is not surpassed by any in the world, being equal to the best Italian (which is all consumed in Europe) and better than any imported into this country. This is owing to advantages of soil and climate, which impart peculiar luster and strength of fiber, and cannot fail, in time, to make the United States one of the greatest silk-growing countries in the world. For the best native-reeled silk they pay $5 to $5 50 per lb., while the price of the best imported does not exceed $4 50. Mr Jones has been engaged in this enterprise some eleven years, and has pursued it steadily through the discouragements incident to the beginning of a novel manufacture. His means not allowing of great expansion, he has himself gone about retailing his wares, and enlisting friends for the enterprise. [Tribune.

WOOL IN CENTRAL NEW YORK.—The Editor of the Syracuse Central New Yorker, in his paper of June 16, gives some account of journeyings among the farmers in Manlius, Fayettville, Camillus, Orville, &c. In these rural retreats he found the farmers busy at gathering the new clip. "Some had already sold to agents about the country, and the extent of the business in the city may be inferred from the fact, that one house has taken in about 15,000 lbs. The operations in the market, however, are much embarrassed and limited, owing to the discrepancy of opinions between buyers and sellers. The growers of wool in the country think they sold their wool too early last year, because prices advanced after they had sold. They think the same thing may occur this season; but such will not be the fact, because the same causes do not exist. The prices now offered for wool are full ten cents higher per pound than last year. There is no chance for advances on the prices now offered for wool. We quote the prices as follows in our market :—Common grades, 35 to 40 cents; 3-4 and full blood, 45 to 50 cents."

DOINGS OF RUM.—The N. Y. Tribune of June 17th says: One murderer was executed in this city yesterday; another is to die next Friday; eight or ten are in our City Prison awaiting trial on the same charge; one has been convicted, but hopes for a new trial; and still another is added to the list this morning. A Mrs. Sally, an Irishwoman, recently residing at No. 242 Mulberry-st., died yesterday at the Hospital from (as the Jury say) the effects of maltreatment by her husband. Both husband and wife were the degraded slaves of rum, and both were frequently drunk. Already there have been six executions in this city within a year, and Neary (if hung) will be the seventh. Fitzgerald shot his wife, Grunzig poisoned his wife, Neary beat his wife's head to pieces, Clark killed a policeman, Saul and Howlett killed a watchman, and Stookey killed a Negro. This is a fearful catalogue, and it grows rank and tall and strong, and branches out upon every side, for its roots are coiled in the distillery, and watered by the rum glass.

COLD WATER STEAM ENGINE.—Yesterday afternoon (says the Cincinnati Gazette) we visited the machine shop of Messrs. Burge & Johnston, to witness the performance of a new Engine styled as above, and recently invented by Mr. Edward D. Tippett. The steam is produced without boilers, by simply injecting cold water into generators. The amount of steam required to force out or return the piston rod is made by the introduction to the influence of the fire at each moment of precisely the quantity of water needed, thus doing away with the necessity of boilers. It is claimed that there is no possibility of an explosion, that greater power is obtained and less room occupied for the necessary machinery. The water falls into the engine, being first raised by a force pump into a reservoir situated above the engine, and thence inducted down as wanted. The engine is a singularly constructed piece of mechanism, both in appearance and mode of operating.

COST OF INTEMPERANCE IN OHIO.—At a recent Temperance Convention in Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, Judge Blickensderfen said that he had now been Prosecuting Attorney eighteen months, and that on close examination he found that thirty-nine indictments out of every forty were caused by the use of intoxicating drinks. Last Court fifty-four indictments were returned—but only one would have been returned if it had not been for the use of ardent spirits. If it had not been for the cases arising out of the use of liquor, the Grand Jury would not have been in session two hours, instead of a number of days. But one witness would have been present. He had investigated the matter carefully, and found that the law-suits, &c., growing out of the use of liquor, had cost the tax-payers of the county, during the eighteen months he has been in office, over eight thousand dollars—which is more money that was paid last year for all other county purposes.

SUMMARY.

The frigate Leander, having on board Lord Ellesmere, with his family, and other persons of distinction, arrived in our harbor on Friday, June 10. Lord E. comes as a Commissioner from the British government to inspect and make report upon the approaching Exhibition at the Crystal Palace. Other Commissioners from Great Britain are already in this country, and several are at present in the city. Among these are Sir Charles Lyell, the well-known geologist, Mr. Dilke, editor of the London Atheneum, Prof. Wilson and Messrs. Wallace and Whitwork. As the Exhibition is not yet in a condition for inspection, Lord Ellesmere will employ his time in a visit to Niagara Falls and Canada.

Mr. Randall, the Secretary of State of New York, has obtained possession of very valuable additions to our Revolutionary History. Among them is the Treasonable Correspondence found concealed in Maj. Andre's Boot when that officer was searched by his captors, Paulding, Williams and Van Wort. The papers consist of an enumeration of the number and disposition of American troops at West Point, and a description of the fortifications, with suggestions in regard to weak and exposed points. There is also the Pass from Gen. Arnold, under which Andre, as "Mr. John Smith," was traveling.

The Troy Whig learns that the dwelling of Mr. A. V Cropsey, in the town of Poestenkill, Rensselaer County, was burned to the ground on Saturday night, after the family had retired—that a son aged eight years perished in the flames, and that another aged five years was so badly burned that he has since died. Mr. and Mrs. Cropsey escaped with great difficulty through a window, and a son aged twelve years through the cellar. Mrs. C. was so badly burned that she is not expected to live. Mr. C was also badly burned, he being a cripple at the time. He lost everything.

The second annual report of the Chief Engineer of the Syracuse and Binghamton Railroad states that an average of fifteen hundred men have been employed on the heavy sections of the Road since November last, and that there is no doubt that the road bed will be ready for the rails by the 1st of September next. The contracts for grading and masonry were let in July last, in three divisions of 54, 29, and 27 miles each. The estimated cost of the Road is $1,809,095.

The Stonington steamer C. Vanderbilt, as we learn from The Boston Herald, has been furnished with an apparatus for producing what is called "Harris's Calcium Light." This light is produced by the combustion of hydrogen and oxygen gases upon a small piece of calcium, and, it is said, it has been seen 25 miles upon the Sound. The cost of this apparatus is about $350, and the cost of burning the light is ten cents per hour. The entire apparatus occupies only six feet square of room, and can be placed in any part of the boat most convenient.

A man named Richmond was arrested and confined at Milwaukie on suspicion of being the murderer of Patrick Quinn. The testimony was strong against the prisoner as being the murderer; but fortunately rum was stronger, as it was clearly shown that Richmond was so deadly drunk at the time the murder was committed, as to relieve him from any suspicion. Richmond intends to give up liquor-drinking in future.

There proceeded en route to Buffalo, on Wednesday, by the Harlem route, the youngest traveler that we ever remember to have encountered. He was an Irish boy, only 10 years old, who had traveled all the way from the West Indies alone! He was going to join his mother, from whom he had got separated, some how, by the adversities of emigrant life. He stated that he had been six months making his way thus far, and his tattered garments and matted hair too seemingly confirmed his story.

The editor of the The Lafayette Journal proposes to bind up a volume containing a copy of each newspaper published in Indiana, as a contribution to the New York Crystal Palace Exhibition. We regard the selection as a good one, and should be glad to see it adopted by every state in the whole Union. A copy of every American newspaper will constitute a curious volume, and one of some magnitude also.

In the case of Wilson against Snell, tried in the Circuit Court, Brooklyn, before Judge Barculo, on Tuesday, the Jury rendered a verdict of $2,500 damages for the plaintiff. The action was brought for $10,000 damages on account of injuries sustained by plaintiff, a lad some 9 years of age, in consequence of inattention and want of skill on the part of the attending physician.

The Catholic Bishop of Massachusetts, says The New Haven Daily Palladium, is understood to be a warm friend of the public schools of Massachusetts. He was educated in them himself, and understands the subject better than clergymen from abroad, who, however familiar with their church polity, have not a clear view of the peculiar character of this Government and its constitution.

A dispatch dated Susquehanna, Thursday, June 16, 1823, says a most lamentable accident occurred on the New York and Erie Railroad about 5 o'clock this afternoon. Engine No. 58 exploded her boiled, instantly killing seven persons and wounding several others. Among the number killed was Mr. Arnold, the engineer, and three women. It is supposed that four or five perons were blown into the river.

Two weeks later news from Buenos Ayres has been received. All attempts to arrange matters have failed. Urquiza has recommenced his siege of the city, and threatens to blockade the port. Provisions are getting scarce. The Buenos Ayreans have issued Twelve Millions additional money, declared martial law, closed the Custom House and other offices, and required all able-bodied men to bear arms.

The Female Medical College of Pennsylvania will commence its next course of Lectures (in Philadelphia) on the 1st of October. Its Faculty consists of five Male and two Female professors—the latter regularly graduated Physicians as well as the former—while the Demonstrator in Anatomy is also an able Female Physician.

A young man named Lessefs was recently killed in a duel near New Orleans. His antagonist, whose name is not mentioned, made his escape. The parties were both under 21 years of age.

A Bridgewater (Eng.) correspondent of the Plymouth Memorial states that the introduction of sewing machines for stitching shoes is becoming quite common. One establishment in Abington uses no less than six. It is said that an operator, with the machine, will stitch in a day more than ten times the amount usually accomplished by a stitcher, and that the cost is very materially reduced.

The Crystal Palace Commissioners have sent a Committee to Washington to invite the President and Cabinet to be present at the opening of the edifice. A similar Committee has been sent to Albany, to invite the State Officers and the Legislature.

Wm. Thornton Doniphan, son of Gen. A. W. Doniphan, died at the residence of his father, in Liberty, Mo., on the 9th ult., from taking corrosive sublimate, which had been given to him through mistake for a dose of salts.

The 17th of June is the Anniversary of the Battle of Bunker's Hill. We think it was Mr. Bell, of Tennessee, who said he would not give all the annexations growing out of the Mexican War for the soil of Bunker's Hill or that of the Lexington of the Revolution. We confess to share in the same spirit.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Madison County Bank, held on the 14th inst., William M. Burr, Esq., was unanimously elected President of the Bank, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of their late Pesident, Jacob Ten Eyck.

At the Connecticut Editorial Convention, held at New Haven June 8, representatives were present from two-thirds of the newspapers of the State. They formed themselves into a Society to be known as the "Connecticut Newspaper Association."

Miss Olive Rose has been elected Register of Deeds, in the eastern district of the County of Lincoln, Maine, over Mr. Sylvester, by about 260 majority. Olive was assistant of the late Register, and has no doubt satisfied the public of her competency and integrity.

Another execution took place in New York last Sixth-day. The man's name was Fitzgerald, and his crime was killing his wife. He was a Catholic, enjoyed the ministrations of two "fathers," and died very "happy."

On the 15th inst., a fire broke out in a store in Maiden-lane, N. Y., in which some fire-works were stored. One man was killed by falling from the window of the burning building.

At a meeting of the Directors of the Erie Railroad, Mr. Homer Ramsdell, of Newburg, was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Loder. Mr. McAlpine was elected a Director in the place of Mr. Loder.

The City of Utica has, by a large majority, agreed to subscribe to the stock of the Black River and Utica Railroad Company. The vote stood 768 for the Road and 50 against it.

A spirited meeting in favor of the Utica and Binghamton Railroad was held at Utica on the 14th inst. The subscriptions in Utica reach $106,000.

A party in Georgia recently pursued Mr. Robert Toombs several miles, under the impression that he had stolen the horse and buggy he was riding with. Mr. Toombs is a U. S. Senator.

A Chinaman was knocked down and robbed of some $10, in Noyes-place, Boston, the other day, by a couple of ruffians, who have been arrested.

Benjamin Loder, Esq., who has so long performed the arduous labor of the President of the New York and Erie Railroad Company, has resigned.

The American Hotel, on Broadway, opposite the Park, New York, caught fire on the 16th inst., and was damaged to the amount of some $10,000.

Judge Barculo, of Brooklyn, last week gave the custody of the colored child Jane Trainor to its father.

MARRIED,

In Leonardsville, N. Y., on the 16th inst., by Eld. W. B. Maxson, Mr. HENRY B. BOOTH, of Paris, N. Y., to Miss SOPHRONIA ANN BROWN, of Leonardsville.

DIED,

In Berlin, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., on the 22d ult., MEHETABEL, wife of Eld. William Satterlee, aged 87 years. Sister Satterlee embraced religion in early life, and for over half a century had been connected with the church militant on earth. As a companion and mother, she was affable and affectionate; and as a Christian, her daily walk and conversation evinced that she followed in the footsteps of her Saviour. She has passed away to the enjoyment of that peace which passeth understanding.

In Brookfield, N. Y., on the 15th inst., Mr. CLEMENT P. BURDICK, in the 75th year of his age.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of TITSWORTHS & DUNN, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

A New Volume

OF WOODWORTH'S YOUTH'S CABINET commences with the July number, and of course now is a favorable time for new subscribers. A word to the wise is said to be sufficient, therefore the publisher begs to employ two words just to say that the Cabinet—the most popular illustrated dollar magazine in the Union—is more captivating than ever. The editor, in his Foreign Sketches, is now rambling with the reader among the wonderful ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeii. The Biography of Distinguished Americans is still continued. Try this magazine. You will find it just the thing for your family. Each number contains 48 pages. There are two volumes in a year—one commencing in July, and the other in January. A yearly volume embraces nearly 600 pages, and about 100 Illustrations.

Those who wish to subscribe, can do so at a reduced price, by taking the work in connection with other persons, and remitting the several subscriptions at the same time. Price, for a single copy, $1; 4 copies, $3; 7 copies, $5; and, in the latter case, an extra copy to the one who forms the Club. Payment invariably in advance. Bound volumes of the new series (three in number) 75 cents each, postage free.

Please to send on your orders by mail to the Publisher, D. A. WOODWORTH,
118 Nassau-st., New York.

Church Bells.

CHURCH, FACTORY, AND STEAMBOAT BELLS constantly on hand, and Peals or Chimes of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron Yokes, with moveable arms, are attached to these Bells so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and Springs also which prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. Hangings complete, (including Yoke, Frame, and Wheel,) furnished if desired. The horns by which the Bell is suspended, admit of the Yoke being changed to a new position, and thus bringing the blow of the clapper in a new place; which is desirable after some years' usage, as it diminishes the probability of the Bell's breaking, occasioned by repeated blows of the clapper in one place.

An experience of thirty years in the business has given the subscribers an opportunity of ascertaining the best form for Bells, the various combinations of metals, and the degree of heat requisite for securing the greatest solidity, strength, and most melodious tones, and has enabled them to secure for their Bells the highest awards at the N. Y. State Agricultural Society and American Institute, at their Annual Fairs, for several years past. The Trinity Chimes of New York were completed at this Foundry, as were also cast Chimes for New Orleans, La., Oswego and Rochester, N. Y., and Kingston, C. W., and also the Fire Alarm Bells of New York, the largest ever cast in this country.

Transit Instruments, Levels, Surveyors' Compasses; Improved Compasses for taking horizontal and vertical angles without the needle.

Fossil Remains in Nebraska.

From the St. Louis Intelligencer, May 25.

There is between Fort Laramie and Fort Pierre, in about the latitude of forty-two, a tract of country called, from its barrenness and desolate aspect, Mauvaise Terres, or Bad Land. For the use of one in search of a farm, or the picturesque, this land is not inviting. But poor as it is in fertilizing phosphates, or in beautiful diversities of hill, valley and wood, it is rich in animal remains—rich in treasures which delight the heart of a man engaged in the work of reconstructing a vanished creation. Scattered over this desert are immense quantities of fossil bones, of shapes so curious and unlike the skeletons of any living animals, as to have drawn the attention of the Indian traders and trappers who have visited that region. Gen. William H. Ashley, formerly so well known in St. Louis, and now deceased, brought to this city many specimens of these remains, as early as 1825.

Our respected fellow citizens, Kenneth Mackenzie, and D. D. Mitchell, Esqs., have also, in their visits to that portion of the plains, secured specimens from the same collection, and brought them here. More recently, these deposits have had additional attention drawn to them from publications incidentally made by Mr. Owen, in his report on the Geology of Wisconsin and Iowa; and the curiosity that has been awakened on the subject has prompted no less than three scientific expeditions, which are now on their way to these fossil mines.

One of these expeditions has been set on foot by Professor James Hall, of Albany, a gentleman who is associated as Paleontologist with the great Geological Survey of the State of New York. He incurs an expense of $2,000 out of his own pocket, and has sent forward two gentlemen, Messrs. Meek and Hayden, the former of them a very accomplished draftsman, who will be furnished at Fort Pierre, by the American Fur Company, with provisions and means to insure their safety in the prosecution of their researches. The conduct of the Fur Company in this instance displays a liberality which is worthy of all praise. These gentlemen took passage up the Missouri River, on the Robert Campbell, last week.

The second of these expeditions is under the guidance of Mr. Evans, a gentleman attached to Governor Stevens's surveying party. This gentleman also took passage on the Robert Campbell. It is supposed that the collections to be made by Mr. Evans will be deposited in the Smithsonian Institution.

The third expedition is from Prussia. Two of the gentlemen belonging to it were in the city a day or two since, and will shortly proceed to the scene of their labor.

An Ohio Chicken House.

A. E. Mathews, of Rochester, Ohio, communicates the following through the Massilon News:—

My hennery is built of brick, and is 73 feet in length, by 18 in breadth; with two 6 foot stories, each lighted on the south side by four 25-light windows of small size. It was designed for 1,000 hens, and as I had between 200 and 300 to commence with, they were confined in the lower story.

In the upper story are two apartments, with lath partitions, one containing Poland top-knots, and the other game fowls, besides a large one for rearing young chickens. In the lower story is a stove, with a drum in the upper.

I give my fowls mill-sweepings, containing corn, wheat, rye, oats, and buckwheat, twice a day, at eight in the morning and three in the afternoon; also fresh meat and green cabbage, every other day—cabbage that did not head in the fall; and let them have constant access to burnt bones, egg-shells, old mortar and lime [illegible] or siftings, which have been lying out in the weather—fowls should not be allowed fresh lime. Unless the weather is too severe, they are let out during the day. Fowls that are penned up should have some kind of amusement. This may seem strange, but it is nevertheless essential to perfect health. The kind of amusement my fowls get, is shelling their own corn, (the cob being chopped in small pieces,) and scratching for grain in the sand.

The building is constructed in such a manner as to be proof against the depredations of rats, minks, pole-cats, and the other chicken destroyers. It is kept warm and well ventilated. The loft is spacious, and is designed for a granary, with steps on the outside.

Rosin Oil.

During a recent visit at New York we accepted an invitation of Messrs. Pond and Hitchcock, 56 Water street, to view their Oil manufactory at Brooklyn. Their works have been erected for making oil from rosin, a process very little known in this country, though some time in use in England. We are unable to give a description of the process, more than it is a distillation by the agency of steam, which evolves an oil nearly colorless, pure and limpid, and not congealed by cold. At the same time there is gathered what is known as "the spirits," and a refuse known as asphaltum. This latter product is used for painting ships' bottoms, coarse hardware, out-buildings and fences, answering an excellent purpose. From another grade of the refuse is manufactured a grease for wagons, machinery, and heavy bearings, which is recommended as being every way superior to tallow, lard or oil. In England it has been used to great satisfaction on cars and locomotives, with boxes arranged to serve as reservoirs, from which the grease is discharged as required by the heat of the axles. Thus arranged, a car could be run from Albany to Buffalo without danger of being overheated.

Their spirits are used by some persons in the manufacture of a "burning fluid," sold under the name of "rosin oil," which is, if possible, as we are assured by the manufacturers, more inflammable and unsafe than any of the "fluids" in general use. The rosin oil in its pure state might be burned with safety, but no lamp has yet been tested in which it can be used, on account of the black smoke arising from its burning.

From the rosin oil is made, by a mixture of pure sperm oil, a compound much in use as a lubricator in the cotton and woolen mills and in machines, not only in England, but to some extent in the United States. It has been pronounced by competent judges and engineers, for many purposes, superior to pure sperm. The prepared oil has been used in preparing wool for manufacturing, and in the best manufactories in the world is pronounced superior to any other oil used. Experiments in this State have proved that it can be successfully employed on wools from which all alkali has been removed, and that when thus prepared the wool spins better than when the sperm is used. This is an important subject to manufacturers, as this oil can be purchased at about half the price of good sperm. We have the statement here given from authority which with us would be unquestionable, and would like to hear further of well matured experiments testing its practical value.

From the rosin oil is manufactured a "tanner's" oil which is used with good satisfaction. It has also been applied to many other uses not necessary to detail. The constant diminishing crop of whales, and the consequent cost of the best oils, renders any reliable substitute of the utmost importance to the community.

Striped Bugs.

To keep them from young vines, put a box around the hill; three shingles, five or six inches wide, are enough; make a letter A with them, and fasten them up with dirt for sticks. Notice, and you will see that the bugs fly in straight lines and near the ground, and besides, they cannot stop in their flight and let themselves down on the plant, as a chimney swallow lets himself down into a chimney, so that they will fly over the tops of the boxes, and light upon something on the other side. If they start up again, they will fly over the tops of the boxes and light upon something on the opposite side. Occasionally, if the boxes are very low, this lighting place will happen to be just inside of the box, but not very often. I have driven off a great number from a hill and put a box around, and only one or two bugs got back again. There is no need of killing the bugs; simply drive them off and put on the boxes, or put them on before they come. You do not put covers over the tops; put small open boxes round with the sides high enough so that when you stand ten feet from the hill, you cannot see the plants, and then the bugs flying cannot see them, and consequently will not know where the plants are, so as to light upon them. Do not make the boxes too high, for that will shade the plants; nor too low, for then the bugs will see the plants and light upon them—they will fly straight to them.

I have been twelve years in making observations upon this insect, and have used the box for that time, but did not discover why the bugs did not get in, till last year, while in Waltham, Mass. In a garden there, where I introduced the box, I found that they did not get in, because they could not. I know of several who have used the box for a long time with success.

A good protection for radishes, onions, and such roots as suffer from a small white maggot, is to keep the earth that comes immediately in contact with them drenched with tobacco steepings. If carefully and constantly attended to, it will invariably prove successful. The box is no protection unless covered. The maggot is deposited by a small black fly, that disappears in season for the roots to come to maturity if protected till they are partially grown. One pound of tobacco, at eight cents, will be strong enough for five or six pails of water. Nothing but tobacco worms and men can endure tobacco. [Eastern Mail.

Piscaculture.

Some of our exchanges have published accounts of recent experiments in France in extending the production of fish, experiments so satisfactory in their results as to lead to well-founded hopes, that by a little care and exertion every brook and rivulet may be made to afford a large increase of our means of subsistence.

The place where at the present time the principal experiment is in progress, is the village of Hüningen and its environs, in Alsace, a few miles from Basle, in Switzerland. The French Government, a few months since, loaned 30,000 francs to MM. Berthot and Detzem, to enable them to make all needful preparations and arrangements to carry on the experiment at this place on a scale that should prove decisive. The Superintendent of this establishment, M. Coste, made a report in February last to the Academy of Sciences upon the progress which he had made, and the report is published in one of the April numbers of Dingler's Polytechnic Journal, a very respectable German publication. His treatment of the spawn of salmon and trout had proved so satisfactory in its results, that he has no doubt of having by June, that is, in four months from the date of the report, 600,000 young fish of these two species, with which to furnish the rivers, all sufficiently grown to be secure from the ordinary dangers to which the minnow is exposed. In the brooks of Hüningen, in which the spawn is hatched, over a million of salmon and trout eggs have been placed, of which 120,000 were spawned along the bank of the Rhine, under the eye of the Director.

The enormous productiveness of this establishment may be imagined, when a year's space is taken into consideration, for no sooner are the present varieties of fish distributed from the brooks and ponds, than their places will be supplied by the young of the Danube salmon and shad, which spawn only in the spring, thus keeping up a constant succession.

This new branch of industry is already spread, at Hüningen, over a space some 7½ miles in extent, where the waters of ten natural fountains, that of a small stream passing through the establishment, those of the Rhine, and the standing waters of marshy ground, are all found near each other, and at hand, to mingle in such proportions as may be necessary for different species. Hopes are entertained that sturgeon and other fish, which require the sea and fresh water by turns, may thus be raised, and that by placing them in the Rhone when young, the bays of the Mediterranean may once more be stocked with fish.

Successful experiments, by means of ponds of salt water, have been made upon the shores of the Adriatic, in the Pontine marshes, and in the Gulf of Naples, in the artificial production of salt water fish.

The Polytechnic Journal, mentioned above, contains a full description of the simple processes employed at Hüningen. The obtaining of the spawn by pressing the fecund fish is in fact nothing more than a simple act of midwifery, so to speak, the main thing being the proper care and protection of the eggs so obtained; and the enormous multiplication of fish is owing simply to the fact that they are thus saved from the innumerable dangers to which they are exposed in the open rivers, and that each egg is afforded opportunity to produce its fish, instead of being devoured, with myriads of others, by birds, fish, and other animals which prey upon them

Stiglmayer, the originator and director of the Bronze Foundry, died in 1844, just before the casting of the Bavaria began. His nephew, Ferdinand Miller, full of youth, energy, patience, and experience, was ready to succeed him. The castings took place at five different times, commencing with the head. This was cast in 1844. In casting the bust of the figure—the largest portion—the greatest difficulty had to be encountered. It was necessary to melt for the purpose twenty tons of bronze, five tuns more than had ever before been melted in the furnace. As this immense mass of metal slowly began to fuse, it began also to cake, thus threatening to destroy not only the casting but the whole furnace, with untold danger to life and limb. Six men had, in spite of the oppressive heat and the ever-increasing glow of the furnace, to take it by turns night and day incessantly to stir, with long iron bars, the molten mass, lest it should adhere to the furnace-walls, and so bring annihilation on all. On the evening of the fifth day of anxiety, when Ferdinand Miller for the first time sought a short repose in his chair, he was suddenly aroused by his faithful and anxious fellow-watcher, his wife, with the cry of "Ferdinand, awake! the foundry is on fire!" It was so. The ever-increasing heat of those five days and four nights had caused fire to burst forth among the rafters. To have attempted to extinguish the fire by water, with this molten mass below, would have caused the immediate destruction of the place. All that could be done was, by means of wetted cloths, to keep down the fire. This was tried, and the melting went on as before. Amid such danger did the casting of the bust take place about midnight on the 11th of October, 1845. "Success!" was shouted forth; a load of anxiety of many kinds fell from every breast; and all then hastened to the complete extinguishing of the fire.

The Kaffirs.

In personal appearance and formation, these Kaffirs are a race of the most manly and handsome people known among savages, and in many of their points resemble the New Zealanders. In stature they are generally tall, their height in stature varying from five feet eight inches to upwards of six feet. Their muscular frame is remarkable for symmetry and beauty, as well as great strength; but their arms, from want of proper exercise to develop the muscles (owing probably to their usual indolent mode of life,) appear small and disproportioned in size to the legs and body. In all of them the lower limbs are strikingly robust and fine, and cases of deformity are very rarely to be noticed among them. Their carriage is stately and upright—in many even majestic; and this is particularly observable in their chiefs, whose habitual attitude of ease, and abrupt yet graceful actions in giving their commands, are truly eloquent and imposing. They are haughty and proud in their bearing, and carry the head quite erect and thrown back. The left arm is usually laid across the chest, to support the blanket or kaross, which, carelessly slung over the left shoulder, is their only covering or article of clothing. This, when moving quickly, they gather closer around them; and then, throwing the second corner of it over the right shoulder, they leave it to hang in negligent folds across their fine expansive chests, reminding the beholder much of the Roman toga of old. Their shoulders are square and firmly set, and, like the chest, very broad. Their heads are large, but not disproportionate to their bodies; the forehead being elevated and intellectually formed, and in many cases very high, and finely developed in a phrenological point of view. Their hair is not so thick and matted as in either the negro or Hottentot races, from whom the Kaffirs widely differ in all points of personal appearance. Their ears are large, but well made, and seem generally to have become elongated by the weight of pendent ear-rings and ornaments. Their features, although much varied, are fine—particularly the eyes, which are keen and piercing; and, although always unsteady, wandering, and stealthy, yet from their large size and great brightness, and from their being well set under their broad deep brows, the idea of cunning and deceit, which undoubtedly is their national character, and has usually to be found out by some dear-bought experience, does not at first sight impress a stranger. The common color of the eye is black, or dark brown, somewhat in harmony with that of their skins, which are however darker in some tribes than in others, especially in the Amaponeo and more northerly ones. The nose also varies in form—in the T'Slamhie tribes being broader and more of the negro shape than in the Gaikas or Galekas, it assumes more of the European character. In many of them, the perfect Grecian and Roman nose are discernible. These latter tribes appear, in all other respects, to retain their original nationality of appearance.

Anecdotes of Parrots.

All animals are jealous; and none more so than the parrots. One belonging to a young friend of mine was miserable when she took charge of a canary for a friend, who was to be absent for some time. From the first moment Poll saw her caress the stranger, she became sulky; would not speak; scarcely ate during the first few days, and not only turned her back upon her mistress, but tried to bite her. The canary, one fine sunny morning, was hung up at the window to enjoy the warmth, and in its delight, burst forth into one of its sweetest songs. The parrot listened attentively, with her head on one side, till the little warbler paused; when, in the most patronizing tone possible, she exclaimed, 'Pretty well! pretty well!' and then, as if in spite, she vociferated the most contemptuous 'Ha! ha! ha!' This same lady's brother had also a parrot who was very jealous of a much smaller bird than himself, on whom his master lavished many caresses. They were placed in a room next to the gentleman's bedchamber; one night he was awakened by the screams of the little favorite. He immediately rose and went to its cage with a light, but it was too late, the parrot had by some means unfastened the door of his cage, and going to that of the smaller bird, put his claws between the bars, and dragged it to the side, and was tearing it to pieces. I was told of a parrot the other day, that had been accustomed to breakfast on oatmeal porridge; but on a recent occasion the oatmeal was exhausted, and from negligence had not been renewed. Accordingly, some soaked bread was put in the bird's saucer. He looked at it some time, tasted it once or twice, sat and apparently considered the matter; and then, dashing his bill in, he threw it all out, first on one side and then on the other side, saying between each spluttered mouthful, 'Nasty mess! nasty mess!' The same bird heard a lady say, 'Oh, dear! I have lost my purse!' and immediately exclaimed, 'How very provoking!' [Instinct of Birds.

Divorce in Ohio.

The last Legislature of Ohio passed a law concerning divorce, of a most extraordinary character. We shall be surprised if there is not a rather brisk emigration of badly matched people setting into the Buck Eye State, when the kind of relief this act is designed to afford becomes generally known. The law to which we refer provides that divorces may now be granted by the Court of Common Pleas in Ohio, for any of the following causes:

First: When either of the parties had a former wife or husband living at the time of solemnizing the second marriage.

Second: Where either of the parties shall have willfully been absent from the other three years.

Third: Adultery.
Fourth: Impotency.
Fifth: Extreme cruelty.
Sixth: Fraudulent contract.
Seventh: Gross neglect of duty.
Eighth: Habitual drunkenness for three years.

Ninth: Where either party is imprisoned in any Penitentiary or State Prison, in any State, for violation of the laws of the United States; or in Ohio, for violation of the criminal law of Ohio; or in any other State, for a violation of the criminal law of such State; provided such offense would be punished with imprisonment in the penitentiary in Ohio, and provided the application for divorce is made during such imprisonment.

A decree of divorce in any Court of another State in favor of one party, is also ground for a like decree in favor of the same party in the Courts of Ohio.

Proof of the admissions of the parties may be received in evidence, unless obtained by connivance, fraud, or other improper means.

Proof of cohabitation and reputation of the marriage is admitted, and, in the discretion of the Jury or Court, received as sufficient evidence of the marriage.

If the divorce is granted to the wife, she is restored to all her lands, tenements, and hereditaments not previously disposed of, and to her maiden name if she desires—may be allowed sufficient and reasonable alimony—and if she survive her husband, is also entitled to dower.

If the divorce is granted on account of her fault, she loses the right to dower, but is restored to her lands, tenements, &c., and may receive reasonable alimony.

Petitioners for divorce must have resided within the State one year, but the cause of divorce and marriage may have occurred elsewhere—and alimony may be granted to the petitioner during the pendency of the proceedings.

A wife may also petition for alimony alone, without the prayer for dissolution of the marriage contract, for the following causes, viz:

First: Adultery.
Second: Gross neglect of duty.
Third: Abandonment of the wife, without good cause.
Fourth: When there is a separation in consequence of ill-treatment on the part of the husband.
Fifth: Habitual drunkenness.
Sixth: Confinement in the Penitentiary of Ohio, or in the Penitentiary or State Prison of any of the United States, or either of the Territories thereof, or the District of Columbia, for any crime or offense of the same character or grade as is or may be by the laws of this State punished with imprisonment in the Penitentiary, in which case the application shall be made while the husband is so confined.

Saw-Dust as Litter.

This material has been successfully introduced as litter for horses in Ohio, instead of straw, and may be profitably employed for this purpose when the latter article is dear. The Ohio Cultivator contains the following remarks upon the subject: "Several bushels of dry saw-dust are thrown into the stall, upon which the horse stands during the night. In the morning it will be found that about a bushel has to be removed—one-half of which is manure and one-half saw-dust so well saturated as to contain a large portion of ammonia, performing the double office of absorbent and purifier; thus the air of the stable is kept pure, and the ammonia saved for the compost heap. This compost Mr. Blake has applied to his stiff clay land, and reports that it operates like yeast, making the ground very light and mellow. In the morning, that portion of the bedding which remains dry is shoveled up under the manger, to serve for another night. Another advantage from this material for bedding is that a horse which lies upon it is much easier cleaned off than one which lies in straw; the saw-dust entering among the hair brings away the secretions, when the curry-comb and brush are applied, leaving a bright lively coat. In warm weather it has another great advantage, that of being much cooler than straw, so that a tired and heated horse can sleep pleasantly, without incitements to feverish restlessness. The establishment of steam mills in all parts of the country, renders the material easy of access to almost every neighborhood, and we doubt not, when its virtues are better known, it will be generally applied to stable use, as a means of comfort to the horse, and also of turning an otherwise useless article into profitable account.

Large Prices for Small Privileges.—It is stated that a woman who keeps a small grocery on the corner of Church and Warren-sts., New York, in an old house for which she has an unexpired lease of two years, refuses to sell out her lease for less than twenty thousand dollars. The owner of the property, who wants to pull the house down and put up a new building, has offered her ten thousand dollars; but she refuses to move for less than twenty thousand. Many years ago, when Masonic Hall, in Broadway, was projected, the owners wished to extend it to the corner of Pearl-st., but the owner of the wooden building on the corner demanded twenty or thirty thousand dollars for his property, which was really worth not more than six or seven thousand. Masonic Hall was constructed, and the old wooden corner stands there still, a monument to over-reaching cupidity.

Etiquette.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Havana, thus notices a ceremony attending a turn-out to a fire in that city:—

A Spaniard, who arrived at the place soon after the fire showed itself, found the firemen of the place ranged in front of the building, inactive, while the flames were devouring everything in their way. He asked why they did not commence to extinguish the fire. They replied, that their chief had not come, and that they were waiting his commads. In a quarter of an hour the chief appeared, and all the other authorities, military and civil, in their uniforms, as stiff as starch. Then came the calling of the muster roll. The flames had now gutted the building, and done other damage, and a party of French soldiers, from two men-of-war, with engines, had put the surrounding buildings out of danger; leaving to the noisy and much-applauded Spanish chiefs and their crew, the harmless embers, to extinguish.

Rip Van Winkle Again.—A full-grown man, six feet two inches in hight, and 37 years of age, residing in the town of Clarkson, on the 9th of June, 1848, fell into a long sleep, and since that time has been awake at different periods, from a few hours to four months at a time. Thus, for five years, he has slept with only occasional and brief intervals of wakefulness. The name of this sleeper is Cornelius Broomer, and none of the family from which he has sprung have ever before had any such affection. The fit comes upon him suddenly, without any apparent warning, and during its duration nothing can arouse him from the unnatural lethargy. The man lives on, sleeps on, retains perfect health, with a pulse at 80, and without variation. A little food is introduced into his stomach by prying open his firm set jaws. When he awakens he is totally oblivious of all that has transpired during his trance, and calls for food, and sets to with a will, eating voraciously. If asked why he sleeps so much, he regards it as an imposition, just as any active man would regard the imputation of sluggishness.

Birds.—A traveler in South America, speaking of the birds of his native land, says it is pleasant to notice, that into whatever strange countries they may have wandered during the winter, and whatever strange tongues they may have heard, they nevertheless come back speaking English. Hark! "Phœbe! Phœbe!" plain enough. And by and by the Bob o'link, saying, "Bob o'Lincoln," and the quail saying, "Bob White." We have heard of one who always thought the robin said, "Skillet! skillet! three legs to a skillet! two legs to a skillet!" A certain facetious doctor says the robins cry out to him as he passes along the road, "Kill 'em! cure 'em! cure 'em! physic! physic! physic!" And the frogs indulge in humorous, sarcastic ditties, in which one hears, "Jug o' rum! jug o' rum!" While another responds, "Paddy got dhroonk, got dhroonk, 'ook, 'nk!"

VARIETY.

'Why, Mr. B.,' said a tall youth to a little person in company with a half-a-dozen huge men, 'I protest you are so small I did not see you before.' 'Very likely,' replied the little gentleman, 'I am a little sixpence among six copper pennies, not readily perceived, but worth the whole of them.'

THE BIBLE IN OUR COMMON SCHOOLS.

Number Six.

BY C. ROLLIN BURDICK, A. B.

I would have the Bible more extensively used for what it can effect, if its doctrines are universally disseminated and observed. We have contemplated some of the reasons why the Bible can effect so much in the renovation of man. We have seen, also, some of its benign effects upon the human family. But these developments are only the first streaks of a dawn which is to usher in a most glorious day. Yea, I might say, they are but the first pale glimmerings of the day-star which is leading the dawn of that day when the full splendor of the Bible shall beam upon the earth. In the foreshadowings of prophecy, we look for a time to come, "when righteousness shall flow down our streets like rivers;" when "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess the Lord;" when "the heathen shall be given as an inheritance to the seed of David, with the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession." These things are to be realized through the agency of Bible truths acting upon the human mind, and of course every thing which aids in their spread, hastens fowarded that blessed time—the millennial Sabbath.

This subject is so rich in themes, so full and so varied, that I hardly know what to say, and when to stop. I do not know but I shall incur the risk of displeasing my readers, but I feel a strong inclination to particularize in reference to a few things which have before been incidentally alluded to. I will point out some of the giant evils that curse our land, which can only be eradicated by a more universal inculcation of Bible doctrines.

The first I will speak of is profanity. With joy I look forward to the time when the Christian's ear will not be pained with hearing his father's name profaned; when the man who indulges in blaspheming the name of God, shall be driven out from society, as fit only to herd with wild beasts, whose ears he can not pain by his impiety—when every man shall be against him as against Ishmael of old. But this can not be brought about without great labor, into the performance of which all the agencies which we can command must be brought; the common-school seems eminently adapted to curing this evil, by the aid of Bible teaching, since very many children get no training of any kind, (except in the school of vice,) any where else. Their parents, if not themselves profane, suffer them to grow up in ignorance of their responsibility to God, in the midst of the most pernicious influences. By the aid of the Bible, then, the devoted servant of God can do much, as a teacher of the young, to cure this evil.

In this age, when books are multiplied by ten thousands—when a light and superficial literature is afloat all over the land there is a great tendency to false standards of literary excellence—to the inculcation of false notions and doctrines. Hence it becomes more important that this great model of literary excellence should be constantly held up before the young. I have strong faith that there is healing virtue enough in the Bible to correct this tendency. But it must be faithfully and vigorously applied; for the tide of evil that is flowing in upon us, on the current of light literature, is tremendous, carrying away thousands of our youth, and shipwrecking them in the whirlpool of vice. I verily believe, that there are more young men and women sent to hell, in this age, by a pernicious literature, than by any other one cause; and yet parents and teachers, and, in too many instances, ministers of the gospel, are asleep over it. Very many parents exercise no kind of censorship over the books of their children, suffering them to read any thing and every thing which satan may throw in their way, and they are thus sucking up the veriest filth from the sinks and sewers of corruption. This can be stopped only by cultivating a proper taste for a pure literature. This can be done by introducing the Bible into our schools more extensively.

Another monster evil is sweeping over our land, like a scorching simoon of the desert, carrying desolation and woe to a thousand hearth-stones—intemperance. Temperance principles, I trust, are generally gaining ground. The cause of temperance, like all other holy causes, must triumph. The fiat of an unchanging God has gone forth, and it must stand. But it is to be accomplished by means and agencies in the hands of God. The Bible is the sword of his Spirit; our teachers are his agents to wield this mighty claymore; and shall the teachers of our common schools shrink from the task, or shall their hands be tied by popular prejudice? Nay, let it not be so. In the rising generation are our hopes for the future. Through them are our institutions to be perpetuated, and by them are the principles of righteousness and temperance to gain ground, until they shall finally triumph over all enemies, or continue to loose power, until the sun of science and literature shall go down in darkness. There are many misconceived notions and practices in regard to this subject, which, examined in the light of Bible truth, would be seen to be damnable heresies and crimes. There is a set of unprincipled men abroad in the land, who, for the sake of gain, would sell their souls to the devil, and take hell for their guerdon. These men are the rumsellers of our land. The sighs and groans of abused affection are their stock in trade. No matter if the poor wife and children of his victim do cry for bread, and the sixpence wrung from him is the price of damnation to both; the luxury of hearing the coin clink in his own coffers amply pays the rumseller. Poor fool, thus to sell his soul, and seal it over to eternal torments, for paltry gold. The most aggravating feature in this abominable practice is, that there are large numbers in community, who call themselves respectable, who sympathize with and give their countenance and support to these modern Cains, who have a fashionable way of killing a man, and doing it politely too. Such a method, brought up into full view, and stripped of its deceitful covering, appears ten times more hellish than the primitive method of knocking a man down and beating out his brains, adopted by Cain. Some, even, who belong to temperance organizations, would license this pack of blood-hounds to pursue their work of death. We do not expect to do much with the gray-headed disciples of intemperance, although, as long as they live, there is some little hope for them; yet we can instil into the minds of the young such principles as will abolish the license system, and write temperance upon every sign-post, and above every grocery door in the land. The Bible in our common schools can be made an almost omnipotent agency in the promotion of this great cause.

The red-eyed monster, licentiousness, has reared her hydra-head in almost every town and community in our country. She has infused her deadly poison into the hearts of not only the profligate, but into the church, making sad havoc there. She has arrayed herself in wanton apparel, and sits as queen over our cities, which she has transformed into great workshops, where myriads of immortal beings are made candidates to people the regions of dark damnation. She has made our canals the highways to perdition, and our seaports the vestibules to the regions of dark despair. She has rudely torn away the divine image from the brow of man, and plunged him headlong over the fearful precipice of moral reprobacy, into the filthy pool of pollution, below the level of the vilest brutality. She has plucked spotless innocence from her exalted throne, torn the rosy wreath from her lofty brow, defaced her angelic features, and trampled her lovely person in the dust beneath her feet. She has unnerved the arm of the strongest warrior, palsied the tongue of melting eloquence, and faded the most enchanting beauty. She dashes the cup of bliss from the lips of joyful expectation, and crushes the warmest affections of the human heart. As the scathing lightning alike blasts the tender sapling and shivers the mountain oak, so does she blast all that is lovely and beautiful and tender, and reduces to ruin all that is noble and powerful and glorious in those she has conquered. Parents and children, brothers and sisters, husbands and wives, have drunk her bitter potions. Thousands of our youth yearly fall victims to her scorpion stings, and tens of thousands are exposed to the furious ravings of her vindictive passions. Her schools are adapted to every stage of advancement, and ramified all over our land. They are for preparing the mind of youth for entering the fields of action which she has marked out for her votaries. They are numerously attended, and open for all. Let us see what they are: Balls, "bussing-bees," circuses, theaters, &c. The terms are soon enumerated. Tuition, the sacrificing of all decency and decorum. Board, the loss of reputation and common sense, if the applicant have any before entering. Incidental expenses, the giving up of a tender conscience. Text-books, French novels, English romances, and Yankee lies. So deeply are her principles rooted in the souls of her adherents, and so widely are they disseminated, that her votaries can go to any place in our land, and, under the strong arm of legislative protection, rear their pandemoniums, their moral pest houses, their sinks of death, into which the innocent are decoyed, to be degraded, imbruted, cursed, and finally damned. The flood of moral evil that is rolling over us from this direction must be met and arrested, or our institutions will crumble to dust. The locust, murrain, and fire, are mercies compared with such pests. Better that our country should swarm with the lice and frogs of Egypt, and the black tarantulas of India, than with such human vermin. Better for our youth to be smitten with the pestilence or the plague of London, than to be contaminated by the touch of such monsters. I had rather see a friend of mine butchered by the wild Arabs or Indians, torn in quarters, flayed alive, or burned at the stake, while innocent, than to see him a confirmed drunkard; but I had far rather see him raving under the frightful horrors of the delirium tremens, and at last buried in a drunkard's grave, than to see him a habitual patronizer of one of these sinks of damnation —these lazar houses of the dead. Yet how many young men of promise are yearly immolated upon altars reared at the shrine of lust! Let the mingled wailings and curses of damned spirits repeat it in thunder tones. How many! And yet our legislators grant license for these houses of ill-fame. Hundreds of unsuspecting young girls are yearly deceived, and led into them, whence it is impossible for them to escape uncontaminated, as if the adamantine walls of tophet already girt them round. The reason for this state of things is, that public feeling is dead on the subject. The quickening principle, the healing balm, for this evil, is found only in the Bible. Its inculcation into the minds of the people can only save us from the ravages of licentiousness. Upon the minds of the young we can act with the most efficiency. Hence our duty is evident. We are to take any and every opportunity of disseminating its principles in every nook and corner of our land.

GOOD TEMPER.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

There's not a cheaper thing on earth,
  Nor yet one half so dear;
'Tis worth more than distinguished birth,
  Or thousands gained a year.
It lends the boy a new delight;
  'Tis virtue's firmest shield;
And adds more beauty to the night
  Than all the stars may yield.

It maketh poverty content;
  To sorrow whispers peace;
It is a gift from heaven sent
  For mortals to increase.
It meets you with a smile at morn;
  It lulls you to repose;
A flower, for peer and peasant born,
  An everlasting rose.

A charm to banish grief away,
  To snatch the brow from care;
Turn tears to smiles, make dullness gay—
  Spreads gladness every where;
And yet 'tis cheap as summer dew,
  That gems the lily's breast;
A talisman for love, as true
  As ever man possessed.

As smiles the rainbow through the cloud
  When threatening storm begins—
As music 'mid the tempest loud,
  That still its sweet way wins—
As springs an arch across the tide,
  When waves conflicting roam,
So comes this seraph to our side,
  This angel of our home.

What may this wondrous spirit be,
  With power unheard before—
This charm, this bright divinity!
  Good temper—nothing more;
Good temper! 'tis the choicest gift
  That woman homeward brings,
And can the poorest peasant lift
  To bliss unknown to kings.

THE LACK OF MINISTERS.

In the face of what has been said of late about the lack of ministers, there are some who express doubts whether a real deficiency exists, and comfort themselves with these doubts. For the information of such, and for the purpose of exciting in all more fervency of prayer to the Lord of the harvest that he will send laborers into his harvest, we copy the following extract from the report of a sermon preached on the subject by Rev. Dr. Smith, before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church:—

I. If the harvest is great, the laborers are few—O how few, when compared with the vastness of the work! (1.) The fact of Ministerial Paucity. During the past five years there has been a gradually deepening conviction that demand and supply have not acted upon each other in respect to the ministry, as they do elsewhere. Our home and foreign missions have been calling for men in vain; and some of the best churches in the East are unable to procure the ministry they need. They ask them to come from New England in the spirit of our ancient brotherhood, but the response is that New England needs them for herself. This want is felt in all our States and denominations, especially at the West. Just contrast the present state of things with that of the New England churches two hundred years ago. In 1650, with a population less than 30,000, New England had 46 churches, or one church to about 650 souls; and of the ministry we may form some estimate from the statements of Higginson and Hubbard, who say that "their learning, their holiness, and their gravity struck all who knew them with admiration; they were Timothys in their households, Chrysostoms in pulpits, and Augustines in disputations."

Our country is advancing with unparalleled rapidity, yet the ministry is declining in numbers and in power. In the New England seminaries, from 1836 to 1842, there were 588 graduates for the ministry; for 1843–52, there were only 484, or more than one hundred less in the last eight years; when, to keep pace with the increase of population alone, the number should have been 764—280 less than were needed in 8 years. From 1840 to 1850, the number of Presbyterian and Congregational churches increased 33 per cent.; while the number of theological students decreased 22 per cent.—a difference of 54 per cent. between the demand and the supply.

The prospects for the next seven years are no better. In the New England colleges, and the leading ones in New York and New Jersey, there are now about 2,600 students, of whom about 1,000 are church members; of these, but 550 intend entering the ministry. In the chief theological seminaries are now about 454 students. This, added to the 550, would give about 1,000, upon whom most of our churches are to depend for the next seven years—an average of not more than 125 each year, to meet the wants of home and foreign missions, the vacancies in the churches, and all branches of the ministerial work. And this while in New York alone the annual decrease by death is about 60; while northern Ohio alone wants 25 each year; while the American Board wants 45 to go on its missions the next year! And then the great West, our new territories, California and Oregon, whose wants must be supplied. Such is the prospect for the next seven years in this critical period of our national history.

II. The causes of this inadequate supply are various and complicated. (1.) The comparatively higher attractions of other pursuits. To this must be added, in many a mind, the influence of a lurking unbelief fostered by much of our popular literature—the want of a hearty faith in the permanency and power of the Christian church—the feeling that society may after all be preparing for something else than for the triumphs of the gospel. (2.) The ministry, as compared with other avocations, is not sustained as it should be. (3.) The churches have not any proper relative sense of the need of special efforts for securing the training of a competent ministry. (4.) The absence of the converting power of the Holy Spirit.

III. The remedies for this destitution. (1.) Give the education cause its fitting place in our charities and institutions. Our plans of education ought to be systematically arranged and pursued; our seminaries and colleges ought, in these days of prosperity, to be placed on a permanent foundation. We need to have a deeper sense of the untold value of such permanent institutions. Our libraries should be enlarged. The corps of officers should be filled up. There is not a theological seminary in the land which is able to give instruction in all the branches which the ministry needs for the conflict before us the next fifty years. When shall we be able to train the soldiers of the cross as the officers of our armies are trained at West Point? Scholarships ought to be endowed in all our colleges and seminaries. (2.) The ministry should make the office more attractive by a better exemplification of its power, dignity and relative station among the vocations, &c.

BIBLICAL ASSOCIATIONS OF EGYPT.

Rev. J. P. Thompson, pastor of the Tabernacle Congregational Church, New York, who is now traveling in Egypt, writes to his church an interesting letter, which is published in the Independent, and from which we copy the following allusion the biblical associations of Egypt:—

"Here Abraham, Jacob and Joseph sojourned, and found favor with the princes of the land. Here Moses was born and nourished, and here the Lord wrought by his hand such marvels for the deliverance of Israel. Here was the land of bondage, and here the theater of the Exodus. Here was instituted the Passover, the type of that great sacrifice which we now commemorate in the breaking of bread. Here Solomon sought the daughter of a king to grace his golden palace at Jerusalem. Here Jeremiah—the faithful prophet —was led into captivity. Here Joseph and Mary found a refuge with the infant Jesus from the malice of the barbarous Herod—the same land where, in the time of Moses, an edict went forth to exterminate the chosen seed by destroying the infant sons of the Israelites, being made to preserve that seed from a like edict in Judea.

"And not only is this land full of the history and the prophecies of the Scriptures, and a perpetual witness for their truth, but here, where all customs are stereotyped, where the dresses and the utensils of the people are the same to day as were sculptured upon tombs and monuments upwards of 3000 years ago, one is continually reminded of the faithfulness of the Bible in its minutest references, and assured that it must have been written by persons residing in the midst of Oriental scenes. Of this I expect to see much more in Palestine. But even here I am continually reminded of the Scriptures in the manners and costumes of the people. The land-marks, the dove-cotes, the sheep fold, the manger, the mill-stones, the "booths for cattle," the "lodge in a garden of cucumbers," the well surrounded by women, the mourning women, the lepers, the washing of feet, and the girding of loins, the dwelling among tombs, the writer's ink-horn and the graving upon the hands—these and many other biblical allusions that convey to us no very definite idea, are here perfectly obvious and natural. The Old Testament to my mind has become instinct with a new life. I feel its truthfulness; I see its meaning; and I see too what adaptation and what power it must have in all these eastern lands when they shall be fully opened to the circulation of the Bible. These vivid impressions of the truth of the Bible, even in the smallest perticulars, will, I trust, impart a new life and unction to my future expositions of that blessed book."

A CHINESE PROCLAMATION.

The following Proclamation, purporting to be from one of the Rebel Chiefs of China, we find in the North China Herald. It is probably genuine; but whether it is or not, the document is worth printing as a literary curiosity.

Proclamation.

Yang, entitled the Eastern King, and General-in-Chief, with Seaou, entitled Western King, also General-in-Chief of T'haeping, by Divine appointment Emperor of Theenkwo, the Celestial dynasty, unitedly issue this proclamation, to announce that they have received the commands of Heaven to slaughter the imps and save the people. According to the Old Testament, the Great God (Shang-te) our Heavenly Father, in six days created the heavens and the earth, the land and sea, men and things. The Great God is a spiritual Father, a ghostly Father, omniscient, omnipotent, and omnipresent; all nations under heaven are acquainted with this great power.

In tracing up the records of by-gone ages, we find that since the time of the creation of the world, the Great God has frequently manifested his displeasure, and how can it be that you people of the world are still ignorant of it? The Great God, in the first instance, displayed his anger, and sent down a great rain, during forty day and forty nights, by which means the flood was produced. On a second occasion, the Great God manifested his displeasure, and came down to save Israel out of the land of Egypt. On a third occasion he displayed His awful majesty, when the Saviour of the world, the Lord Jesus, became incarnate in the land of Judea, and suffered for the redemption of mankind. In latter ages He again manifested His indignation, and in the Ting-yew year, (A. D. 1837,) the Great God sent a celestial messenger, who was commissioned by the Lord of Heaven, when we ascended on high, to put to death the fiendish bands. Again he has sent the Celestial King to take the lead of the Empire and save the people. From the Mow-shin to the Sin-hae year, (A. D. 1848–51,) the Great God has compassionated the calamities of the people, who have been entangled in the meshes of the Devil's net. On the third moon of the latter year the exalted Lord and great Emperor appeared; and in the 9th moon Jesus, the Saviour of the world, manifested himself, exerting innumerable acts of power, and slaughtering a great number of impish fiends in several pitched battles; for how can impish fiends expect to resist the majesty of Heaven? and how, we would ask, can the Great God fail to be displeased with men for worshiping corrupt spirits, and performing corrupt actions, by which mean they grievously offend against the commands of Heaven? Why do not you, inhabitants of the world, awake? Having been born in the present day, when you are permitted to witness the glory of God, how fortunate may you esteem yourselves? Happening upon such a time as this, when you experience the great tranquility of the days of Heaven, it is time for you to awake and arouse. Those who comply with the will of Heaven will be preserved, and those who disobey the celestial dictates will be destroyed.

At the present time, this Tartar fiend Heenfung, (the Emperor) originally a Manchow slave is the perpetual enemy of our Chinese race; moreover he has induced men to assume the form of fiends, to worship the corrupt, while they disobey the true Spirit, and there rebel against the Great God, on which account Heaven will not endure, and men are determined to destroy him. Alas, you assemblage of valiant men, you do not seem to know that every tree has its roots, and ever stream its fountain; while you appear willing to invert the order of things; coveting the smallest advantage, you turn round and serve your foes; and having been entangled in the mechinations of the evil one, you ungratefully rebel against your true Lord. You do not seem to remember, that you are the virtuous scholars of the Middle Kingdom, and honest subjects of the Celestial dynasty, and thus you easily bend your steps in the road to ruin, without compassionating your own selves. Moreover you valiant men are many of you adherents of the Triaed Society, and have entered into a bloody compact that you will exert your united strength and talents to exterminate the Tartar dynasty. Whoever heard of men joining in a solemn covenant, and then turning their backs upon their foes? Now throughout the different provinces there must be a variety of determined men, numbers of famous scholars, and of valient heroes not a few; we desire therefore that you may severally elevate the lofty standard, and announce that you are determined not to live under the same heaven with the Tartars, while you earn for yourselves some merit in the service of your new king; this is what we, his generals, most fervently desire.

Our army, wishing to carry out the virtuous feelings with which the Great God loves to foster human life, and recieves men into his compassionate embrace, has set forward on its march of benevolence, embracing all its charitable folds. At the same time we lead forward our generals and our troops, carrying to the utmost our fidelity in recompensing our country, in which we cannot refrain from displaying the same spirit to the end. These our views are now communicated to you all. You ought to know that since Heaven has sent forth the true sovereign to rule over the people, it is yours to aid the monarch in establishing his dominion. Although the devilish fiends should amount to millions, and their artful schemes to thousands, yet how could they withstand Heaven? To kill without warning would not be agreeable to our feelings, and to sit still without saving the people is not what a benevolent person would do; we therefore earnestly issue this special proclamation, urging you people early to repent and vigorously to awake. Worship the true Spirit, and reject corrupt spirits, become men once more, and be no longer fiends, when perhaps you may attain longevity here and the happiness of Heaven hereafter. But if you still persevere in your obstinate stupidity, both gems and stones will be alike demolished, and then when you come to gnaw your own navels, it will be too late to repent. A special proclamation.

QUEEN VICTORIA AND A MISSIONARY.

The following is part of a letter published in The Christian Treasury, and appears to be well authenticated:—

"Mr. Crowther" (a negro, once a slave, now a minister of the gospel) "was at a Church Missionary meeting at Windsor. After the meeting, Lord Wriothesly Russell (brother to Lord John, a pious clergyman, and a member of the Evangelical Alliance) told him that her Majesty wished to see him at Windsor Castle. When at the palace, he met one of the ladies in waiting who was a collector for the Church Missionary Society, and who addressed herself to him as such, and as one deeply interested in the progress of the Society, and anxious to shake hands with him as her brother in the Lord. He then passed on to a room in which was Prince Albert, who immediately addressed him most kindly; and they were deep in conversation on Missionary subjects when a lady walked in and joined in the conversation. Mr. Crowther, taking it for granted that it was the lady he had met in the ante-chamber before, took no particular notice of her, further than continuing in most earnest discourse, pointing out places on the map, describing the various stations, &c. At length Lord W. Russell said something apart to make Mr. Crowther aware that he was speaking to the Queen of England. He was a good deal abashed, both at the presence of royalty and the honor conferred on him. In the gentlest, sweetest manner, (like a most loving mother to her people,) her Majesty set him quite at his ease, and continued her close inquiries on subjects connected with the Church Missionary Society, and Sierra Leone. They had not quite light enough at the table where the maps were spread out, and the Queen fetched a light from another table, which Mr. Crowther, in turning over the leaves of the atlas, put out, to his great distress; but the Queen (evidently not wishing the delay and interruption of calling a servant) immediately lighted it herself and continued the conversation, asking many questions about African Missions. My brother asked Mr. Crowther what sort of questions the Queen asked. He replied: A devoted lady collector could not have asked closer questions on the spiritual wants of the people, and the working of the Missions. Her Majesty also inquired about the appointment of a Bishop, and the suitableness of Mr. Vidal, recently nominated. In giving his very decided testimony to their need of an overseer, and the peculiar fitness of the bishop-designate, Mr. Crowther particularized his wonderful knowledge of languages; whereupon Her Majesty turned to the Prince, and said, with a smile, 'Ah, Albert, you see there are other good linguists beside Germans!' I need hardly say Mr. Crowther was much encouraged by this interview. To my mind, it is a call for all her Christian subjects to pray with one accord for the Queen, that in her faith may be revealed to faith, and grace added to grace."

THOUGHTS FOR MINISTERS.

Do not rest without success in your ministry. Success is the rule, under a living ministry; want of it is the exception.

We must have the taste of the manna in our mouth, "milk and honey" under our tongue, or we cannot tell of its sweetness.

A word spoken by you when your conscience is clear, and your heart full of God's Spirit, is worth ten thousand words spoken in unbelief and sin.

Prayer is much more powerful than preaching. It is prayer that gives preaching all its power.

If Satan can only make you a covetous minister, a lover of pleasure, a lover of praise, a lover of good eating, then he has ruined your ministry.

Nothing is more needful in making a sermon memorable and impressive, than logical arrangement.

Preach the word, the most essential parts of it especially. Preach the word. I would humbly suggest for the consideration of ministers whether they should not preach more in the manner of God's words? It is certain the fathers used to preach in this manner.

Brethren, they will not thank us in eternity for speaking smooth things, and crying, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace." No; they may praise us now, but they will curse our flattery in eternity.

It has been said of a good man, "He fed on the word, not in order to prepare himself for his people, but for his personal edification. To do so was a fundamental rule with him."

"It was his wish to arrive near the primitive mode of expounding Scripture in his sermons. He said, 'I am just an interpreter of Scripture in my sermons.'"

Not the words he spoke, but the holy manner in which he spoke, was the chief means of arresting souls." [McCheyne.

DR. CAREY.

In an address delivered in London, at the anniversary of the Baptist Missionary Society, by Rev. George Pearce, the 28th of April last, he mentioned the following anecdote of Dr. Carey:—

About forty miles east of Calcutta, there is a pretty little Bengali village, situated on the bank of a wide stream, with which I am well acquainted. Dr. Carey had been in India only three months, when he found that his residence in Calcutta was not tenable; he had received from his brethren at home £100, and did not know when he should get any more. He therefore took a boat, and (I suppose guided by the representation of the natives) journeyed like Abraham to a land which he knew not; he cast himself on the providence of God to lead him, and place him where he would have him settled. His object was to go and take a farm, and cultivate it for his own support. But I know that country well; it is a salt land, it is a deadly region. The boat lay at the landing-place, near an indigo factory. The servants told their master there was an English gentleman and his family in a boat at the landing-place; he sent and invited them to his house, and they went. After they had been there a little while, he asked them who they were, and what they were about to do. Mr. Carey told him he was a missionary, and that he was come to preach the Gospel to the heathen. This man was an infidel. He said, "Where are you going to settle?" "Oh, we are going to take some land in this neighborhood, and we will cultivate it and support ourselves!" He said, "You must not, you shall not, do anything of the kind; it will be your certain death, if you do;" and I know that it would have been. He said, "You shall abide with me;" and so he took them in and sustained them three months. And here is a fact about that good man, which, when I heard it, made me tremble. On the opposite side of the river, is a patch of jungle land, which at high tide is covered with salt water. That venerable man used to go out in the morning with his hatchet in his hand, accompanied by his eldest sons, and cut down the jungle—a work that is now only done by the Coolies, for they only can edure it. But while he was at that person's house, there came a letter from that place not far from Dinagepore, inviting him to come and reside there, and take the charge of a concern which would give him abundant sustenance, and also ample time to pursue his labors. There he commenced a Bengali version of the Scriptures; and had he not thus been arrested in his career, the probability is, that twelve months would not have passed over his head before he had been in the grave.

A GOOD MAN'S WISH.—I freely confess to you, that I would rather, when I am laid in the grave, some one in his manhood should stand over me and say: "There lies one who was a real friend to me, and privately warned me of the dangers of the young; no one knew it, but he aided me in the time of need. I owe what I am to him." Or I would rather have some widow, with choking utterance, telling her children: "There is your friend and mine. He visited me in my affliction, and found you, my son, an employer, and you, my daughter, a happy home in a virtuous family." I say I would rather that such persons should stand at my grave, than to have erected over it the most beautiful sculptured monument of Parisian or Italian marble. [Dr. Sharp.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, June 30, 1853.

THE SUNDAY LAWS.

Some blacksmiths in the neighborhood of the Crystal Palace, where rum-shops are in the full tide of successful operation every Sunday, and where, if we are correctly informed, all manner of debauchery is shamelessly and wantonly practiced, recently undertook to kindle their fires, and put in the day with honest labor; verdantly supposing that sober industry, though attended with a little noise, was not more a desecration of holy time (?) than the shouts and brawls of the dissipated idlers around them. They soon found out their error, however, our very righteous Police interfering with promptitude to suppress such wicked sounds as are made by anvil and sledge-hammer.

We have often expressed our views upon the unequal bearing of the Sunday laws, and would avail ourselves of this incident to again declare our conviction, that they are not only unequal, but worse than useless. People will not keep the Sabbath holy, unless they are prompted by those convictions which are the result of religious education. Legislative enactments never did, and never will, create any conscience with respect to its claims. And it is very certain, as all experience has hitherto shown, that, if men are restrained from work, they will play. If they cannot open their shops and do business, they will seek amusement. Some will ride, some will sing songs and dance, and others will assemble for revelry and dissipation. No law will hinder them. To coerce them into any thing like that orderly behavior which Christians suppose to be essential to a decent respect for the day, is like trying to bind up the sea, and compel it to be still. It cannot be done. We repeat it, all history has shown the utter folly of such attempts.

We do not believe that the entire abrogation of the Sunday laws would be followed by results half so demoralizing as those which grow out of the attempt to enforce them. Would it not be infinitely better for the morals of community, if the thousands who congregate in the neighborhood of the Crystal Palace on Sunday for purposes of dissipation, were all busily employed at work? And is it not probable that they would be thus employed, were it not for the laws which prohibit them? Some would spend the day in idleness, no doubt, as they do other days; but the natural desire of gain which governs most men, would prompt the great body of them to occupy the time with honest labor. Would there be half as many grog-shops, ball-alleys, bowling-saloons, and other places of dissipation, if the Sunday custom were withdrawn from them? It is evident that they would be closed for want of support. Their great revenue is derived from the Sunday idlers, who, having no taste for religious exercises, are allured to scenes of recreation.

Take the innumerable places of public resort in the vicinity of every city, where drinking, gambling, and various other forms of vice are practiced; or take the multitude of grog shops in villages and country places—what constitutes their chief support? Why do they spring up in such appalling profusion, to be sources of crime, defying all the efforts of the law to put them down? Withdraw from them the patronage of Sunday idlers, and one half of them at least would be shut up very quickly. The proprietors of them well know that Sunday is their great harvest day. Then the people are at leisure; the law will not let them work, and their own inclination will not let them go to church. To stay in the house all day, and behave demurely, is intolerable; so off they go to scenes of amusement, or places where they can indulge their natural inclinations without restraint. This is the true reason why such places exist.

Some of our modern reformers would fain follow them still with the strong arm of the civil law. They would go to the Crystal Palace, and to Hoboken, and Harlem, and every other place where rum and recreation are to be had on Sundays, and close up these sources of pleasure by force, on the very just pretext that they are fountains of ruin to the morals of the community. But their uniform experience has been, and ever will be, that in so doing they are attempting too much. They encounter a resistance which cannot, and will not, be overcome. Law is necessarily made for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane; but even these will not be governed too much. A wise government will, therefore, deal gently with the errors which it cannot eradicate. By endeavoring to govern too much it often loses the power of governing at all. 'You have commanded us to suspend our business on Sunday,' say the people, 'and we have obeyed you. You now order us to withdraw from these places of enjoyment, but we will not obey.' Whether such a spirit is right or wrong on the part of the people, is not the question. It is sufficient that it exists. It cannot be coërced.

Our candid opinion is, that the true remedy for these evils, so far as government is concerned, lies in the abrogation of the Sunday laws. Then, those who have religious principle to govern them, will lay aside their business and go to church, as heretofore; while many of those who now spend the day in carousal and crime will betake themselves to labor, and so be kept out of the way of temptation.

THE WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist Western Association held its 18th Annual Meeting with the Church in Independence, Allegany Co., N. Y., commencing on Fifth-day, June 23, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The morning session was occupied with a discourse by Eld. Leman Andrus, from John 15: 7—"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." A good text and an appropriate discourse.

At the opening of the afternoon session, JAMES BAILEY was appointed Moderator, and E. A. GREEN and DANIEL MAXSON, Clerks.

The letters from the churches were then read, including one from each church connected with the Association, and one from the church recently organized at Cussewago, Crawford Co., Pa., asking admission to membership. Some of these letters were very interesting and encouraging. Perhaps we can do our readers no better service than to state in brief the facts set forth by each.

The 1st Alfred Church enjoys stated preaching by Nathan V. Hull; is deeply interested in the benevolent movements of the denomination; does not maintain the monthly concert, and fears that family prayer is not general; has an interesting Sabbath-School and several Bible Classes, and regular prayer and conference meetings; has 265 resident and 137 non-resident members.

Friendship Church is supplied with preaching most of the time by B. F. Robbins. During the past year, two or three valuable members and officers have been removed by death. Resident members 72; non-resident 12.

1st Genesee Church is under the pastoral care of James Bailey; has a large and flourishing Sabbath-School; family prayer to a considerable extent maintained, but not the monthly concert; has 157 members, of whom 25 are non-resident.

Clarence Church is preached to by Rowse Babcok half the time; is so much scattered as to make it difficult to maintain social meetings; has 44 members.

2d Alfred Church has Jared Kenyon pastor, and two licentiates; sustains a Sabbath-School; has received no additions during the year, but has erased from list of members the names of 61 non-residents, who did not communicate with the church agreeable to notice published a year ago.

Hayfield Church is supplied with preaching by Ray Green; has enjoyed a revival during the past year; maintains prayer and conference meetings, a Sabbath-School and Bible Class; has 56 members, after dismissing 14 to form a church at Cussewago.

Persia Church has L. M. Cottrell for preacher, and has been aided to some extent by the Association; has a Sabbath-School, and 36 members.

Hebron Church is supplied half the time by Hiram W. Babcok, pastor; is in union; has a prayer meeting and an interesting Sabbath-School; 45 resident and 15 non-resident members.

Independence Church is under the pastoral care of Thomas E. Babcock; has prayer and conference meetings, and a Sabbath-School; was blessed with a revival last winter, which resulted in 24 additions; 123 resident and 29 non-resident members.

Scio Church is supplied with preaching part of the time by B. F. Robbins and Charles Rowley, but is in rather a destitute condition; has 34 members, of whom about half are non-resident.

2d Genesee Church enjoys the ministerial labors of Phineas S. Crandall; has prayer and conference meetings, and a Sabbath-School; a revival within the past year added 16 to the number of members, of whom there are now 52.

Amity Church has preaching once in two weeks, by Charles Rowley; 30 members, of whom 9 are non-residents.

3d Genesee Church has been revived during the year, and 30 to 40 hopeful conversions are reported; P. S. Crandall preaches to it part of the time and H. P. Green part of the time; 31 additions, of which 22 were by baptism; has a Bible Class and Sabbath-School.

Pendleton Church is without a preacher, but some meetings of a social character are maintained. It has 20 members, of whom 8 are non-resident.

Darien and Cowlesville Church is supplied in part by Rowse Babcock, and meetings are well attended; prayer and conference meetings are maintained, but are thinly attended.

Hartsville Church has H. P. Burdick for pastor, and in his absence during a part of the past year has been supplied with preaching by D. E. Maxson; it has a good Sabbath-School, and numbers 75 members.

Richburgh Church enjoys the ministerial labors of Leman Andrus, and is represented as being in a prosperous condition.

Ulysses Church is supplied in part by H. W. Babcock, through whose labors much good is believed to have been done. Among the additions to the church last year, were thirteen who had recently embraced the Sabbath of the Lord. Speaking of difficulties which the church has to contend with, the letter says: "The Sabbath-keeping Second Adventists are trying to make inroads upon our little church, by promulgating the doctrine that all church organizations and articles of faith are unknown to the Bible, and consequently are the works of the devil. Other doctrines that they teach are nearly as follows: 1st. Man is mortal, both soul and body, unless regenerated and born again, when he becomes entitled to immortality. 2d. The wicked will finally be annihilated. 3d. The soul and body both expire at death. 4th. The devil has the power of sickness, disease, and death. 5th. Children have no souls. And many other kindred doctrines, all of which have their influence."

Cussewago Church was organized March 13, 1853, by 14 members dismissed from the Hayfield Church; 14 others have since been added, making its present number 28. A. A. F. Randolph is its pastor.

The reading of letters from the churches was followed by reading the Corresponding Letters of the Eastern and Central Associations. Geo. B. Utter, the delegate from the Eastern Association, made a brief statement relative to the doing of that body; and James C. Rogers, delegate from the Central Association, gave some account of the recent meeting of that Association.

Repots of the officers of the Association were then presented. The report of the Treasurer stated that during the year he had received $15 328 for Associational Missions, $13 450 for Foreign Missions, and $56 12 for the Tract Society. The report of the Executive Committee was an interesting document. The report of Thomas E. Babcock, delegate to the Eastern Association, was a concise statement of the principal business transacted at that meeting. Rowse Babcock, delegate to the Ohio Association, made a verbal report, to the effect that he attended that meeting last fall, and found the churches very feeble, and much in need of assistance.

The following appointments for the ensuing year were made: Corresponding Secretary—Thomas E. Babcock, Independence, N. Y.; Treasurer—David R. Stillman, Alfred Center, N. Y.; Executive Committee—Thomas E. Babcock, Charles D. Langworthy, James Bailey, Nathan V. Hull, and Ezekiel R. Clarke.

Sixth-day, June 24.

The session on Sixth-day morning was preceded by a sermon from Phineas S. Crandall, on John 16: 8, 9—"For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light," &c.

Immediately after the discourse, the Association entered upon its business.

The request of the Cussewago Church to be admitted to membership in the Association, was granted.

The Committee on the State of Religion presented their report, which was adopted, after remarks by several individuals, as follows:—

The Committee on the State of Religion report, That after a careful review of the communications from the churches composing ~~this Association~~, we feel that we have cause of gratitude to God, for His reviving ~~power~~ upon several of our churches, by which Christians have been greatly refreshed, and sinners converted.

We look also with great interest at the increasing liberality of our brethren in sustaining the benevolent operations of the Association. Our contributions are not the result of momentary excitement, but from a deep-settled conviction that it is our duty to give. This is seen in the systematic order of our monthly contributions.

The missionary efforts of the Association have been crowned with cheering success. The children belonging to our families are to a good extent brought under the benign influence of the Sabbath-School. With few exceptions, our churches are at peace among themselves.

After all these encouragements, we must not conceal the fact, that to a great degree we lack that spiritual power which would make us truly efficient in the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom. The imperious duty of family prayer is to a great extent neglected. Our monthly concert is not generally enough observed. We do not see that thirsting after godliness, or that deep anxiety for a thorough revival of religion, which should characterize us as lights in the world. May the great Head of the Church imbue us more deeply with the spirit of our holy religion, and crown our future efforts to glorify his name with abundant success.

For several years past this Association has had reports presented and read on subjects of general interest, by persons appointed at previous meetings. Last year no appointments were made, and consequently no reports were presented this year; but for next year it was deemed advisable to make appointments. Thomas E. Babcock was appointed to write an essay on the subject of the New Birth, James Bailey on the Immortality of the Soul, and N. V. Hull on the Time of Commencing the Sabbbath.

The question of appointing delegates to sister Associations then came up, and Leman Andrus was appointed delegate to the Eastern, James Bailey to the Central, H. W. Babcock to the North-Western, and Thomas E. Babcock to the Ohio and Virginia.

The Committee on Resolutions presented the following, which were made the special order for the afternoon, viz:—

1. Resolved, That the blessings of our Heavenly Father which have attended our associational missionary efforts, call upon us for thanksgiving, and encourage us to renewed efforts.

2. Resolved, That this Association renders devout thanks to God for his blessing bestowed upon our Foreign and Home Missions, and that this Association repledges itself in their behalf.

3. Resolved, That we take a special interest in behalf of the proposed mission to Palestine, and commend it to the prayerful consideration of our brethren.

4. Resolved, That the proposition of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, to procure in the city of New York a building for the accommodation of its business, which shall also furnish rooms for our Missionary and Tract Societies, together with a Sabbatic Reading-room and Library, meets with the hearty approval of this Association; and that we recommend the brethren whom God has blessed with pecuniary means to contribute liberally for that object.

5. Resolved, That the increasing attention to the claims of the Gospel Ministry, by Sabbath-keeping young men connected with our Literary Institutions, is an encouraging indication, and that we desire to express our sympathy with their efforts to become properly qualified for the good work, and our hope that they may not be turned aside from it.

6. Resolved, That this Association, while it bows with submission to the will of God in the death of our beloved brother James H. Cochran, can not refrain from expressing its sorrow on account of this bereavement, and our heartfelt condolence with the bereaved family of our deceased brother.

7. Resolved, That we recommend to our brethren who are interested in sustaining the benevolent operations among us, that they contribute, as far as practicable, though the churches with which they are connected.

8. Whereas, the "spirit rapping" excitement which has spread over so large a portion of our country, for a few years past is manifestly productive of great evils as our lunatic asylums and distracted churches do testify, therefore, Resolved, That this Association earnestly entreats its membership to abstain from all participation in movements tending to give it support.

The discussion of these resolutions occupied most of the afternoon, and was participated in by a large number of persons. We have not time nor room here to particularize. It must suffice to say, that we have seldom listened to more interesting or feeling remarks upon subjects brought before an associational meeting. We are quite sure that a deep and lasting impression was made in favor of missions, ministerial education, the proposed publishing house, &c. The remarks upon the resolution relative to Bro. Cochran's death, showed that that beloved brother had a strong hold upon the confidence and affections ~~of the~~ people of the Western Association.

Near evening of Sixth-day, the Association finally adjourned, to meet again with the first Church in Alfred on the fifth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in June, 1854. Thomas E. Babcock was appointed to preach the introductory discourse on that occasion; James Bailey alternate.

In addition to the religious exercises above mentioned, there was preaching on the evening following Sixth-day by H. P. Burdick, on Sabbath by Hiram W. Babcock, N. V. Hull, and James C. Rogers; on First-day, in the morning by Wm. M. Jones, and in the afternoon by Geo. B. Utter. A collection for the Associational Mission was taken on Sabbath, and one for the Missionary Society on First-day.

We can not conclude our notice of this meeting, without expressing the great gratification which we, in common with many others felt in the spirit which pervaded the exercises, and the manner in which they were attended. The reports of the officers were complete and comprehensive, and were all presented in due form; the discussions were free, animated, and kindly; and the attendance throughout was large. The people of Independence seem to have prepared for the meeting beforehand; and when it came, they had nothing else to do but to attend it and to entertain their company, which they did in a most cordial and hospitable manner.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Arrival of J. W. Morton—Sunday Observance—The Confession of Faith.

GLASGOW, June 3, 1853.

I am happy here to say that I am cheered by the presence of one Sabbath-keeper, through the safe arrival this morning from New York of the Rev. J. W Morton. "Iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend," and I desire thus to record my thankfulness to God in Christ Jesus who so refresheth my spirit by the communion of one, in many matters, like minded. He hath worthily borne his testimony for God and His Sabbath among his own countrymen and mine, on board the vessel which bore him from the west—from a land in which many give obedience to God's command, to a land in which he will find very few with whom, in this respect, he can fully sympathize.

In our last communication, we noticed the Report of the Sunday Observance Committee of the Free Church Assembly. Since then, the corresponding Committee of the Established Church Assembly have also made their Report. They intimate alarm at the progress of Sunday desecration, and mention the efforts they have made to prevent it. At their suggestion, it appears, numerous Committees have been organized in Presbyteries, and even Associations, in districts of less extent; and it is recommended that the number of these be increased, in order that they may thus more easily influence the legislature and the public mind. Under their direction, a Memorial, subscribed by 1,000 ministers, had been sent to the Queen, against the Sunday opening of the Crystal Palace. "This Memorial," say they, and that in seeming seriousness, "was transmitted to the Right Honorable, the Secretary for the Home Department, Viscount Palmerston, and was duly acknowledged." What less could the Secretary of State have done in regard to a Memorial signed by a thousand ministers? The mere acknowledgment seems to imply on his Lordship's part an unwillingness to promise support. The Assembly has, on this occasion, deposed five of their ministers for drunkenness. In the Court of Queen's Bench, a decision of the Quarter Sessions of Newport Pagnell, affirming the conviction of a publican, for keeping open his house on Sunday "during divine service," was reversed. The usual time for afternoon service in the Episcopal Church is from 3 till 5; but in this case, in consequence of an additional appointment to the minister, the parochial service had been altered, so as to be from 6 till 8 o'clock. Lord Campbell and the other Judges ruled that the time from 3 till 5 is to be held as "the usual hours of afternoon service" referred to in the act of Parliament, requiring public houses to be then shut, and that no party could, by altering their hours of service, make it incumbent upon others to do the same. From 3 till 5 is, therefore, the afternoon portion of Sunday which England contributes towards the universal observance of that day!

In the Established Synod, the appeal of Mr. Goodsir, against Kirk Session, Presbytery, and Synod, for refusing to endeavor to show him how the Confession of Faith and the Greek New Testament could be harmonized, was rejected, on the ground that it implied that the confession was not in accordance with the Scriptures. It was indeed laid down, both in this case and others brought before the Assembly, that the compact between the Church and the State rendered it impossible for them to entertain any motion assuming that discrepancy might exist between the Scriptures and the Confession. This God-dishonoring fact has been obvious from the first, to those who duly considered the matter, but it has not often been so openly avowed by those whom it most immediately concerns. It is not, indeed, only in the Established Churches, Episcopal or Presbyterian, that this influence of human authority against the truth of God prevails, not only because an endowment is at stake; its blight operates in other churches also, where its members and ~~ministers~~ profess adherence to a stereotyped creed, and even where there is only an understanding as to what things are most surely believed amongst them. It results from a fear of man which bringeth a snare, through the tendency to have it asserted, or even believed, that difference of view from fathers or brethren is equivalent to apostacy from divine truth. God's commandment, and man's view of what is "required" therein, are not only put on equal footing, but greater weight is most frequently given to the latter. However dutiful, on the part of either church or individual, to be ready always to give a reason of the hope that is in them, a creed that can never be subjected to revision is destructive of faith and must work injuriously. This Assembly was farther disturbed by the manifestation of an innovating spirit, in being called to consider an overture from Dr. Stark, a lay elder, recommending that the church should revert to the practice of the primitive church in so far as that all the members of a congregation should sit at the table at one time in celebrating the Lord's Supper, and not in detached parties, as in the case at present in the Church of Scotland. There was evinced by the leaders great unwillingness to discuss the question, who recommended to the Doctor that he should bring the subject before the church by means of the press. The overture was accordingly withdrawn by its author, after he had been heard in its support.

J. A. BEGG.

THE WALDENSES.

A large Committee, including representatives of most of the religious denominations, was appointed, at a public meeting held in New York, to assist, by their counsels and otherwise, Rev. Mr. Revel who has been sent to this country by the Synod of the Waldensian Church, to ask for help in behalf of the enterprize which that body is prosecuting for the spread of the Gospel in Italy. That Committee has issued the following appeal:—

"No portion of the Christian Church inspires so deep an interest in retracing its character and history as that of the Waldenses in the mountains and valleys of Piedmont. For a course of centuries before the Reformation they were witnesses for the 'truth as it is in Christ Jesus,' against the corruptions and assumptions of Popery, exemplifying the Christian character in its simplicity and consistency, and sealing their testimony in martyrdom under repeated, continued, severe and crushing persecutions. But they were 'a bush on fire, and not consumed,' for the 'good will of Him that dwelt in the bush' was with them. It is needless to make further reference to the Church of the Waldenses in order to excite the attention and the tenderest and strongest sympathy of American Christians of different denominations in their behalf. Of late years the communications and efforts of British and American Christians who have visited them, have made the public acquainted with their present condition.

"Very recent events in the kingdom of Sardinia have led to the attainment and security of greater privileges and immunities, and a way is opening for their labors in diffusing evangelical truth in Italy. They feel themselves to be a Missionary Church, and already an auspicious commencement has been made at several points in the Missionary work. Has not the great Head of the Church wonderfully preserved this excellent and devoted body of Christians to render them in time the principal instruments in the evangelization of Italy? They are anxious to found a Theological Seminary in their own home, with the leading view of thoroughly training young men for the ministry and the missionary service.

"In the great scantiness of their own resources they appeal for aid in founding the proposed seminary, and advancing their missionary work, to their Christian brethren of the different Protestant Churches. They have delegated the Moderator of this ancient Synod, the Rev. Jean Pierre Revel, to visit our American Churches and present their appeal. He comes to us commended very highly, not merely by the official station which he occupies, but also for the excellence of his personal character. We feel peculiar pleasure in receiving and welcoming him among us. The reminiscences connected with the past in the history of the Waldenses, and the associations of the present, combine to give an interest and importance to his mission rarely found, which every branch of the Protestant Church will, doubtless, cordially estimate and respond to.

"Brother Revel purposes to return to his home before the autumn. He will of course, however diligently employed, be able to visit only a few leading points in our country. It is desirable that the churches should, without waiting for a personal visit from him, take measures for making their contributions to this object. It is his purpose, as far as practicable, by a judicious distribution of his time, to become acquainted with the churches, and make a personal appeal in various principal cities. We most earnestly and affectionately commend him, and the object which he is commissioned to present, to our ministerial brethren, to the churches of our respective denominations, and to private Christians. Contributions may be forwarded to Mr. Anson G. Phelps, Jr., Treasurer, or Edward Vernon, Assistant Treasurer, at the Office of the American and Foreign Christian Union, No. 17 Beekman-st., New York.

"The objects for which our Waldensian brethen need our aid are:

"1. The establishment of a Theological Seminary, in connection with their College at La Tour, (their principal village,) where their young men may be trained for preaching the Gospel in Italian, instead of being sent to Geneva and Lausanne, where they must be taught through the medium of the French. The sum of $20,000 will suffice to endow this Seminary with three Professors.

"2. The completion of a church at Turin, the building of one in Pignerol, and the opening of several chapels in Casale, Genoa, Nice, &c.

"3. The support of missionaries in many places in Piedmont, where their labors are now demanded.

"4. The education of young men—not only natives, but also converted Italians—for the work of making known the Gospel in Italy."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

Father Gavazzi, who met with such rough usage in Canada, lately, having returned to New York, was invited by a large number of our respectable citizens to deliver a lecture on the "Freedom of Speech." The lecture was given in Metropolitan Hall, on the evening of the 22d inst., to a numerous audience. A Police force of about one hundred men was on hand, ready for duty in case of need. No attempt at disturbance was made, however.

After addressing the Italians for a short time in their native language, Father Gavazzi proceeded to speak in English. After some remarks upon the object of the meeting, he said:—

I am not going to ask Archbishop Hughes for a license to speak. While I live in America, and am not under the tyranny of Russia, or of Austria, I will enjoy the freedom of America! [A whirlwind of applause, with the waving of hands, hats, handkerchiefs, &c.] When the whirlwind had subsided, Father Gavazzi remarked—"This is better than the stones of Quebec!" [Renewed applause.]

The greatest imputation against me for my going to Canada is that the Canadians are not pleased with my apostacy. I read, in Protestant papers, speaking of Protestants going over to Romanism, and they are not called apostates; but the Roman Catholics call all who go over to Protestantism apostates! They might, if they chose, call the Apostles apostates, and Christ an apostate—for he was a Jew before he commenced to preach. If I am an apostate, I am an apostate in very good company. If I am an apostate from the Romish Church, I am not an apostate from the Rome of St. Paul. And Prof. Brownson, and Bishops Newman and Ives are apostates from the faith which they embraced. If Brownson, or Newman, or Ives speak in England or America in favor of Romanism and against Protestantism the Protestants support them in their freedom of speech, and Roman Catholics are bound to support the freedom of speech when there are lectures against Catholicism. The majority of the people of Canada may be Catholics, but they should not oppose the freedom of speech because they are the greatest in numbers.

Alluding to the influence of Public Schools, he said:—

If the children of Catholics are sent to the Public Schools, I venture to assert that before one generation shall have passed away, there will be scarcely any but Protestants in America. But, if a Catholic desires to send his children to the Common School, his Priest interposes, and compels him to send them to a Catholic School. In Lower Canada the Catholic Schools have for seventy-five years been fostered. What is the result? The result is that the pupils have been taught to argue with sticks and stones, and weapons of a similar nature. So long as I live, so long shall I lift up my voice against these vicious Seminaries. They say there are three hundred and twenty-seven Primary Schools in the Papal States, and people say, Well, that is very excellent and praiseworthy. But, my friends, let us see what these Schools are. These Schools are kept by some old men and women, and have some very dirty little boys and girls attending them. The parents of these children must pay, some four, some five, and six shillings per month, for being taught a few prayers, and a little from the Catechism, no reading and writing; if they would learn those branches, there is another School for them, at which they must pay a dollar per month. These Schools are not like yours; they do not desire to teach them, because when ignorant they are so much the more easily governed. It is, and ever has been, the policy of the Romish Church to keep its people in the most profound ignorance. Blind people are so easily guided. [Laughter.] Remember that you are Americans! If a Frenchman, or an Irishman, or an Englishman, or any foreigner comes to your country, and asks to become an American citizens, they are no longer French, or Irish, or English, but they are Americans! [Applause.] Therefore, let them send their children to the Common Schools; to the American Schools. I like Prussia, because in that country, no person is able to occupy any public situation unless he has been educated in the national school. Let Catholics have their private schools, but let your Senators, your Legislators enact laws prohibiting any person who has not been educated in the common school from holding office.

Speaking of the riot in Montreal, he remarked:—

The object of the riot takes this shape—it was not against me as an individual, but it was against the freedom of speech. And when you lose this liberty, you may say you are locked up in a prison; that you are all slaves. But I will repeat, what I have before said, if I am wrong, if I speak falsely, don't answer me with sticks and stones, and guns, and such like arguments, but by facts; answer me as men, and not as brutes. [Here he quoted an Italian proverb.] When the Romanists use such arguments, they only show the weakness of their positions. Such arguments are very forcible, but rarely persuasive or convincing. [Laughter.] There came an unknown man into the church, who distributed a number of sticks, and another man came into the church bearing a crucifix, and to all the Catholics he said, "For the love of this cross you must have his blood." Others carried stones in their pockets—those were their school-books. I suppose those were the stones which are alluded to by Matthew, where it said, "On this rock I build up my Church." [Laughter and applause.] I do not think this dreadful riot would have been attended with such disastrous consequences but for the weak mindedness of the Mayor of Montreal. For our friends were able to repel two attacks which were made on the doors, and the lecture passed off without any mishap. But the Mayor became frightened, and as the audience were going home, he ordered the troops to fire. No one can deplore this melancholy disaster more than myself, and I hope that no more blood will have to be shed for me.

He then spoke, in conclusion, of the Bill now before our Legislature, which is framed to allow the Catholic Bishops to hold the Church properties and their revenues, and transmit them to their successors, thereby creating vast monopolies :—

This law will seriously endanger the liberties of the people. And the law would grant them more than has ever been conceded them, even in Italy. He said the law would give them the power to accumulate vast sums of money, and wealth was as powerful in America as in any country. In the course of a few years, when the Archbishop became the possessor of ten or twenty millions of dollars, how would he employ them? Already have they built one magnificent Cathedral, and they are planning another. Instead of building stately Churches let them go to the Workhouse where there are some 5,000 poor, mostly Catholics, and feed and clothe them. [Great applause.] He concluded with some remarks on "High and Low Church," and said that the Church of Christ had no such distinction, and made an earnest appeal to the Protestants to be "firm and united, UNITED! and may God bless you." At the close he was warmly applauded, and the audience quietly dispersed.

During his lecture some bouquets were thrown to him; he took them up, and said, "These are better than the stones of Quebec."

THE POPE AND SOULOQUE I.—Late accounts from Hayti speak of great excitement there, occasioned by the arrival at Port-au-Prince of his Lordship Vincent Spaccapietra, Bishop of Arcadcopoles, and Apostolic Delegate from His Holiness Pope Pius IX. to the Court of Faustin the First. He was received with the most imposing demostrations. On entering the city he was met by a religious procession, numbering some three or four thousand, by which he was escorted to the Catholic Church, when he was met by the Vicar-General in full canonicals. A few days after, he had an audience with the Emperor, who received him, seated on his throne, when he made an address as follows, which we copy to show how a representative of the Pope talks to a black man :—

"Our Holy Father, Pope Pius IX., to second the piety and religion of your Majesty, has just sent me as an Apostolic delegate, to your imperial Court. Honored with this sublime mission, entirely spiritual and heavenly, which is in nowise connected with temporal matters, it is impossible to express to you the sentiments of my soul in presenting you these dispatches from the common father of all the faithful. You will find in them the desire of his paternal heart, which embraces all nations in the same love (for they all come from the same God) for the happiness of your empire—that happiness which reposes only in the faith of Jesus Christ, and, consequently, upon the union the most close and rigid with the vicar of the Divine Savior, upon the most intimate union of Church and State.

"Sire, as the minister of God, I regard you with satisfaction as the Constantine of your people; and history will pronounce you the Napoleon of the Antilles, of which your empire has always been considered the queen."

CHRISTIAN DANCING.—In our notice of the doings of the New School Presbyterian General Assembly, we stated that they adopted a resolution against dancing by professors of religion. The following is the resolution in full :—

"Resolved, That the fashionable amusement of promiscuous dancing is so entirely unscriptural and eminently and exclusively of that 'world which lieth in wickedness,' and so wholly inconsistent with the spirit of Christ, and with that propriety of Christian deportment, and that purity of heart which his followers are bound to maintain, as to render it not only improper and injurious for professing Christians either to partake in it or qualify their children for it by teaching them the art; but also to call for the faithful and judicious exercise of discipline on the part of the Church Sessions, when any of the members of their churches have been guilty."

THE ORIGINAL WASHINGTONIANS.—John H. W. Hawkins, in answer to the statement going the rounds, (attributed to John B. Gough,) that the leader of the Baltimore Washingtonian movement is keeping a low grog-shop in Baltimore, gives the present standing of the original six, as follows :—

"David Anderson, master blacksmith, doing well, and accumulating property; John F. Hoss, master carpenter, doing well; James McCurley, a master coachmaker, doing well, also accumulating property; Archibald Campbell, silverplater, doing an extensive business; William R. Mitchell, on his own farm, seven miles from Baltimore—unfortunately does not keep his pledge; George Stears died in 1841, a sober man—kept his pledge to the last."

CHURCH BELLS.—The Messrs. Meneely, of West Troy, N. Y., are manufacturers of every description of Church, Steamboat, and Factory Bells, and from their long experience in the business, and the facilities at their command, are able to suit the most fastidious. Those wishing any thing in their line are referred to their advertisement in another column.

The Grand Jury of Bristol County, Mass., have found an indictment against John Murphy, of Fall River, for murdering his wife, by tying her upon a bed and pouring vitriol down her throat.

The steamship Niagara arrived at Halifax on Wednesday, June 22, bringing Liverpool dates to the 11th inst. The news is not important.

The installation week at Oxford brought together a large concourse. Earl Derby, the Chancellor of the University, conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws on 23 gentlemen—among them Mr. Ingersoll, the U. S. Minister; Bishop McIlvanie, of Ohio; Bishop Mountain, of Quebec; Sir Edward Bulwer; Allison, the Historian; Eastlake, the Painter; Grote, Warren, Ayton, &c.

There were 1,000 visitors daily to the steam yacht North Star. Mr. Vanderbilt had invited the Mayor and Corporation of Southampton to a banquet on board, and the City of Southampton had invited the Commodore and party to a dejeuner.

Immense hostility has been excited in Ireland against the proposed bill for the Inspection of Nunneries.

The crops throughout Britain and Ireland are healthy, notwithstanding the lateness of Spring, and in some places deficiency of rain. The weather is now settled and seasonable.

The Turkish troubles are not yet settled, and it is at present impossible to tell what turn things in that quarter will take.

California News.

The United States Mail steamship Crescent City, arrived at this port on Wednesday morning, June 22, having left Aspinwall at noon on the 13th inst.

She brings the mails, passengers and treasure which left San Francisco the evening of May 24, in the Pacific mail steamship Republic. Also, a number of returned Australian miners who had chosen the Panama route homeward. Their accounts of the yield of the gold mines in Australia are exceedingly favorable. They have a large amount of gold dust in their possession.

The election affray at San Francisco, reported by the last arrival, was not serious. Of the parties concerned in it, Mr. Wolfe is fearfully bruised about the face and in his side, but not mortally.

Dr. D. W. Petrie, late of Oswego Co., N. Y., committed suicide on the 23d ult., at the residence of Dr. White in San Francisco.

The news from the mines is of the most favorable character, and the product of gold dust this summer is expected to exceed that of any former season.

The agricultural prospects of the State are also very fine, and there will be abundant crops of small grain.

Heavy rains have fallen recently at Los Angelos—a thing almost unprecedented. Great pains are being taken with the fruit grown in that region, and it is expected that the yield of figs, apricots, grapes, &c., will be this season very handsome.

The shock of an earthquake was felt at Acapulco on the night of the 2d of June, and considerable apprehensions of farther and more disastrous visitations existed in the community.

DANIEL T. WOODWARD, sentenced to death at Washington, for the murder of his wife, the other day, has written the following appeal to the youth of the District of Columbia :—

"To the Youth of the District of Columbia,—As I have but a few days to live, I feel it my duty to caution you from following my course of life, if you would live long and respected by all who know you. No matter how humble your condition of life, keep the Sabbath holy, refrain from profane company, and, above all things, refrain from the great destroyer, ardent spirits. Look at my condition. I, instead of being one of your best citizens, beloved and esteemed by all, you find me in my lonely cell, under sentence of death, charged with one the most awful crimes that could be perpetrated on earth; from once a pious youth the cause referred to above.

"DANIEL T. WOODWARD."

SUMMARY.

A Company has been organized in this City, to be called the New York and Western Railroad Co., with a capital of twelve millions of dollars, for the purpose of building a Railroad from Hoboken to Canandaigua, through the Counties of Rockland, Orange, Ulster, Sullivan, Delaware, Otsego, Chenango, Cortland, Cayuga, Seneca and Ontario. The subscription required by the law has been filled up and the documents of the organization filed at Albany. This road will be 265 miles in length, will run about equidistant between the Erie and the Central line, and will afford railroad facilities to a large and rich district of country, now without such facilities. At Canandaigua the road will unite with the Canandaigua and Niagara Falls Road, making a line from this City to the Falls 90 miles shorter than the line via Albany. The preliminary surveys have been made, and a feasible line formed with no grade over 43 feet.

The suit by the Northern Indiana Railroad Co. against the Illinois Central Co., to prevent their crossing the track at the place where the late collsion occurred, has been decided in favor of the Northern Indiana Co. The Court required the Central Co. to apply at once for Commissioners to determine the manner of crossing, and in the meantime the Central Co. is required in all cases to give the cars of the Northern Indiana Co. the preference and priority of crossing. The Central Co. have given the stipulations required by the order of the Court.

Mr. John C. Moore, Legislative Reporter for The Concord Patriot, has now in his possession, for transmission to the World's Fair at New York, a pair of woolen footings, knit by Mrs. Frost, of the town of Madison, N. H., who is now enjoying tolerable good health, although in the hundredth year of her age. Three years ago the old lady could say, "Arise, daughter, and go to thy daughter, for thy daughter's daughter hath had a daughter!"

We were shown the other evening one of two notes, addressed to the two members of an old commercial house in this City—one of the gentlemen is proprietor of one of our newest palace-hotels—containing these words, to wit: "The inclosed is in settlement of an old debt." Each note contained a bill of the Merchant's Exchange Bank for one thousand dollars. The recipients have no suspicion of their origin.

The Charleston Mercury says: "We learn that the case of Reuben Roberts against Sheriff Yates, or rather of Great Britain against South Carolina, has come to a very 'lame and impotent conclusion.' Orders have been received through the British Minister, that further proceedings in the case be discontinued, and that their counsel be paid off and discharged. It is presumed the British Government became convinced that, whatever might be the decision of the case before the Supreme Court, they could only gain a loss by it; and the greater loss in the event of winning the suit—inasmuch as it would most certainly have been followed, not by the abrogation of the law of South Carolina, but that of the Reciprocity Treaty, on which their complaint was founded."

There was quite a riot in New York on Wednesday evening, 22d inst., arising from the discovery of portions of a human skeleton in the cellar of a drug store in First Avenue. The mob forced open the house and demolished everything they could get hold of. It appears that two medical students had been dissecting a body for scientific purposes, and were not careful enough in taking care of their subject. The Coroner will investigate the matter. During the riot one of the 18th Ward Police was severely injured by a blow on one of his legs. He was conveyed to the Police Station and medical aid procured.

The Hartford Courant of June 23, says: Mr. Langworthy, Member of the Legislature from Stonington, has left at our office several stalks of Australian Wheat, a new variety. They are about six feet in length, and the heads are very large and well filled. We learn from Mr. L. that this is a most valuable variety of wheat, and that from thirty to forty bushels per acre can be raised on strong land. The specimens left with us can be seen by any who take an interest in the subject.

The Montgomery (Ala.) papers give an account of a distressing case of seduction and murder which occurred near that place last week. The parties in the affair were Alpheus Jones and Dr. Miller, the latter of whom seduced the wife of Jones, who caught him in the act, and rushed upon him. Miller, however, drew a bowie-knife, and stabbed Jones to the heart, causing instant death. Miller then made his escape, and at last accounts had not been arrested.

A company of gentlemen is in process of arrangement for the purpose of setting in operation a Metropolitan Telegraph for communication with all parts of New York City. The present idea is to establish in the upper part of the town ten offices, with House's printing instrument, and wires connecting with the office in Wall-st. They will transmit brief messages for a very small sum, and must necessarily do a large business.

One of the immense pletes of glass—sixteen feet long, and nine feet wide—intended for the front of Taylor's Restaurant, corner of Broadway and Franklin-st., New York, was broken while the workmen were putting it in its place. It was stated to have cost $1,030, and was the largest plate in the United States. Several others were broken during the voyage.

In Philadelphia, Thursday, June 23, as eight workmen were standing upon the rafters of a ceiling in old Masonic Hall, which is now in course of demolition, the ceiling gave way, precipitating them all to the floor. No bones were broken, but they were all considerably cut and bruised.

A dispatch dated Providence, R. I., Monday, June 20, 1853, says the case of Wm. H. Greene against the officer who seized his liquor under the law which the Court declared to be unconstitutional, was decided that day in the Circuit Court sitting at Newport, the verdict being for the plaintiff—damages $10, which does not carry costs.

Daniel R. Clapp has recovered a verdict against the city of Providence, R. I., for $3,379 50, in the Circuit Court at Newport. Mr. Clapp fell in the streets in a very slippery time last winter, and broke his leg. He claimed damages on the ground that the city was bound to enforce the law providing for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks.

The Lansing (Mich.) Journal says: On Thursday, the 2d inst., a tornado resembling rather a tropical hurricane than the tempests usual to this latitude, swept over a portion of this country, through the township of Alaiedon, &c., with irresistible fury, tearing up the forest by acres, and prostrating houses, barns, &c.

The Rev. David Sharp, a distinguished Baptist minister of Boston, died on Thursday evening last, at the residence of his friend, Robert Brown, Esq., at Stoneley, near Baltimore. The deceased was about seventy years of age, and had been Pastor of the Charles-st. Baptist Church in Boston for over forty years. He was born in England, but came to this country at the age of nineteen.

James McGuire, convicted at Syracuse, Thursday, June 23, in the Circuit Court, of the murder of James W. Holland, was sentenced by Judge Hubbard to be hanged on Wednesday the 17th of August. The murder was committed in Onondaga Town last winter. McGuire protests that he is innocent.

Saturday afternoon, June 25, about 6 o'clock, Captain Winthrop Richardson, a well known retired tailor of Boston, while crossing the Maine Railroad track at Melrose, a few miles from Boston, was struck by the Express train and dashed to pieces, not a piece being found larger than his hand.

Judge Hubbell, (formerly of Ithaca, N. Y.,) is now under impeachment and trial for corrupt and scandalous conduct as a Judge, before the Legislature of Wisconsin. The prosecutor, in his opening, affirms that some of the witnesses against him have simultaneously left for California since they were subpenaed.

No less than 35 deaths were reported at the Coroner's Office, New York, in one day last week. Some ten or twelve of them are supposed to be from sun strokes, and the remaining from casualties, apoplexy, intemperance, exhaustion, and similar causes. The Coroners were only able to attend to about half of the cases.

MARRIED,

In Christiana, Wis., on the 5th of June, by A. P. Stillman, Esq., Mr. LAFAYETTE DAVIS, of Fulton, Wis., to Miss LAURA L. HERSEY, of Ruggles, Ohio.

In Marlboro, N. J., on the 23d inst., by Eld. D. Clawson, Mr. ELIAS AYARS, of Shiloh, and Mrs. MARY SMITH, of Allowaystown, N. J.

DIED,

In Milton, Wis., April 23d, of erysipelas, Widow AMY W. BABCOCK, in the fifty-third year of her age. Sister Babcock had been for years suffering very much from scrofulous consumption. She bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude, with the strongest assurance that "it would all turn out for her good." She was an example of meekness and Christian submission. She embraced religion in early life, and was one of the members of the Sabbath-keeping Church in Scott, where she remained a worthy member for some years. Thence she moved to Alfred, N. Y., and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church of that place, remained there two years, thence she came to this place, and, unlike too many others, she united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church of Milton, and won the confidence and friendship of numerous friends. From this she has gone, we doubt not, to the church triumphant. V. H.

In Milton, Wis., May 24th, Mr. ELIJAH GOODRICH, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. Bro. Goodrich made a profession of religion in early life, and united with the First-day Baptist Church at New Lebanon, N. Y. His place of residence, previous to his removal to this place, was in the town of Hancock, Mass. He had by his prudent course of conduct won for himself a large number of friends. Indeed, he was loved and respected by all who knew him, and those who knew him best respected him most. "He died as the good man dieth, and was gathered unto his fathers." V. H.

At Southampton, Ill., April 30th, 1853, of scarlet fever, aged 19 years, 1 month, 14 days, THAMAZINE, daughter of Dr. Phineas Crouch. The deceased obtained a hope in Christ a little more than a year ago, but did not conform to the duty of baptism until a few weeks before her death, when she followed both her parents in the example and precept of Christ to be buried with him in baptism, and seemed to enjoy the occasion very much. Her sickness was very short and severe, and she died, as we trust, in the Lord, and left to heart-stricken parents the comforting assurance that she has exchanged a world of sin and sorrow for a world of glory—a body of disease, death, and corruption, for immortality and eternal life.

Also, on the 1st of May, ORTON, son of the same parents, aged 5 years, 11 months, 18 days.

Again, May 20th, REUBEN, another son of the above, and of the same complaint, aged 9 years, 2 months, 18 days. The sickness of the last was more protracted, but from the beginning he expressed a desire to die, and go to heaven, where he had a rational (for such a child) hope that he should see his little brother and sister who died some years before, and be forever happy with all the bright angels of God. Only once did he express any desire to recover, and then, when he seemingly reflected on the loneliness of his parents and brother, the only surviving child, he expressed a single wish that he might get well, to be company for them, and assist them in their work; but his chief desire was to die and go to heaven.

Thus these parents, in about three weeks, have been three times stricken, and made to drink the bitter cup of suffering to its very dregs; but we trust that they mourn not as those without hope, but rather that they have hope that they will see their children again, and join with them in a song of praise to God and the Lamb, that shall never end. S. C.

At Albion, Wis., on the 7th inst., of inflammation of the lungs, SARAH, wife of Giles F. Lawton, and daughter of Dea. Joseph A. Potter, aged 25 years, 4 months, and 16 days. Sister Lawton experienced religion in early life, and such was her devotion to the cause of the Redeemer that approaching death was disarmed of all its terror. Her parting blessing upon her family and friends was truly interesting, and the tenderness with which she presented her Bible and Testament to her two little children, that they might learn therefrom where their mother had gone, was truly expressive of that faith which is "a full conviction of things not seen." O. P. H.

In Verona, N. Y., May 11th, BENJAMIN WEST, aged 91 years. Brother West was a member of the 2d Seventh-day Baptist Church in Verona. He formerly resided in Grafton, N. Y., and was a member of a First-day Baptist Church in Petersburg, but he observed the Sabbath of the Lord. When he removed to Verona, he united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church, of which he remained a worthy member until removed by death to join the church above.

In Verona, June 14th, SALOME, wife of Dea. Hiram Sherman, aged 48 years. Sister Sherman was a worthy member of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Verona. Her last illness was distressing in the extreme, which she bore with Christian patience. She has left a deeply-afflicted husband, and two children only, out of twelve, to mourn her loss. She had numerous other relatives, by whom she was much beloved, and will long be lamented. But she has gone to be with Christ, and to meet her dear children and friends, that went home to glory before her. C. C.

On the 8th inst., JOHN A. BROWN, of Hopkinton, R. I., at the Butler Insane Asylum. Brother Brown professed religion when a boy of 12 years, and united with the 2d Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, and ever sustained the character of the faithful Christian. Last winter, during a revival in his neighborhood, being of a warm temperament, he became over-excited, and ultimately totally deprived of reason. But being put under medical treatment, he soon became calm, and almost perfectly sane. His friends were much encouraged with the hope of a speedy recovery. But as soon as he began to gain strength his lunacy would return with redoubled fury. Thus were his friends alternately driven from hope to fear for about one month, when, on the 1st day of April, his physician viewing his case doubtful, advised his removal to the Retreat, where he breathed his last, unconscious of the absence of those he loved most, and them that loved him best. On the 10th inst. his remains were brought to his father's house. The 11th they were deposited in the old family burying ground in that town. The family and numerous friends convened at the meeting-house where the departed had so often bent his willing steps to join in worshiping that God whom he loved so well while in the flesh, and listened to a sermon by C. M. Lewis, from 2 Cor. 5: 1, which was well calculated to calm the bereaved, awaken the careless, comfort and encourage the Christian in the hope of the gospel. Our brother left an affectionate and faithful wife, an indulgent father, a tender mother, four brothers, and one sister, whose attachments were unusually strong, all being respectable members of the same faith, to lament this severe providence of God. G. H. P.

In North Stonington, Ct., on the 16th inst., Mrs. EMILY M. GEER, wife of Mr. Henry C. Geer, in the 26th year of her age. Mrs. G. had never made a profession of religion, but thought she obtained hope in Christ in her last sickness, which sustained her in the dying hour.

At South Ferry, in South Kingston, R. I, on the 18th inst., of consumption, Mrs. FANNY G., wife of Mr. Clark Rodman, Jr., and daughter of Issac Cundall, of Hopkinton, in the 38th year of her age. She obtained hope in Christ and made a public profession of religion in December, 1850. She ever maintained a Christian deportment after that, till called to her reward. Her sickness was borne with patience, and though she had many things to attach her to life, yet such was her confidence of salvation through Christ, that she expressed a strong preference to depart and be with him, as a condition which would be far better.

In Petersburg, N. Y., on the 4th inst., of dropsy of the chest, Mrs. POLLY CLARKE, wife of Benjamin Clarke, aged sixty-eight years and six months. She was for many years a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Petersburg, and during her last illness expressed a hope that it would be well with her after death.

In Charlestown, R. I., June 17, 1853, Mr. JOSEPH MACOMBER, aged 70 years and 10 months.

HOMŒPATHIC PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.

Missionary Society—Board Meeting.

THE next Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society will be held at Plainfield, N. J., on Fifth-day, July 14, at 10 o'clock A. M. G. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

Publishing Society—Board Meeting.

A QUARTERLY MEETING of the Board of Managers of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishihg Society will be held at Plainfield, N. J., on Fifth-day, July 14, at 2 o'clock P. M.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of TITSWORTHS & DUNN, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U. S. and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

Miscellaneous.

A Fact for a Fiction.

We happened to be staying, for a brief season, some sixteen or eighteen years ago, in a little village in the interior of Illinois at the village tavern. The usual bustle announced, one evening, the arrival of some travelers, and presently the landlord ushered into the common sitting room two white men and a negro. The former disencumbered themselves of their outer garments, and we saw they were well armed with knife and pistol; the latter had neither coat, comforter, nor leggins, to throw off, nor arms to show, but his hands were tied behind him. We soon learned they were slave-hunters and a captured slave. Such indulgence was shown to the black man as any good-natured master condescends to bestow upon his dog; he was permitted to have a seat at a corner of the wide chimney-place, and while his masters sat down to a warm and comfortable supper in the adjoining room—the table, in case of accident, being drawn to just without the doorway—they tossed to him bits of meat and bread with which to break his day's fast. "I'll thank you, gentlemen," said one of the hunters to those present, "to keep an eye on the fellow." He either did not hear, or did not think it best to heed, the rather irreverent exclamations of one or two of them—that "they'd be damned if they did." As the white men seemed inclined to be communicative, the brief story of this successful slave-hunt was soon drawn out of them. "Jem," the fugitive, was the slave of one of these fellows, and had escaped from his plantation in Kentucky a little more than a year before. On reaching Illinois he was arrested under her laws, and required to enter into the usual bonds, and being unable, of course, to do that, was detained where he was arrested, to work out the time of a year and a day, fixed, we understood, by the statute, before he could be permitted to continue, in his own way, the "pursuit of happiness." That time had expired to within the day, when this man appeared and claimed him as his slave, and he was at once surrendered.

The village where he was taken was about thirty miles from that where we then were, and the party had left it that morning, the white men on horseback, and the slave on foot. The traveling was very heavy, and their progress slow, the more so necessarily that but two of them were mounted. That they might get on faster, the whites at length concluded to take their turns alternately at walking—"tye and go," they call it in that country—that the slave might be saved something of the fatigue, and be enabled when he did walk, to travel more rapidly. It did not occur to them that they ran any risk in such an arrangement, but the slave was not so forgetful. He trudged on quietly for miles, riding when he was permitted, and walking briskly on foot, till he was quite certain that the confidence of his captors in him was complete, and their vigilance slumbering.

In the afternoon, the opportunity he had been watching for anxiously all day came. The party were just entering a strip of timber-land, which, the slave knew enough of the country to be certain, must border a creek. He was then on horseback, and had, without exciting suspicion, pushed a hundred yards or so ahead of the other horseman; the man on foot was near him, but four legs he calculated were better than two, and he hoped the horse would soon carry him out of the reach of his pursuers. The venture was a desperate one, with an armed man within pistol-shot behind him, and another mounted not much farther off. The first bullet might bring either him or his horse to a stand, and in two minutes he might either be dead or recaptured, and so worse off than before. No doubt he calculated his chances, and being determined to make the attempt to regain his freedom, took this opportunity as the best the day might offer. We could see in his eyes, and the firm set of his mouth, as he sat by the fire and listened to his master's narration of the circumstances, that he was not a man to be appalled by difficulties.

As they entered the wood, one glance behind him was enough to show that now was his time. He shook his bridle-rein, struck his heels into his horse and shouted. The beast obeyed and sprang forward. "Shoot him! shoot him!" cried the mounted man in the rear, while the man on foot started in pursuit with such speed as he could make. And this was so good that he saw he was gaining on the fugitive, and so did not use his pistols; for though a dead slave is better than no slave at all, it is not to be thought of so long as there is any hope of a live one. The chase was exciting, and conducted with great spirit on all hands; the pursuers screamed, cursed and threatened; and Jem kept his horse to his mettle, pushed his way vigorously through the trees and underbrush, and just at the right moment, when he saw he must be overtaken if he stuck to his horse any longer, he threw himself from his back, and rushed forward. A few moments brought him to the edge of the bluff—the high bank of the creek. It was not quite a perpendicular descent, though thirty or forty feet in height. Hardly stopping to look, he threw himself on his side and rolled and tumbled and scrambled to the bottom. His master was close behind him, and followed him in the same fashion; and before either could rise, they were in a desperate grapple. Sheer strength and pluck would have carried it in Jem's favor, but his master, in the struggle, had contrived to get out his bowie-knife, and Jem cried "Enough!" when he saw the gleam of it uplifted over him. The battle over, he submitted to be bound, and the rest of the journey he made on foot.

"Now Jem," said his master, as he finished his story, "ar n't you ashamed of yourself, and sorry for running?"

"No, Massa."

"Why, you villain, what do you want to get away for? ar n't I going to take you to a good home; and didn't I always give you enough to eat and drink, and treat you well?"

"Yes, Massa."

"Well, come, now, say you'll never try to escape again, and it will be the better for you."

"Massa, I shall try," said Jem, and he drew himself up as he said it, and looked even proud and defiant—"I shall try the first chance I get; for I want my liberty."

That night he was locked up in jail for safe keeping; and in the morning, we saw them depart, as they arrived, the white men mounted, and Jem, on foot, at his master's stirrup, and his hands tied behind him.

They expected to arrive that night at Vandalia, about thirty miles distant. We inquired, some days later, of a gentleman from that place if he knew if they arrived. The white men, he said, did, "and were raving about there for days, the maddest white men he ever saw; cursing the nigger between every drink, and offering any reward for any tidings of him." They had loosed his hands, they said, the latter part of the day, for he was foot-sore, and weary with the heavy traveling, and, they knew, could n't run; but the first timber they came to, Jem was missing. On subsequent inquiry, we learned their efforts to take him were fruitless, and they had gone home without him. Jem, we doubt not, was wise enough after that never to show himself to a white man in Illinois, but probably did his journeying by the light of the North Star. [National Anti-Slavery Standard.

Professional Slave-hunters.

The Williamsburgh Times has the following interesting account of a patriarchal peculiarity from the pen of a traveling correspondent who writes from Aiken, S. C:—

"In almost every community in the South, resides an individual whose professional employment is the hunting, for pay, of runaway slaves. He keeps a pack of twelve or thirteen sure-scented blood-hounds, and on receiving a commission, starts off in pursuit on horseback, accompanied by his dogs. When once these are placed on trial, neither distance nor time will save the fugitive; on they go, through woods, meadows and swamps, their deep-mouthed voices being sometimes heard miles away. The owner of the dogs must keep up with them, for should he be in the background when the fugitive is overtaken, the poor wretch would soon be torn in pieces. When all hope of escape is lost, the runaway generally contrives to mount a tree, and thus saves his body from the lacerating fangs of the dogs. The owners of these hounds have such control over them that they can call them off a scent at any moment, and instantly subdue their ferocity toward a victim they may have run down. The remuneration received for hunting a fugive varies from $10 to $50, according to the time employed. These "sportsmen" are almost invariably unaccompanied on their expeditions by any human being, and are men of indomitable courage. It is well they are so, for occasionly they fall in with an ugly customer, who endeavors to kill his pursuer if he can. Being necessary appendages to society, there hunters are not regarded with that aversion which one would naturally think their peculiar occupation would excite; on the contrary, they are frequently spoken of as nice men, good neighbors, &c. Some even have a reputation for piety.

"Sometimes these blood-hounds are used to hunt white fugitives from justice. About three weeks ago a gentleman living near this locality had a valuable carriage-horse stolen. The hounds were started in quest of the rogue, pursued him across the Savannah River, and after a chase of twelve hours—by which time the horse which the fellow had stolen was completely "used up," having traveled fifty miles—he was captured. To save himself, as far as possible, from being worried by the dogs, the fellow stood upright on the saddle, but as it was, his legs and feet were horribly mangled before the owner of the pack came up. I was told of another instance where a pack of hounds entered the City of Augusta in full cry, in pursuit of a white thief who had robbed a house a few miles distant, and although the fellow, knowing that the dogs were after him, visited one or two hotels, passing up and down stairs, in hopes of throwing the animals off the scent, he was unsuccessful, and finally, in despair, made for the country again, and was captured after running about three miles."

Wet Feet.

We were aroused 2 o'clock at night by a loud knocking at the door, and soon learned it was a kind father who came to hurry us off to see his only son, a boy about four years old. We went with all possible speed the distance of two miles with a good horse. When the sound of our footsteps was heard at the door, it suddenly opened, and the mother, with lamp in hand, and eyes suffused with tears, and heart wrung with anguish, announced to us the painful intelligence, "Richard is dead, our only dear boy, oh!" The husband instantly joined in the solemn lamentation. We will not undertake to describe the painful scene which followed, but will only sketch a history of the case.

Richard was a fine, rosy-cheeked boy, the pride and almost idol of the heretofore happy parents and friends. Richard had felt well through the day, (a cold damp day in March,) and had been allowed to play with other boys all the afternoon. His shoes were thin and light, and in running over the damp ground he had got his feet wet. He had, however, ate a hearty supper, and went to bed at eight in the evening apparently well. The father and mother retired at ten, and thought the child seemed occasionally to sigh, and appeared somewhat restless. He became more quiet and they fell asleep, with the boy in the same room. As the clock struck one, the parents were awakened by the loud breathing of the boy, and on lighting a lamp, the painful sight of the lad, burning with fever, and gasping for breath, hurried the father after us; and the mother to every exertion in her power to relieve her dear boy. The difficulty of breathing rapidly increased, giving a shrill whistling sound, which, in the "stilly night," pierced that lone mother's very heart during the absence of her husband. Dear little Richard breathed less frequently, the cold sweat of death broke out on his marbled brow, and he soon expired in the weeping mother's arms. The reader has the balance of this true history. Little Richard died of spasmodic croup, and the cause was wet feet.

It is seldom one dies so suddenly, yet deaths of children by diseases created by wet feet are quite common. Scarcely a family can be found of any size who cannot testify to this afflicting truth. We can relate a multitude of cases of a similar nature which have fallen under our own observation. Parents in selecting shoes for their children, seem intent only in obtaining those which will give their children a genteel appearance, regardless of substantial protection to the feet, one of the most important considerations in the world.

The young lady cannot wear substantial shoes, "such great heavy things. Awful!" And when you mention woolen hose to them, they are almost thrown into hysterics. We have been often called to prescribe for persons of this class, who, it was clear to be seen, were already verging towards consumption. When we pointed out the common cause of all their affliction, thinly clad and wet feet, they would toss the head or lower the brow with derision. Could the angel of death be permitted to speak and explain the causes of his rapid flight he would sound aloud "wet feet yield up more victims than all other causes combined."

The temperature of the feet is six or eight degrees less than the head and body, and on that account should be kept clothed warmer. The blood circulates slower and with less force at the extremities, and they should therefore be kept warm, to aid the blood in its action through them. Woolen or silk, which are non-conducters of electricity, should be invariably worn on the feet and limbs. Nothing should be permitted to be worn around the limbs or body, so snugly as to interrupt the returning circulation of the blood to the heart. The shoes should be large enough to be easy to the feet, and carefully adapted to their shape.

While we have our hand in, we may as well add our surprise at seeing the children in our cities and villages clothed in short dresses and thin short drawers, with nearly one-half the limbs almost destitute of any clothing, which gives the least protection to the limbs of those delicate children from the influence of cold, taken in winter, autumn and spring. It appears equally surprising when one dies from colds taken in this kind of dress, that an intelligent clergyman will preach the consoling doctrine of God's mysterious Providence, instead of pointing out the causes which occasioned the funeral. Doctors, too, are guilty of dereliction of duty, if they do not give a thorough clinic whenever such a case presents itself in their profession.

'God's Providence is only chargeable with deaths which occur in old age, when the time alloted to man is fulfilled. To these, and to these only, it is our duty to be reconciled.

Doings at a Farmer's Club.

The Farmer's Club connected with the American Institute, New York, met on the 21st inst. After reading the minutes of the previous meeting, the Secretary read an interesting paper on "Diseases of the Vine." The disease was first noticed in England, in 1845, and in a short time spread over Europe; causing great distress in all the wine producing districts, as in many cases the vines were entirely destroyed. The cause of this disease has not yet been discovered; the best known remedy for it is the application of hydro-sulphate of lime.

After this paper was read the Secretary read the following abstract from a paper sent by Professor Wilson, British Agricultural Commissioner to the World's Fair in New York—before the Society of Arts, at the Adelphi, London, "on the recent improvements in the treatment and dressing of flax."

"The object of dressing the straw is to separate the inner fibre from the two outer ones. Two methods exist—one mechanical the other chemical. The first deals with flax in a dry, the other in a wet state. As the poorer sorts of flax would not pay the expense of steeping, the mechanical method was best for them; but it had this disadvantage, from not touching the azotized part of the plant, to leave it with its liability to ferment and deteriorate.

"Schenck's plan of using hot water was known to the Malays and the Bengalese. It was patented by him in 1846, and in 1848 the first 'rottery' was established under his patent in the County Mayo. Now there are between twenty and thirty in Ireland, besides others in England and Scotland. In Ireland about 40,000 tuns are now prepared by it annually. A considerable saving has resulted, as proved by extensive experiments instituted by the Irish Flax Improvement Society, amounting to twenty per cent. By Schenk's plan, 100 tuns of straw by seedling, or removing the seed-balls by rolling, produced 67 tuns of pure straw. This, when steeped, yields 39½ tuns of steeped straw, and ultimately upward of 5 tuns of dressed flax, and nearly 2 tuns of tow. The treatment of flax by alkalis as a means of dissolving its extractive portions appears to have been recommended by Lady Moira in 1785, and a factory was established near Vienna in which it was practiced. Berthollot, Guy Lussac, and other chemists were acquainted with it. The statistics of the flax and linen manufacture are as follows: In England there are now at work from 250,000 to 300,000 spindles; in Scotland, between 300,000 and 350,000 spindles; in Ireland, over 500,000, in the manufacture of linen. In the whole, over 1,000,000 spindles. The fixed capital invested only in plant and the contingencies, is over £5,000,000. The importation is 70,000 tuns per annum of flax fibre, 650,000 quarters (5,200,000 bushels) of flaxseed for sowing or pressing for the oil; while for feeding we relied on foreign produce for 70,000 tuns of oil-cake annually. In the aggregate we pay between £4,000,000 and £5,000,000 sterling annually for produce which our own country was eminently calculated to produce."

The subject of "Economical Irrigation," then came up for discussion, Prof. Mapes, Judge Van Wyck, Samuel Allen, and Solon Robinson taking part in it. After this subject had been duly discussed, Mr. Meigs read a paper on Strawberries, which brought up Mr. Robinson, who said Mr. Peabody, a friend of his, in Columbus, Ga., by copiously watering his Satrawberry beds daily, had a most abundant crop of fruit of the finest quality, with very few leaves. And for 6 months in the year he was able to send a good supply to market from this same bed. The plants used were Hovey's seedlings, and they never needed renewal, nor scarcely any other attention than plenty of water.

The Circassian and Georgian Slave Trade.

Sarim Pasha, the Governor of Trebizond, has, we understand, been deprived of his government through the representations of the Russian consul in that place, whose complaint concerning some Circassian slaves he refused to investigate. Trebizond is one of those ports in the Black Sea were Circassian and Georgian slaves are frequently landed. In the Russian territories the seizing and selling of slaves has been long since put a stop to. Parents, however, who wish to send their daughters to Constantinople are allowed to do so under the pretence of sending them to relatives there, and under the guardianship of proper people. In this case each individual is furnished with a passport. It happens, however, that occasional bands of marauders come from Lazietan or the coast of Circassial and in Mingrelia and pounce upon the villages, carrying off young girls and children into slavery, in order to convey them to Constantinople, where they find a ready sale at high prices. These expeditions being usually performed in small boats, they are obliged to put in at the ports of the Black Sea for food and water. The Russian consuls stationed there do their utmost to destroy this illicit traffic. A number of these slaves having arrived a short time ago without passports, the Russian consul claimed them as Russian subjects, but the Pasha turned a deaf ear to his representations, and allowed the slave dealers to depart with their cargo, whereupon the consul lowered his flag, and wrote to Prince Menschikoff, whose influence at the Porte was sufficient to deprive the Pasha of his place.

Hydrophobia.

The Cincinnati Gazette refers to the fact that the number of reported cases of hydrophobia has been unusually large the present season, and comments on the subject as follows:—

"Now that public attention has been called to the subject of hydrophobia, it may interest some to know that an ingenious theory is held by some medical men, which rejects the idea that the madness of the biter has any effect on the madness of the bitten, and affirms that hydrophobia is as likely to result from the bite of a dog in perfect health, as from one that is mad. Their chief reasons are, that the effects of all other poisons are certain and determinate—no other poison can be received into the system with impunity—yet hundreds of persons have been bitten by dogs unquestionably mad, and no evil effects have followed. Instances have been known where a score of persons have been bit severally by the same dog, and only one has been affected by hydrophobia. So also many persons have died from hydrophobia where the animals by whom they were bitten were never known or even suspected to be mad. Other poisons have a specific time within which their operation begins and ends—in hydrophobia there is no such definite period—in some cases the effect shows itself immediately—in others not till the lapse of months and even years.

"Ten animals—the dog, wolf, fox and cat; the horse, ass, mule, cow, sheep and pig—are all which are said to be susceptible of this disease, while the first four only are said to be able to communicate it. These four have teeth of a similar form, capable of making a deeply punctured wound.

"From these facts, the conclusion has been drawn that hydrophobia is a species of tetanus, resulting from the nature of the wound, and not from any poison injected into it. Tetanus, or lock-jaw, often results from a wound made by a pointed instrument, like a nail, in the hand or foot, and the same result has followed other injuries to the nerves. The two diseases seem to bear a general resemblance. Both are spasmodic, both affect the muscles of the throat, and both are attended with the same great excitement of the nervous system.

"The above is a brief synopsis of the opinions of some ingenious members of the medical profession, which, if established, would go far to diminish the terror which is now felt whenever a person is injured in any way by the bite of a dog."

The Pierce Family.

The ancestor of the family of Franklin Pierce, President of the United States, has not been definitely settled. Some think it was Robert of Woburn, 1650. I am strongly inclined to the belief that it was Daniel of Newbury, 1637, from whom descended Benjamin, born 26th Feb., 1669, who had a son Benjamin, born 13th June, 1700. If we may form a conjecture or origin from family traits, we may pretty safely conclude that the late Gov. Benjamin Pierce, of Hillsborough, father of President Franklin Pierce, was of the stock of Benjamin of Newbury, who died May 19, 1711, aged 42 years. In the old burying-ground in Byfield, which was a parish of Newbury, the following inscription is found on a tomb-stone:

"Here lyes ye body of Benjamin Pierce, Esq., who died May ye 19th, 1711, aged 42 years and 3 months.

> "Pillar 'i th' State he was;
> Bid fair still
> At greater things
> To all yt knew him well,
> Pattern of vertue;
> Kind to all was he,
> Loved by friends,
> Feard of his enemie.
> Embalmed in tears,
> Envy itselfe stood dumb;
> Snatcht from ye world
> In times most troublesome."

On another grave-stone in the same yard is the following—to one of the same family:

"Here lyes interred what was mortal of ye Honourable Daniel Pierce, Esq., who, having faithfully served his generation both in church and military station, fell asleep, April ye 22d, 1804, aged 66.

> "Here lies interred a soul indeed,
> Whom few or none excelled;
> In grace if any him exceed,
> He'll be unparalleled."

Reasons for Refusing an Appointment.

When Judge McLean was Postmaster-General, he was abused by a disappointed applicant, for not giving him the office he desired, and requested to inform him why he refused him the appointment. The Judge replied as follows:—

"The allegations against you are numerous and strong, and are chiefly these: That you cannot write or read well enough, are not a safe accountant, have been guilty of the grossest negligence in not delivering letters when called for, a negligence always inconvenient and often attended with injury, deliver letters frequently to persons for whom they were not intended, and suffer them to be taken away, fail to send letters and packages by the mail in proper time, sometimes send off the mail without putting into it any letters or packets that had been lodged at your office, reverse the destination of letters, and send them back to the place from whence they came, have not sense enough to discover the error after the letters have been repeatedly returned, make frequent and gross mistakes in the bills forwarded to other offices, open packages addressed to other post-offices, when a mail is called for by a Postmaster from a neighboring office, hand out any one, right or wrong, disobey the regulations respecting dead newspapers, appropriate a half a dozen of them for two or three years to your own use, and resort to the miserable speculation of selling them for wrapping paper, fill up a circulating library with periodical works obtained in this way, are uncouth in your behavior, odious to the population, heap error upon error, and avail yourself of these errors in order to supplant your employer, have been tried by the vicinage and found wanting, and to sum up, they charge you with want of principle and capacity. Respectfully, your obedient, John McLean."

Gum Arabic Starch.—We have often heard ladies express a desire to know by what process the fine gloss observable on new linen, shirt bosoms, etc., is produced, and in order to gratify them, we subjoin the following recipe for making Gum Arabic starch:—

Take two ounces of fine white gum arabic powder—put into a pitcher, and on it a pint or more boiling water (according to the degree of stiffness you desire,) and then having covered it, let it set all night. In the morning pour it carefully from the dregs into a clean bottle, cork it, and keep it for use. A table spoonful of gum water, stirred into a pint of starch that has been made in the usual manner, will give to lawns (either white or printed) a look of newness when nothing else can restore them after washing. It is also good (much diluted) for white muslin and bobinet.

Statistics.—The word "Statistics" was originated by Sir John Sinclair, of Scotland, during the first part of the present century. He also first exemplified the importance of the science—for it is now no less than a science—by publishing the most complete tabular view of the condition of Scotland, that was ever given of any country. Since that, the value of accurate statistical knowledge has been more and more appreciated, and, consequently, the knowledge itself more extensively gathered. Now, indeed, nearly every thing that can be numbered or measured, is made the subject of minute inquiry and careful registry. What were formerly considered pure accidents, and so exempt from all system, or contingent trifles, and so beneath notice, have been shown under the statistician's arrangement to be the products of general laws, and to have a real a systematic bearing upon the welfare of man.

Laura Bridgman.—The work entitled, "An English Woman's Experience in America," contains an interesting allusion to Laura Bridgman. The author says: "I visited the Blind Asylum at South Boston, and I saw Laura Bridgman, the little deaf, dumb, and blind girl, who is immortalized by Charles Dickens in his 'American Notes.' I found her quite as interesting as he describes her. She is now about twenty-two; her figure is slender and graceful, and her face one of the happiest and brightest I ever saw. When I entered the room she was in the middle of a very animated conversation with her teacher, who was standing beside her. The understanding between them was perfect; I never saw ideas conveyed so rapidly. The slightest touch seemed to express a sentence. On asking what employment she liked best, I was told she wished to have the care of young children."

Early Maturity of Genius.—Bonaparte was a General at 25. Pitt was Premier at 24; Luther at 34 commenced his career as Reformer; Pascal's Provincial Letters were written at 33; Fenelon and Bossuet both preached in public at 15; Sir Thomas Moore was a member of Parliament at 21; Hamilton at 18 a vigorous political writer, and at 20 in Washington's staff; Wordsworth wrote his Borderers 25–6; all the greatest musical composers, Handel, Hadyn, Bach, Mozart, Mendelssohn, were infant prodigies; Sir John Suckling died at 28.

VARIETY.

There is a tradition in Hungary, according to Madame Pulszky, in which an old friar is represented as teaching his pupils that "man is surpassed by the bee in skill, by the dog in loyality, by the ant in industry, by the elephant in strength, and by the ape in nimble mimicry; the parrot learns to speak, and the bull bows under the yoke no less than man. What then proves the superiority of man—what marks his difference from the beasts? Nothing else than that he may be taught to borrow? The exclusive prerogative of man is to incur debts.

The saying so often quoted, "The schoolmaster is abroad," originated with Lord Brougham. In one of his speches it is thus introduced: "Let the soldier be abroad if he will; he can do nothing in this age. There is another personage abroad—a person less imposing—in the eyes of some, perhaps, insignificant. The schoolmaster is abroad; and I trust to him, armed with his primer, against the soldier in military array."

One of the Massachusetts Pine Tree Shillings, of date of 1652, was found a few days ago, in the excavation in front of the Pickman estate, on Essex-street, Salem. It was lying amongst the rubbish of an old building which had stood upon the spot previous to the erection of the present mansion, built in 1743. The piece was bright and unworn, the lettering being perfectly distinct, and was probably lost soon after its coinage.

When some very clever, well-educated person, acts upon the fallacious principle that "roguery is the best policy," it is curious to see how many points he has in common with the insane; what over-cunning, what irritable restlessness, what suspicious belief that the rest of the world are in conspiracy against him, when it requires all his wit to baffle and turn to his own proper aggrandizement and profit.

M. Marcel, who has just written a work on the study of language, argues that the reiterated perusal of a book is to be preferred to writing, as a means of recollection. Johnson and Gibbon thought this. The latter says, "I must agree with Dr. Johnson, that what is twice read is commonly better remembered than what is transcribed."

Thirty varieties of cotton have been found growing spontaneously in Africa. A missionary says he has stood erect under the branches of a cotton tree in a Goulah village, so heavily laden with bolls that it was propped up with forked sticks to prevent it from breaking under its own weight.

God will not suffer the world to smile upon his servants, lest they should fall in love with it. The man who knows his business in the world, and has his eye fixed upon his best interest, can welcome pain, crosses, passion, hatred.

Those who magnify the present comforts of religion, and embrace it chiefly as a means of happiness in this world, are only sensualists in disguise, and sure to be disappointed.

HUMAN DEPRAVITY.

Human depravity is of two kinds—physical depravity, and moral depravity. On a proper understanding of the meaning of these terms, and on keeping them properly distinct from each other, will depend success in arriving at true conclusions on the subject of regeneration. It is because the real nature of moral depravity has not been carefully studied, and has been confounded with physical depravity, that such erroneous views of regeneration have been entertained; for example, that view which ascribes it to the miraculous power of God alone. (See article "Regeneration," Sabbath Recorder, April 21.)

The term depravity is from the latin de and pravus, which signifies bent, lapsed, fallen from right or straight. It does not imply original malconformation, but deterioration from original perfection. The term physical is from the Greek name phusis (nature.)

Physical depravity, then, as the terms denote, is the depravity or crookedness of constitution or substance, as distinguished from free moral action. It may be predicated of the body, and means a departure from the laws of life and health, by which the healthy functions of organic life are suspended. It may also be predicated of the mind, and means that the faculties of the mind are depraved, either in their substance or in their action, by their connection with the depraved body. Physical depravity, then, being the depravity of constitution or substance, can have no moral character. It is disease, not sin.

The term moral is from the latin mos (manners.) As defined by Webster, it means, "Relating to practice, manners, or conduct of men as social beings, in relation to each other, and with reference to right and wrong. The word moral is applicable to actions that are good or evil, virtuous or vicious, and has reference to the law of God as the standard by which their character is to be determined." Moral depravity, then, is a depravity of moral actions, or moral actions bent away from the law of God, which "is the standard by which their character is to be determined." Thus it appears, that moral depravity is simply sin, or "transgression of the law." It can be nothing else.

It will be seen at once, that the theory of regeneration, that I have advocated, is the only theory that at all consists with the true nature of moral depravity. To wipe out this moral depravity, is the sole object of regeneration; and since this depravity consists in sin, regeneration consists in ceasing to sin, and learning to do well. Now this conclusion is inevitable, if my definition of moral depravity be correct. If it be not correct, then let us have a better one; for it is of the utmost importance that our notion of this moral depravity be well defined.

By a certain class of theologians moral depravity is thought to be a certain undefinable something lying back of actual transgression or sin, and sustaining to sin the relation of cause; and hence it becomes necessary for them to suppose that regeneration is a something lying back of obedience, or holiness, as a cause. These two errors combine by a strong affinity.

Moral depravity is not the cause of sin; it is sin itself. Hence regeneration is not the removing of the cause of sin, and thus becoming the cause of holiness, as is claimed; but it is the removing of sin itself. Now, when we are told that moral depravity is something distinct from sin and the cause of sin, we are of course anxious to know what this strange being is which causes us to sin, and who planted it in us. Certainly, God did not corrupt our natures, for he is not the author of any thing unholy. The devil did not, for it is only his prerogative to tempt us; but no amount of temptation can constitute moral depravity. The devil tempted Jesus Christ, but he did not corrupt him. Many holy men are severely tempted, but remain just as holy as before; and further than this the devil has no power whatever.

What, then, is this "corrupt nature." It is denied by "T. B. B.," that "God incorporates sin into man's being," and as to how it came there, he "does not profess any ability to dive to the bottom of this awfully mysterious subject." Now this subject has become so awfully mysterious, to certain theologians, because they endeavor to make moral depravity something planted in our nature, separate from sin, as the cause of sin, whereas it is sin itself. The inspired definition of sin, (transgression of the law) is received but "as to the manner in which man first becomes sinful," that is "awfully mysterious." So then the manner in which a man first transgresses the law is awfully mysterious.

"T. B. B." says, "We say the corruption of man's nature, at which expression some may be inclined to cavil, as if it implied that God by creative power had wrought sin into man's being, and made it an attribute of his being. But such cavils usually spring from inability to meet the evidence by which the doctrine in question is sustained." No, the cavil does not thus arise. When brother Brown, or anybody else, speaks of the "corruption of man's nature," no one would suppose that by this it is meant that "God had wrought sin into man's being, and made it an attribute of man's existence," if certain theologians had not thus defined the "natural or sinful man," spoken of in the Bible. It is held by many, that sin is woven into our very constitutions, as a part of our being, and they explain all passages in the Bible bearing on this subject according to this theory.

Brother Brown says, "We do not suppose that God incorporates sin into man's being." Again, "We receive the inspired definition of sin, that it is the transgression of the law. At the same time we cannot conceive of sin, as a voluntary act, which does not spring from a nature or disposition already corrupted." "We believe that man's nature is corrupt, understanding by this term the disposition, tendency, or propensity of his heart."

If I understand the above passages correctly, they teach that moral depravity, after all, is an inherent attribute of man's nature, separate from sin, and standing to it in the relation of cause to effect; for he says, "We cannot conceive of sin as a voluntary act, which does not spring from a nature or disposition already corrupted." "Even in the case of Adam himself, the corruption of his heart had been already effected, before he committed the overt act of eating the forbidden fruit," that is, before he sinned. Now how came brother Brown by his information? The inspired record does not give it. The simple statement of the record is this—that the serpent beguiled (tempted) Eve, and she disobeyed God. Eve then tempted Adam, and he disobeyed. There was no corruption whatever in them until they disobeyed, and that disobedience was their corruption. Here, on the one hand, was a natural desire for food and knowledge, and the fruit of a certain tree so correlated to that desire as to bring it into action. Now, was this natural desire corruption? Certainly not, for God created her with this, and pronounced her "good." On the other hand, the law of God, written on her intelligence, forbade at that time the indulgence of this natural appetite. As yet she was pure, but presently she chose to gratify that appetite, in spite of God's law. That moment she was corrupt, and not till that moment. Christ had all these appetites and passions in common with us all, but he was never corrupt or depraved, and simply because he never obeyed them when their demands conflicted with the demands of the law, as written on his intelligence.

This is a short history of the beginning of sin in all mankind. All men sin in precisely the same way, i. e., by yielding their wills to the demands of their natural appetites, in opposition to the known rule of right. Nor is it necessary to suppose any depravity of our nature, in order to account for "the transgression of the law" so universal in the world. A free, responsible will, in the presence of temptation, is an adequate condition of sin, in an intelligent being, capable of understanding God's will, or the right way. The infant cannot be morally depraved, because he cannot know the right way. His intelligence is not sufficiently developed to affirm right and wrong, and consequently he cannot sin. His sensitivity, i. e., passions, appetites, desires, &c., are first developed, and all active, when his intelligence first awakes and affirms obligation or oughtness. His will has heretofore obeyed these passions and appetites, and has become accustomed to put forth its volitions according to their demands; but a period now arrives when the intelligence, enlightened by the Holy Spirit, affirms of a certain demand of the appetite, that it ought not to be obeyed; and now a choice must be made. The intelligence and the sensitivity both urge their claims, and the will, with complete ability to obey the intelligence, yields nevertheless to the sensitivity, and thus moral depravity makes its first fearful mark on the human soul. The appetites, however clamourous, are not moral depravity; for that is sin or transgression of the law, and with the first transgression comes the first moral depravity. Here indeed is the first beginning of moral character; for, up to the time when the intelligence first affirms right and wrong, the child has no moral character, and of course can have no moral depravity. If from any malformation of the brain, through which the intelligence is usually developed, there should be no such development, there would be no moral character, and neither God nor man would hold the individual accountable for his acts, all of which are in obedience to the sensitivity. For this reason brutes have no moral character. That physical depravity, in the abnormal development of the appetites, is inherited from our parents, I admit; but that moral depravity is or can be, I deny as a monstrous absurdity.

Brother Brown says, "We belief that man's nature is corrupt, understanding by this term the disposition, tendency, or propensity, of his heart." The tendency or propensity of man's heart, then, constitutes his "corrupt nature." If by the term "heart" here is meant the sensibility, including the passions, appetites, &c., then the depravity of this part of our nature is physical, not moral depravity, for neither the substance of soul nor body, nor any involuntary state of mind, can by any possibility possess moral character. The very idea of moral character is an idea of a free action or intention, and in this alone can moral depravity reside. No amount of "tendency" or "propensity" in the passions and appetites, to influence the will to act contrary to right, is moral depravity or a necessary cause of moral depravity. The abnormal development of the sensitivity, or physical depravity inherited at birth and continued through life, is the great evil of our earthly existence, constantly urging the will to forbidden deeds. This is the means of all our temptation. By appealing to this, the enemy of our souls seeks to lead the will captive; but the merciful God has so constituted the mental faculties, that over against the clamors of the sensitivity is placed the affirmations of the intelligence, made more clear and convincing by the teaching of the Holy Spirit, so that the right way and the wrong way have their respective inducements. But, as already shown, no clamors of the sensitivity, nor affirmations of the intelligence, constitute moral character, and they cannot be the seat of moral depravity. Above them both is placed the will, endowed with the glorious prerogative of putting forth its volitions according to the one or the other. In this act of the will resides all the moral character man possesses. Here, then, is the seat of moral depravity, and here the seat of regeneration; and since man plants this depravity in himself, he must eradicate it himself, and for his assistance God has vouchsafed his Holy Spirit.

To the Bible representations of the universal depravity of mankind, both physical and moral, and of his utter inability to remove this depravity, unassisted by God, and of the certainty that he will be damned, we yield a mournful assent. Yes, the history of the world is but a shameless chronicle of crime. This I would urge upon the sinner, and pray the Spirit to burn it into his soul, till he should tremble before an offended God, and cry, "What shall I do to be saved?" Then I would answer, with the burning words of inspiration, "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will you die." I would teach them, as in Eph. 2; 3, that "by nature they are the children of wrath," i. e. that in their natural or unregenerate state, they are the children of wrath. This I believe to be the meaning of the above passages, and others of kindred import, and in this I am sustained by very able commentators. Says one of them, "These passages cannot, consistently with natural justice, be understood to mean, that we are exposed to the wrath of God on account of our nature. It is a monstrous and blasphemous dogma, that a holy God is angry with any creature for possessing a nature with which he was force into being without his knowledge or consent. The Bible represents God as angry with men for their wicked deeds, and not for their natures. It is common and proper to speak of the first state in which men universally are, as a natural state. Thus we speak of sinners before regeneration, as in a state of nature, as opposed to a changed state, a regenerate state, and a state of grace. By this we do not necessarily mean that they have a nature sinful in itself, but merely that before regeneration they are universally and totally morally depraved, and this is their nature as opposed to their regenerate state, and in this cause alone can it be said that they are by nature children of wrath. The whole scope of scripture represents men as to blame, and to be judged and punished, only for their deeds."

May we be guided into all truth, and led to see clearly in what our depravity consists, that we may well learn what part we have acted in creating it, and what we must act in eradicating it. D. E. M.

THE POWER OF THE GOSPEL.

William Jones was naturally a man of strong passions, sound judgment, and energetic will. He was the son of a white man, once a prisoner among the Indians. The early part of his life was spent in poverty and sin. His mother died, leaving him to the care of a drunken aunt, who neglected and abused him. He mixed with white boys in the vicinity enough to get a smattering of English; and for many years he was ready to drink, swear, and fight with either whites or Indians who would carouse with him; without, however, becoming an habitual drunkard. As he had an opportunity to see more of men and things, he became convinced of the wrong of his course, and turned his attention to the accumulation of property, and determined to make himself decent and respectable. He saw that sobriety, honesty, and punctuality were necessary to a good name, and therefore settled it as his prominent principle of action, that he would try to keep clear of all drunken rowdyism, and be upright and fair in all his dealings. Early after the organization of the mission church, his wife made a profession of religion, which seems to have had a favorable effect on him, leading him to respect Christianity, and to attend church more or less constantly. When Mr. Harris found it necessary to get a new interpreter, Jones was selected as the steadiest and likeliest young man who could at that time speak English sufficiently well to answer the purpose. This made him more thoroughly acquainted with the theory of religion; but it was not till after he had been brought very near the grave by an attack of the cholera, in 1834, that he manifested any personal interest in the subject. He looked upon himself as having been snatched from the grave's mouth, and felt that it was for the purpose of giving him opportunity to prepare for eternity. The change in him seemed to be very gradual; and for some years after his profession of religion, I used to stand very much in doubt of him. About three years before his death, he seemed to show the marks of a growing Christian. He was decidedly more benevolent, more interested in the work of the mission, more anxious to promote the welfare of the church, more concerned for the salvation of sinners, more faithful in laboring for their conversion. He was often affected to tears during religious exercises—sometimes to that degree that he could not command his feelings sufficiently to interpret, without stopping to give them vent. His last sickness was long-protracted and very distressing. He was worn out by months of exhausting suffering, during most of which he seemed to be sustained by spiritual consolations. An incident just before his death shows the extent to which grace had triumphed over nature. As before remarked, he had been originally very passionate. His nervous system, by extreme and constant pain, was reduced to a state of great irritability. Some of his friends, from the singularity of his disease, were led to believe that he had been witch-poisoned, and were very urgent to be allowed to prepare for him a portion of what might be called charmed medicine, to expel the witch. He assured them that there was nothing in all their notions about such things; and that he wanted nothing to do with their witch doctoring. They however continued teasing him on the subject till he was exceedingly annoyed; and in order to get rid of them, he told them that their medicine was nothing one way or the other, and they might do what they pleased about preparing it. They inferred from this that he would consent to use it, and therefore went and prepared it. His wife's sister came in the next day to ascertain the effect of it, and finding that he had made no use whatever of it, broke out into a violent paroxysm of rage, and abused his wife; charging her with wishing to have her husband die, that she might marry some one else; and then turned and vented her spleen against him, in the most provoking language she could think of. Jones heard it all quietly and then meekly said to her, "How does Thomas do?" meaning her husband; "I have heard that he is sick." His wife was so affected by the contrast between his present meekness and former irritability, that she burst into tears and left the room, impressed with the idea that nothing but divine grace could have ever effected such a change.

In his remarks to those who stood around his dying bed, he briefly described his early life, his extreme meanness and wretchedness, his excessive depravity, the deliverances from imminent danger which he had experienced while in that state, the care of Providence over him, the change through which he had passed, his prosperity in worldly things, and now his hope of soon being in the enjoyment of infinitely higher blessedness in heaven—and called upon us all to magnify the riches of divine mercy that had shown such favor to so vile and miserable a creature as he had been, and should still have been, if God had not thus wonderfully reclaimed and blessed him. HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE FOR THE LORD.

The one of which we have been advised was not to be commenced until the people had raised $5,000, and the preacher told them so. I took what to me was an entirely new plan; I stated to my congregation, that as our place had become too strait for us, it was time for us to consider upon the ways and means for a new house for the Lord. Now my plan is, (said I, after a Sabbath service,) as follows, to wit:—The matter being one of moment, and one of common concern, I wish you to take it in your hearts, talk about it, husbands with your wives, and wives with your husbands, parents with children, and children with parents. I also want you to pray over it, and then, as individuals and families, look at the matter in every shape you can conceive of it, and having so done, make up your minds what offerings you will make by families, or households, and what offerings you will make as individuals; for at the expiration of three weeks I expect to begin my visits to you from house to house, and from individual to individual, to ascertain what you have made up your minds to offer freely to the Lord. I want his house to be erected by the voluntary offerings of the people, and without a grudging dollar in it. I then told the people I had taken this course in order to avoid delay, and to avoid the hearing of details of causes of inability at the time of calling—they would now have time to do the thing understandingly and at once, upon my application.

The working of the plan.—Before the time came for me to begin my calls, a brother in a comfortable way of business called in to my study, and said, "Brother H., I have, with my folks, been considering the matter of the new church, and I have come to the conclusion that we can do as well now as we shall ever be able to do, and I wish you to put me down for a thousand dollars. The next one who called was a man who passed as a poor man. He said, upon entering, "I find that my mind is not fully made up; I thought it was when I started, but now I am in doubt; I will call again to-morrow." On the next day he called again, and said, "Now my mind is clear; I started yesterday with the purpose of saying $250, but a doubt arising on the way, I thought it was best to give the matter further consideration, and now you may put me down for three hundred dollars."

The next person who called was a young man but lately entered into business, and he said, "Father and I have talked this matter all over, and you may put me down for two hundred and fifty dollars."

And now there succeeded a young woman, who was in the employ of one of our brethren, and she called on my wife, saying, "Tell Brother H. to put me down for forty dollars."

I confess this startled me, for I did not see how, with her means, she could afford it; and I hesitated until after I had seen her employer, who, upon hearing the object of my call, said the young sister had spoken with him on the subject, and she would pay it if she lived. Returning home, I said to my wife, "This is love's offering. She does it for the Lord; and if any thing arises by which she is prevented from fulfilling this vow, we will meet it ourselves."

Another young woman, who was living at service by the month, called, requesting me to put her down for twenty dollars, saying, "It is but $5 a quarter, and I have made my arrangements so that I can pay it well enough."

Now a new case occurred. One of the officers of the church called, saying, "The girl who lives with my neighbor came to my gate, and said, 'Mr. ——, your minister was saying the other Sunday that you were going to build a new church—do you take small gifts?' 'Yes,' said I, 'certainly'—not expecting much, as she was not a professor of religion. I extended my hand as she put forth hers, saying, 'Well, here is something for you then," putting a five dollar bill in my hand!" This was the first cash that was given. The subscription and cash continue to come in, as already stated, and there is every probability of our having nearer $6,000 than $5,000, for which I asked.

SMILES.

A pleasant smile to light the eye,
And fill the heart with gladness;
To chase away the tears of grief,
And hush the sigh of sadness;
To lend the face a fairer charm,
A soul of love expressing,
That must to earth divinely bring
A comfort and a blessing.

Bewitching smiles! when hand in hand,
And heart and heart together,
We roam abroad, and dearly feel
The joy of wind and weather;
Bewitching smiles! when purple shades
Of twilight gather 'round us—
And "home, sweet home," with loving looks,
And tender words, hath bound us.

Who not would brave the tear to-day,
And feel the touch of sorrow,
If sunny smiles of joy could gleam,
And change the scene to-morrow?
Who would not go where feebly beats
The pulse of earthly being,
If one fond smile could faintly cheer
The weary spirit fleeing?

Oh! smiles have power a world of good
To fling around us ever;
Then let us wear their golden beams,
And quench their ardor, never!
For while a smile illumes the eye,
And wreathes the lip in beauty,
The task of life must ever be
A pure and pleasant duty.

PROSPERITY AND LIBERALITY.

The London correspondent of the Western Christian Advocate, describing an effort to raise a large fund for the extinction of debts on chapels owned by the Wesleyan Connection in Great Britain, gives the following remarkable history. The lessons of liberality in it are lessons for all prosperous men:—

"A gentleman, named Wilkes, has promised a subscription of 1,000 guineas to this fund, whose history is so remarkable as to be worth relating across the Atlantic. Seven years ago he was a journeyman mechanic. Having invented and patented some kind of crank or spindle useful in the cotton manufacture, and needing capital to start himself in the business of making them, he made it a matter of earnest prayer that he might be directed to some one able and willing to assist him. In a singular and unexpected manner he fell in with an elderly Quaker, a perfect stranger, who accosted him with the strange inquiry, 'Friend, I should like to know if a little money would be of any service to thee.' Having satisfied himself as to Wilkes' genius and honesty, the Quaker at once advanced him the required amount. The praying mechanic started in business on his own account, and everything he has touched of late has appeared to prosper. Hearing of a field in Ireland offered for sale, in which was a deserted mine, he went over to see it, bought the field for a small sum, recommenced the working of the mine, and it now turns out to yield abundance of excellent copper. For the year 1852 he promised to give to the Missionary Society a guinea a day; but such abundance has poured in upon him during the year that he felt this to be below his duty, and has, therefore, enlarged his subscription for the present year seven-fold—he is actually giving to that noble cause seven guineas daily—or upward of $10,500 a year—during this year, 1853; in addition to which he has just given a thousand guineas to the fund above referred to. Probably neither Australia nor California can furnish an instance of a man rising into vast wealth more rapidly; and certainly we have not heard from either of these countries of anything approaching to this example of Christian liberality. It is pleasing to be able to add that this remarkable man retains the utmost simplicity and humility and bids fair, if his life be spared, to occupy an eminent position, not only among the millionaires of this country, but among the ornaments of the church of Christ."

A WEIGHTY QUESTION ANSWERED.

The first sermon we ever wrote was upon the text, "Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Here was room for a great deal of talk and good talk. It was a comforting sermon to saints, and there was nothing in it particularly calculated to offend the carnal heart. It gained us more or less applause.

But our next sermon was upon a different subject. The text was one of those thunderbolts of Divine Writ that strike the carnal heart, as it were, dead. "Submit yourselves therefore to God." We sat down composedly to write this discourse, meaning to speak directly to the impenitent sinner with a calm urgency not to be evaded. But the sermon was not fairly begun before the writer began to question his authority to preach such doctrine as a matter of his own personal experience. The question grew more weighty; have I ever known the meaning of that naked truth, "Submit yourselves to God?" Every written sentence added to the awful apprehension that I knew not the command, and my pen was but recording my own condemnation. The sermon was thrown aside unfinished. The Bible became our study, and agonizing prayer was offered at every breath. The Gospel was examined verse by verse, from beginning to end. Every word was anxiously scrutinized to see if there was not one ray of hope for one guilty sinner. No hope was there. Every promise was to the believer, condemnation to the unbeliever.

That was the day in which we studied theology; not to preach the gospel, but to ascertain God's truth in relation to the salvation of our own souls. Besides the Bible, Luther, Edwards, Bellamy, and kindred writers, were searched with an agony of soul, the remembrance of which can never pass away, to ascertain the meaning of that word, the key of heaven's gate, Faith. But all was in vain. Despair was fast riveting its heavy chains on the soul; existence was becoming unendurable. The crisis was reached. There was no help but God. Prostrate before him, soul and body were yielded into the hands of a sovereign God for weal or woe. The load was gone. We had just learned the meaning of our text, "Submit yourselves to God."

Not long after this, a minister of the Gospel of ten year's standing, whispered to us as a friendly admonition, "It is an easy matter to talk about Christ, but to speak of eternal things from the heart is far different." He, too, for the first time, probably, had been made to pass through the deep waters that he might in conscious helplessness as a miserable, guilty, lost sinner, bow before the Sovereign God. SUSPENSE AND CERTAINTY.

In one of the recently published volumes of the Memoirs and Correspondence of the Poet Moore, he speaks of Monk Lewis, the celebrated writer of fiction in the last century. He tells us that on his death-bed, Lewis' very frequent exclamation in reference to the future world was, "The Suspense! The Suspense!" Alas, was this all he could say, and did all his talent, his enjoyments, his fame, end in sad uncertainty as to the future? Was he, like another unbeliever, about "to take a leap in the dark?" Alas for unbelief! Alas for mere speculation in the affairs of eternity!

What a contrast between this dying bed, and that of Edward Payson! "O my sister, my sister," said the dying Christian, "could you but know what awaits the Christian; could you know only as much as I know, you could not refrain from rejoicing, and even leaping for joy. Labors, trials, troubles would be nothing; you would rejoice in afflictions, and glory in tribulations, and like Paul and Silas, sing God's praises in the darkest night, and in the deepest dungeon."

Uncertainty and suspense are necessarily the lot of those who receive not the gospel of Christ. "I do not pretend to say," says Cicero, "that what I affirm is as infalliable as the Pythian Oracle; 'I speak only by conjecture;'" "We know," says Paul, "that if the earthly house of our tabernacle were dissolved. we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Which, here, was the wisest man, and which was the happiest?

Pleasant indeed is the thought that all this knowledge is founded on a solid rock—the testimony of God, and that its attainment may be enjoyed by all—simply by the belief of the truth. We have seen the old man, deprived of his family and his all, repair to the promises of his Bible, wipe away his tears, and assume a smile; and when asked what made him happy, he answered, "Why, this book is all true, isn't it? My Father has said, 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee,' hasn't he?" Yes, venerable old man of ninety, he has, and blessed be thy faith—'thou know'st, and know'st no more—the Bible true.' In the trials of life, in the sorrows of death, we, may rest on the Bible; its first great principles, in all their simplicity, can alone make us happy; and these can make us 'triumph when the world is in a blaze.' Receive these truths, O reader, and be blessed forever.

HEAVEN AT LAST.

A young gentleman indulging in every form of dissipation, and, of course, disregarding all the claims of religion, on being expostulated with on the terrible consequences he was encountering, very confidently said, "that he feared no consequences, for he believed God was too merciful to damn any of his creatures." His monitor replied, "Then you expect finally to go to heaven; but what kind of a heaven do you anticipate? It surely cannot be the heaven of the Bible, for there is not a feature of that which does not now cause distaste and disgust in your mind; a holy God is the object of your abhorrence, and pleasures purely holy you can neither appreciate nor desire. All your habits of life render such things distasteful, and the longer you live in sin, the more foreign they are to your ideas. Should you this night be admitted into heaven, with your present views, would it not be a hell to you to be confined to the society and employments of the 'spirits of the just made perfect?' Can you conceive of any society or service more uncongenial to your taste? Are you training yourself for such a state? Are you not, in fact, by your daily course, assimilating yourself to devils, and are they not more likely to be your future companions? You are deceiving yourself. There is no heaven for you, unless God or yourself undergo a radical change. He must become unholy, or you must become holy; and as the first is impossible, so without the last, there is no heaven for you. You cannot possibly associate what God has separated, and if you now prefer to degrade your nature by the indulgence of your lusts, reason as well as revelation assures you that you have your reward here, while hereafter you must forever be shut out from the holy presence of God."

BEGIN RIGHT.—If you are about to do a piece of work, you will be careful to begin right; otherwise, you will have to take it in pieces and do it over again. If you are going on a journey, you will be careful at first to get into the right road; for, if you start wrong, you will be continually going farther and farther out of the way.

Now, you are starting in life, and life is a journey. If you start wrong, as I said, you will be all the time going out of the way. You have a life-work to do; but if you begin it wrong, all your labor will be worse than lost. Not only will you have to do it all over again, but to undo what you have done.

Do you ask, "How shall I begin right?" The wisest of men has said, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." The "fear of the Lord" is piety. The way to begin life aright is, first of all, to seek God, and make it your first and chief business to serve Him, and then everything else will come out right.

Of the missionaries who have gone from Great Britain to the heathen, nineteen twentieths are said to have received their first religious impressions in Sabbath-Schools, and of the evangelical ministers of England under forty years of age, more than two thirds became pious at these schools.

"HUMAN DEPRAVITY."

See First Page.

To the article of "D. E. M.," considered by itself, I have but little to object; and were it not for the apparent connection which it is made to hold with the subject which has been under discussion, I might let it pass without comment. But since I had said in express terms, "We do not suppose that God incorporates sin into man's being;" since I had disclaimed the notion that sin was a natural attribute of the creature; since I had been at pains to declare that, whenever I had spoken of the depravity of man's nature, I had had uniform reference to the language of Scripture, (Eph. 2: 3, 1 Cor. 2: 14. See Recorder, May 12;) since I had declared, that my understanding of the term was "the disposition, tendency, or propensity of the sinner's heart, and had a second time denied, by implication at least, that "God by creative power had wrought sin into man's being, and made it an attribute of his existence;" since I had argued that the nature of any thing had respect as much to the relation which it sustained to all other things, as to any thing inherent in its constitution, and hence, that "the natural man was a sinful or depraved being, because here in this world, where God has placed him, he manifests nothing but a spirit of rebellion against the divine law," (See Recorder, May 19;) nay, since in my first article, in which I said, "If the natural man regenerates himself, he exceeds the limits of his own nature," my use of the term nature was explained in what I immediately added, "he acts contrary to the ruling inclination of his heart," (See Recorder, April 21;) I conceive that your labored effort to hold me up as teaching, that "moral depravity, after all, is an inherent attribute of man's nature, separate from sin, and standing to it in the relation of cause to effect," might as well have been spared.

In all candor, however, I will admit, that an inaccurate expression on my part furnished you with a plausible pretext for such a course. I said, "We cannot conceive of sin as a voluntary act, which does not spring from a nature, or disposition, already corrupted." As truth, not victory, is my object, I shall not undertake to justify this expression. Had I used the term overt instead of voluntary, my meaning had been less likely to be misunderstood. In the next sentence the proper term was employed, but in the one following that the faulty one was again adopted, which has rendered me obnoxious to your criticism. You are welcome, for the truth's sake, to whatever advantage you have thus gained in the argument.

I believe in the voluntary nature of all sin. "Sin is the transgression of the law." Every act which is strictly a trangression of the law, is voluntary. When I speak of the sinfulness of man's heart, I allude to all those desires, affections, reasonings, and internal exercises, which are not manifested by outward actions; nevertheless, they are exercises, and because they are exercises of the soul, they are therefore acts of transgression, as much as if they had been externally performed. These acts of transgression are all voluntary, most unquestionably.

But "by a certain class of theologians moral depravity is thought to be a certain undefinable something lying back of actual transgression or sin, and sustaining to sin the relation of cause." Your design, evidently, is to convey the impression, that I belong to this "class." I do not know, that any thing I have written will justify such an impression. It may be a debateable question, however, whether there is not something "lying back of actual transgression," to which it would be no violation of propriety to apply the name of depravity. But as this would be going into the metaphysics of the subject more than is called for, we may leave the question for the present. In the mean time, let us see what it was that I did write.

I explained the corruption of man's nature, as having reference to "the disposition, tendency, or propensity of his heart." I meant something distinct from external conduct, it is true; but that I meant something distinct from, and "lying back of actual transgression," does not appear. For, in asserting the propensity of the sinner's heart to evil, and to nothing but evil, I said that it was so "according to that scripture which teaches, that every imagination of the thought of his heart is only evil continually." But how you discovered, that I supposed that the the imagination of the thought of the heart was not an actual exercise—a real, though not an external, act of transgression—I know not. And when I said, farther, in proof of the corruption of man's nature, that, "here in this world, where God has placed him, he manifests nothing but a spirit of rebellion against the divine law," I do not know by what rule of interpretation you discovered, that I referred his corruption to something back of actual transgression. That his manifested or external transgressions argued an internal disposition to them, I did indeed mean; but that the internal disposition, so far as we can take any cognizance of it, is not itself actual transgression, I did not maintain, that I know of.

It is, however, a lamentable fact, that all the internal exercises of the natural man, all his choices, (all which are so many acts of the mind,) are on the side of sin. It is universally and uniformly so; not an exception ever has been, or ever will be, found. Why is it so? To say that it results from the freedom of the will, does not meet the difficulty. Why does the will always, without exception, choose to sin? There can be no effect without a cause; and whether the cause lies in that "undefinable something back of actual transgression," which you repudiate, or whether it lies in that "abnormal development of the sensitivity, or physical depravity inherited at birth, and continued through life," which you admit, it may be unnecessary in the present connection to inquire.

The moral depravity of the sinner may be brought about in just the way you have described, for aught I care to dispute, but what has this to do with the question, whether man is competent to regenerate himself, or not? Because he can jump into a pit, does it follow that he is able to jump out of it? Because he can throw himself into the Rapids of Niagara, does it follow that he is able to breast the current, and swim out? What he would need in such a case, would be to be endowed with superhuman strength, which being given him, his deliverance, through the exercise of his own powers, might be looked for.

The sinner is in the Rapids. How came he there? He threw himself in, is your doctrine; I will add, it is mine too. It is his sin that he is there. He has no business to be there, and every inch of his progress down the current is but adding sin to sin. He ought to make an effort in the opposite direction, but he will not. What he needs is such a work of the Holy Spirit upon his heart as will overcome the repugnance of his will. When his will decidedly, fixedly, and habitually, sets in the opposite direction, he is regenerated. But that it never will set in the opposite direction, till God overcomes all repugnance, is as certain as that a stone will return to the ground, after it is thrown up into the air. But having before discussed this point at great length, I will say nothing more. T. B. B.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Catholic Convents—Turkey and Russia.

GLASGOW, June 17, 1853.

The large increase of late years, in Great Britain, of conventual establishments, excites apprehension. With full knowledge that they have no sanction in the word of God, there is the firm belief amongst Protestants that in Continental countries they are nurseries of immorality and the prisons of women who maintain their virtue. Utterly at variance, as the idea of compulsory "contemplation" is to our national feeling, it would have been remarkable if the Bill of Mr. Chambers, making provision for magistratical inspection of such houses in cases of suspicion, had not been supported in the House of Commons. The proposed power being wholly in the hands of the Secretary of State, to grant commission for such visitation, it would probably be too seldom exercised. Yet Papists are making an outcry as if some flagrant injustice would be committed if any such opportunity should ever be afforded to a repentant nun to tell of the wrongs she had endured or the error she had committed. At a meeting of Roman Catholics, held here last night, Priest Forbes, violently denouncing the proposal, averred that if it were passed into a law, such visitors, in Ireland, if they entered within a convent, "might take their coffins with them, for they would never be permitted to come out alive!" Surely the consciousness alone of deeds of darkness being thus brought to light, could excite such opposition to the proposal to give the inmates of convents the same advantages of law that every other individual in the land possesses!

The fleets of France and England have sailed with a view to aid Turkey, should Russia persist in enforcing its demand in favor of the Greek subjects of the Porte—for Nicholas does not now confine his demands to their precedence in the performance of mummeries at what are termed the Holy Places. Hitherto he has not interfered with the Sultan's legislation for the Greeks of his own dominions, nationally or ecclesiastically. Although his title "Czar" is simply the Russian for Cesar, and carries back our thoughts to the epoch of the contests for precedency between the Eastern and Western divisions of the Roman Empire, yet, in point of fact, the Czar is not at present head of the Greek church, even in the same sense that the Pope is head of the Papal church. He presides at the Synod of St. Petersburgh, which administers in chief the spiritual affairs of the Greek church as established in Russia; but neither the Emperor nor the Synod have hitherto had even spiritual authority beyond the Empire. It is not to be supposed, however, that politically or ecclesiastically Nicholas is satisfied that matters should remain upon their present footing. His policy, and that of his predecessors, has been the extension of the Empire southward and eastward; and whenever an opportunity has seemed to offer for putting forth a paw, peculiar reluctance has been manifested by the bear to take it back. The recent insurrection of the Arabs in the province of Bagdad, and their acquisition of the country from Massaul to the Persian Gulf, together with the known want of faith in the integrity of the French Emperor, even when seeking alliance with Britain against the northern aggressor, had probably encouraged the autocrat to believe that the favorable time for possessing himself of Constantinople had at length arrived. If so, however, it is probable that he will now change his tactics, and be content to wait a little for a more favorable opportunity. Yet who can tell at what time or by what agency is to be brought about those changes which prophecy intimates as to prepare for Messiah's reign. The ten toes on the feet of the great image, if they are not to be found on one foot, are still to be formed. Congruity requires that five be found in the Eastern and five in the Western divisions of the Roman Empire, which the legs represent. The length of the legs and the smallness of the toes of the human foot may also be used expressively of the length of time that has elapsed since that division was effected, and the comparatively brief period between the formation of the ten kingdoms, corresponding with the toes, and the descent of the stone by which they are to be shivered to pieces. Believing this to be the import of the symbols, we look indeed for wars and rumors of wars until the end shall come, as well as other forms of sad judgment, the retribution, at the hand of the Lord, upon nations that have awfully misused their privileges. The cup of iniquity seems filling up fast. Not even do the fears of men, openly expressed, of coming evils, of direst nature, stay for a moment their downward progress in the ways of evil. Not even do their sufferings bring them, generally speaking, nearer unto God. The fruits of righteousness are not perceived from things either joyous or grievous. In prosperity, the Lord is forgotten as the giver; and when he chastises, his Fatherly purpose is misunderstood. J. A. BEGG.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

STEAMER SOUTHERN MICHIGAN, ON LAKE ERIE, }
June 29, 1853. }

A trip to "The West"—or to what used to be called "The West"—is no great thing in these days, in view either of its rarity, the time required, or the expense incurred. And yet it is a trip which every man ought to take who would get a just idea of the extent or character of his country. Under this impression, we determined to steal a week following the meeting of the Western Association, for the purpose of taking a look at some of the localities in the direction of sunset, which we have heretofore known only by name and hearsay.

Proceeding westward from Olean, on the line of the New York and Erie Railroad, one soon finds himself in a comparatively new country. It is the Reservation of the Allegany Indians—a tract some thirty miles long by one mile wide, on either bank of the Allegany River. These Indians are nominally under the chieftainship of Blacksnake, a name not unknown to history, which designates a man now more than one hundred years old. He is assisted in the administration of affairs by a council of some eight or nine chiefs, who hold monthly meetings. It is in contemplation, we were told, to take the old chief to New York during the present summer, that he may have an opportunity to see the improvements of the "pale faces," and to visit the World's Fair. Should he make his appearance there—a centenarian six feet four inches high—he will probably attract as much attention as any one object on exhibition. His people number some four or five hundred, and are beginning to turn their attention to agriculture, and to live quite comfortably.

Dunkirk, the western terminus of the New York and Erie Railroad, is a town of "magnificent distances." A notion once prevailed quite extensively, that this port would at no distant day rival Buffalo in commercial importance; and this led speculators to buy up large tracts of land in the vicinity, and lay them out in village and city lots, many of which were sold at auction in New York for high prices. Several lots were pointed out to us as having lately changed owners at the rate of $1,500 for 25 by 100 feet—a price at which we should choose to be the seller rather than the buyer. The freight to and from the West, transported by the New York and Erie Railroad, is reshipped here; and of course the place will always be one of considerable importance. But as to rivaling Buffalo, that is out of the question.

The Buffalo and State Line Railroad (commonly called, in connection with others, the Lake-shore Railroad) passes through Dunkirk, and by it we went to Buffalo. It is a very popular route from that city to Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Columbus, Cincinnati, Toledo, and Chicago. So much in esteem is it as a mode of conveyance to Cincinnati and other Ohio cities, that it does a large business, and its stock is considered as good as that of any western railroad.

Buffalo is the most important inland city of the State of New York. Its position, at the confluence of Buffalo Creek and the east end of Lake Erie, and at the western terminus of the Erie Canal, must always give it supremacy. The ground on which it is built is very well adapted to a commercial city, rising as it does gradually from the creek and the lake. The streets are quite regularly laid out; most of the recently erected buildings are substantial, and some of them quite showy. Main-street is the Broadway of Buffalo, and each side of it for nearly two miles is lined with stores. Buffalo is the offspring of the Erie Canal, and has been growing in importance and wealth ever since the completion of that great work. It is also the point at which center the great chain of railroads from New York, Boston, and Albany, and the Lake-shore road, which connects it with the vast network of railroads in the Western States.—We can not pass from noticing the commercial supremacy of Buffalo, without acknowledging its supremacy in another respect, and that is in the profanity of that portion of its citizens into contact with whom travelers are most thrown. It has been our fortune to mingle with people of almost every variety, both as to their national origin and their moral and social training, but we never met with any who, in this respect, exceeded those we met in Buffalo. Somewhere we have read of the man who, failing to remember the name of an American whose acquaintance he had casually made, described him as "Mr. God-damn." That title would point to a class rather than to an individual in Buffalo.

From Buffalo, Niagara Falls is an hour distant if you reckon by time, or half a dollar distant if you reckon by expense. Time and money must be very precious to him who could not afford so much to visit the characteristic natural wonder of America. Of course we did not let slip this opportunity to see and to feel what can be seen and felt nowhere else. But to attempt any thing in the way of description, after what has been written in that line—especially to make that attempt in the saloon of a Lake Erie steamer, with the representatives of all nations gabbering around you—would be the hight of folly.

Leaving Buffalo at 9 o'clock last evening, we enjoyed a cool and quiet night, and at breakfast time this morning, found ourselves nearing Cleveland, the emporium of northern Ohio, and one of the marts of the great Lakes. It is beautifully situated on the south shore of Lake Erie, at the mouth of the Cuyahoga River, and is the seat of justice of Cuyahoga County. A bold bluff, some eighty feet high, rises here from the shore of the lake, and on the level top of it stands the city—a site which could hardly be improved. From this point the Ohio and Erie Canal runs off to Portsmouth, 307 miles distant, connecting the Ohio River and Lake Erie. The Ohio and Pennsylvania Canal meets this at Akron in Summit County, and opens communication with Pittsburgh. Railroads also connect Cleveland with Cincinnati, with Pittsburgh, with Toledo and Chicago, and with Dunkirk, Buffalo, and New York. The population of Cleveland in 1840 was 6,071; in 1850, 17,034.

Toledo, the place at which we take railroad for Chicago, and where this letter must be mailed, heaves in sight. Before reaching it, let us say a word about routes to the West. From New York, there are two routes—one by Hudson River Railroad to Albany, and thence by Central New York Railroad to Buffalo; the other by New York and Erie Railroad to Buffalo or Dunkirk. From Buffalo, one can take the Lake-shore Railroad to Cleveland, Toledo, and Chicago; or steamer to Toledo, and thence by Southern Michigan Railroad to Chicago; or steamer to Detroit, and thence by Central Michigan Railroad to New Buffalo, and steamer to Chicago. The cost is about the same by either route, except the Lake-shore Railroad, by which it costs some three dollars more from Buffalo to Chicago than by the boats and cars. Crossing the lake by steamer we consider much pleasanter than going 'round by rail. From New York, we prefer the Erie Railroad route, on which those leaving in the morning reach Buffalo early in the evening, in ample time for the boats; or, leaving in the evening, reach Buffalo or Dunkirk before noon of the next day, and can go on from the latter place direct to Det[illegible] by steamboat. From Buffalo, we much prefer the Southern Michigan line, which is the shortest to Chicago. Its boats—the Empire State, Southern Michigan, and Northern Indiana—are not excelled for speed or comfort, while their offcers are noted for their gentlemanliness and attention to passengers.

GAVAZZI'S LECTURE.

Father Gavazzi delivered a lecture, on Thursday evening, the 30th ult., on the "Present and Future of America." The weather was unfavorable, but quite a respectable audience was present. He said, that all people can now find in America shelter and refuge from oppression and tyranny. The time will come when Europe, and all the world, shall be as free as America now is. Our emigrants expect to, and do find liberty here, and they shall study in your liberal institutions, and carry those principles back to their native countries, making the whole world one universal Republic. As we are accurately informed by both ancient and contemporaneous history, it is impossible for Liberty and Romanism—it is impossible for Freedom and Popery to flourish beside each other; and, therefore, it is necessary that you should ever be upon the watch. I know that where Roman Catholics are watched, they say they are persecuted. No!—that is not persecution, that is only precaution. Rome at present is trying to divide you, and to dominate over you. I like the preaching of Dr. Cox, of Brooklyn, who warned you of the spread of Popery in America. You must meet it with gentle means; but do not be deluded by their professions, nor deceived by their shows. For they do not come to oppose, or win you openly at first, but the mask is removed, ultimately. He spoke of the commonness of crosses in the various Protestant Churches, and he felt convinced that these Churches would be among the first to become Catholic. [Applause.] Don't let them get their nail into your flesh or they will kill you. Don't tell me that Catholic and Protestant are brothers. No! no! One believes the Bible, and the other believes in external forms and theatrical nunneries. Dear brethren, don't mistake, Romanism is increasing in influence, both numerically and otherwise. He then spoke to the effect that Catholic servants, in a measure, constrained and hindered the free expression of opinion in American families. He also asserted that the Catholics, in a great measure, ruled the press and politics of America. The first politicians in your country were noble Christians; now they will submit to all kinds of humiliation, and be guilty of all sorts of degrading meanness; they will kneel before the Bishop, the Priest, and the Jesuit, for a vote. Americans, don't stoop to any foreign Jesuit, for if you do, instead of being the fathers of your country you become the traitors of your country. If you will be free from Catholic influence you must be Americans. He then spoke of the influence of Romanism in Europe, and hoped his audience would take a warning from the result.

He alluded to the arrival at Washington of a private Envoy from the Pope, with gifts of various descriptions to the President. With Virgil, said he—

> "When the Greeks give gifts, I fear them."

And concluded with the earnest hope that the sun of the next anniversary of American Independence will be as bright as that of 1776. [Loud applause and waving of handkerchiefs.]

At the conclusion of this address, in order to show Father Gavazzi in some measure the esteem in which his efforts are held, the members of Waldensian Lodge, No. 9, American Protestant Association, presented him with a splendid gold medal. This medal was about two inches in diameter, and beautifully engraved. On one side was the following inscription: "Presented by Waldensian Lodge No. 9, American Protestant Association, to Alessandro Gavazzi, New York, June 30, 1853." On the other side was an engraving of the Scriptures open, and above, the word "Holy Bible." The medal hung from a long black ribbon by a finely engraved loop, somewhat resembling a mitre.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY.—The annual commencement of the University of the city of New York, was celebrated at Niblo's, on Wednesday, the 29th ult. A large number of distinguished guests occupied the stage, and the students were seated in the body of the hall. When the exercises commenced, the building was thronged with a brilliant assembly.

The Rev. Isaac Ferris, D.D., was inaugurated Chancellor of the University, and delivered a very appropriate address. After this came the speeches of the graduating class, at the conclusion of which eleven young gentlemen were admitted to the first degree in the Arts. Thirteen gentlemen received the degree of Master of Arts, three the degree of M.D., and the Honorary Degree of L.L.D., was conferred upon Samuel Dickson, Charleston, S. C.

In the evening, the Alumni of the University enjoyed a sumptuous banquet at the Astor House. Toasts and speeches were given, and the festivities closed at a late hour, after having yielded much satisfaction to all who participated in them.

MISSIONS AT SHANGHAE.—Rev. T. P. Crawford addresses a letter to the Big Hatchie Association, through the Tennessee Baptist, in which he gives the following information respecting the state of Christian missions in Shanghae. The whole number of missionaries, male and female, who are now laboring in that city, is 36. These are represented as follows: London Missions, 6; English Episcopal, 2; American Episcopal, 8; Methodist, 3; Seventh-day Baptist, 4; Baptist, 9; Presbyterian, 4. Within a year from the date of Mr. C.'s letter, seven missionaries had arrived, and thirteen had "left for their respective fatherlands."

"The London Mission, the American Episcopal, the English Episcopal, the Sabbatarian, and Baptist, each have within the city a large and commodious chapel, built in the foreign style, in which is regularly dispensed the Word of Life, both spoken and written. Besides these there are other preaching places—rented Chinese houses.

"A goodly number of children, both male and female, are receiving in[illegible]ion in the mission schools. The numb[illegible] boarding and day schools is not less than twelve."

Much is done in the sale of religious books, which are sent into various parts of the empire, by traders and others visiting the city. The number of converts thus far is small, with the hope that in future years they will, as the seed sown takes root, increase.

A HINT TO WEALTHY MEN.—An inspired apostle (says the Watchman and Reflector) has exhorted us to "provoke one another to love and good works;" and this holy provocation may be rightly taken, even where it is not intended to be given. A good man may present his property to the cause of the Redeemer, simply with a view to the glory of that great personage, without any special regard to his fellow Christians, but it becomes them to be moved by his example to high and noble deeds, and to copy his holy conduct. Here is an illustration of what we mean:—

The sixty-first anniversary of the English Baptist Missionary Society was held in London the last week in April, and was presided over by W. B. Gurney, Esq., a gentleman of seventy-five years of age; for thirty-five years a member of its Committee, and for eighteen years its Treasurer, during the last seven of which he has had, for his colleague Samuel M. Peto, Esq., a member of the British Legislature. Age and infirmities compelled the venerable man at the meeting to take leave of public life, which he did in a manner well befitting the Christian gentleman. The report of the Secretaries showed that a debt rested on the Society of some nine thousand dollars, but before the end of the meeting one of those gentlemen annouced, by the authority of an old friend of the society, whose name, he said, he was not allowed to mention, that the whole debt was paid! No doubt existed in a single mind as to who that friend was, for this was by no means the first time he had performed similar acts.

THE ENGLISH MISSION IN JERUSALEM.—In one of the letters of Dr. Duffield, who has been on a visit to Palestine, we find the following:—

"The mission established by the English Church, and by the English government, in connection with that of Prussia, is well supported. Bishop Gobat is a warm-hearted Evangelical man, and exerts personally a good influence. The mission also has various useful appendages, and some interesting cases occasionally occur, of Jews renouncing their Judaism, and embracing the gospel. It is a light, and the honest searcher after truth may find his way to Jesus Christ, the friend and Saviour of sinners, by God's blessing on the means it furnishes. Still it is but limited in its influence, and I should fear may be so related with the political governments that sustain it, as to afford but imperfect and ill-defined representations of the truth that true Christianity advances 'not by might nor by power, but by thy Spirit, as saith the Lord.'"

PREMIUM FOR A THEOLOGICAL ESSAY.—The Home Journal says that in 1774, a Scotch gentleman left a sum of money, the interest of which he directed should be given as a prize, at the expiration of every forty years, to the author of the best work upon the evidences of the existence of a Supreme Being. The prize has already been once awarded and the second period of forty years will expire on the first of January, 1854. By that time the accumulated interest will have amounted to the very desirable sum of twelve thousand dollars, all of which will become the property of the author of the successful treatise. The competition is open to all the world, and there is no restriction as to the length or brevity of the essays. An Aberdeen paper gives the exact subject to be elucidated, as expressed in the following terms:—

"The Evidence that there is a Being, all Powerful, Wise, and Good, by whom everything exists; and particularly to obviate difficulties regarding the wisdom and goodness of the Deity; and this, in the first place, from considerations independent of Written Revelation; and, in the second place, from the Revelation of the Lord Jesus; and, from the whole, to point out the inferences most necessary for, and useful to, mankind."

AGRICULTURE IN PALESTINE.—Rev. Dr. Duffield, writing to the Christian Observer, under date of Jerusalem, April 3, 1853, says:

"The revival of agriculture, and the improvements commenced in their lands, have within a few years been very remarkable. I am surprised to see the extent of ground beginning to be terraced and cultivated in fields of wheat and barley, and vineyards. I met a large caravan of mules, donkeys, and horses, last week, near the Jordan—nearly if not fully 200 bearing wheat from its Eastern side to the Jewish market. The early and latter rains as yet however occur not with that abundance and certainty as to indicate that the Lord has removed his curse from the land. The failure some 4 or 5 weeks ago of the latter rains had become so marked that great fears were entertained for the coming season, lest the crops should be wholly cut off. Mussulman and papist, and nearly all sects celebrated fasts. Water had became very scarce and was sold at high rates, wheat also had advanced in price. But within a fortnight past, there have been some refreshing and abundant rains, and the fields of grain present a very vividly verdant aspect."

FUNERAL OF REV. DR. SHARP.—The funeral of Rev. Dr. Sharp took place at Boston, on the afternoon of June 28 from Charles-st. Church, and was largely attended by the citizens of Boston and the neighboring towns. Governor Clifford, R. C. Winthrop, and many distinguished merchants and clergymen of various religious denominations were present. The funeral sermon, by President Wayland, of Brown University, was an elegant tribute to the Christian character of the deceased. Many of the stores were closed, and the bells of the churches tolled by order of the Mayor.

A NOBLE MONUMENT.—To honor the memory of the late Duke of Wellington, a magnificent School is to be established, at which children of Army officers are to be admitted free of charge. The Queen heads the subscription with $5,000; Prince Albert and the Duke of Cambridge (the Queen's uncle) follow with $2,500 each; and there are several subscriptions ranging from $500 to $1,000. The entire subscription already amounts to $400,000, and will probably be increased to $500,000. Is n't this better than a pyramid of useless granite?

There are in the Massachusetts Constitutional Convention 128 farmers, 73 lawyers, 65 merchants and traders, 18 boot manufacturers, 24 clegymen, 24 manufacturers, 18 physicians, 14 editors and printers, 11 mechanics, 8 builders and house-wrights, 4 master marines; masons, machinists, blacksmiths, druggists—3 each; jewelers, tanners, professors at law—2 each, &c. Of the whole number, 336 were born in Massachusetts, 31 in New Hampshire, 11 in Connecticut, 11 in Vermont, 8 in Maine, &c.

A curious case of juvenile depravity occurred the other day in the town of Chatham, in this State. A lad of eleven years became highly enraged at his father, and took his revenge by going about to fire the neighboring woods, stables, outhouses, &c. Being asked if he was not sorry for what he had done, he answered no, and said that he wanted to burn up all between his father's house and Rilier's mills, a distance of some three miles. The boy was arrested and put under bond for his good behavior.

Dr. Maddox, of Louisiana, en route for the East, with his family, passed through this city on Friday last, (says the Cincinnati Commercial,) and while here gave freedom to three of his slaves, who were in company, one boy and two girls. He also gave them a liberal supply of money to supply their wants until his return from the East, when he proposes to have their free papers regularly made out.

The editor of the New Hampshire Congregational Journal writes, concerning the ministerial change in that State, that of the one hundred and sixty-three ministers of the State ten years ago, only thirty-two occupy the positions they did then. And yet, of the one hundred and sixty-three pastors ten years ago, twelve only have died.

In the province of Antre-Minhoe Douro, Portugal, there is a mountain called Stelles, which is remarkable for one thing which is not easily occounted for. On the top of it there is a lake in which the wrecks of ships, broken pieces of masts, shrouds, and even anchors are found—though the mountain is at least twelve leagues from the sea.

A resolution has been passed by the Common Council of Detroit, tendering to Hiram Powers, the great American sculptor, now about to return from Europe, the hospitality of the city. The resolution was of a highly complimentary character.

The identical cylinder belonging to the "Savannah," which sailed to England in 1819, and was the first steamship that ever crossed the Atlantic ocean, will be exhibited at the Crystal Palace in New York, by the side of one of the most approved constructions of the present time.

General Intelligence.

European News.

The steamer Africa, from Liverpool, arrived at New York on Thursday, June 30, bringing dates to June 18.

The Turkish question exclusively occupied public attention, but it is almost impossible to arrive at any true estimate of its bearings. The Russians seem determined to occupy, if they have not already occupied, the Danube Provinces, which France appears determined to prevent, while England evidently has a strong dislike to the whole business. The Turks are arming at all points. Latest accounts report that the mediation of Austria had been accepted by Russia.

Prince Albert laid the foundation of an Asylum for Idiots, at Earlswood, Reigate, near London, on the 16th June.

Hon. and Rev. A. P. Perceval, the Queen's Chaplain, had committed suicide.

The India and China mails had arrived at Trieste, with advices from Canton to the 20th of April, and from Hong Kong to a later date. The capture of the city of Nankin by the insurgents is fully confirmed. The Hong Kong Gazette, of April 22, confirms this information, and says that the capture was effected on the 21st of March. It adds, however, the important intelligence that the insurgents were subsequently compelled to evacuate the city, and that on the 6th of April they were defeated in an engagement with the Imperial troops, about thirty miles south of the city of Nankin.

Terrible Accidents in New York.

On Friday morning, July 1, a serious accident occurred on board the steamer New World, at the foot of Chambers-st., New York. The circumstances, as near as can be ascertained, are as follows:—

The New World, with the George Washington, form a regular day line to Albany, leaving New York at 7 o'clock, and the Francis Skiddy forms an opposition line to both of them, making the up trip by day and the down trip at night. The New World was to leave at seven o'clock precisely, and about one hundred passengers were on board—the greater part of whom were in the ladies' saloon aft, and on the promenade deck. The dock was crowded with carriages containing passengers, and everything was hurry and confusion. At twenty minutes before 7, the engine was in motion, the engineer being at his post and the firemen in the boiler-rooms, when of a sudden a tremendous hiss of steam was heard, and in a moment after the scalding vapor pervaded the whole deck, which was under cover, both fore and aft of the engine. Capt. Peck was aft at the time, and with great presence of mind rushed to the saloon and secured the doors, thereby preventing the passengers from coming on the lower deck. But for this precaution it is probable that many of the passengers would have been severely injured; as it was, however, they all escaped harm. It appears that one of the lower flues in the larboard boiler suddenly collapsed, the steam, blowing open the furnace door, and rushing into the boiler-room, blew into a thousand directions a huge pile of coal, and thence through two partitions into a pantry, and out upon the main deck and into the engine-room, which is inclosed merely by an iron fence. The force of the steam was so great that it completely discolored and peeled off the paint on the ceiling of the main deck. It even made its way into the clerk's room, completely saturating papers and books. The clerk was in his room at the time, receiving fare, and narrowly escaped with his life.

Two men were instantly killed by the explosion, one man drowned, and seven others mortally wounded, all belonging to the crew of the steamer. The number of deaths up to Monday morning were seven.

It was supposed that steam had been raised unusually high for the purpose of racing with the Francis Skiddy, to Albany, but Isaac Newton, one of the principal owners of the boat, who was on board immediately after the accident, says that he had given especial instructions against racing, or any approach to it. The Coroner's Jury exonerate the officers of the boat from all blame in the matter, and recommend the Board of United States Inspectors of Boilers to give the result of their labors to the public at the earliest day possible.

On the same day at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, a terrible storm of rain, hail and lightning rose suddenly and passed over the upper part of the City and neighborhood. An awful scene occurred on the north side of 43d-st., directly opposite the Latting Tower. Here two large unfinished frame buildings were blown, or rather, were crushed down into a mass of ruins. One of them was partly sided, and had the rafters up, but no roof, the other was sided and roofed with tin, and was being plastered. In this building, besides the workmen, there were numerous laborers who had taken shelter under its roof when the storm drove them hurriedly from their work. How so many persons escaped death is truly wonderful. It can only be accounted for by supposing that they had a moment's warning and rushed into the street. The first alarm was from the tearing off a portion of the tin roof, which was carried high over another building and fell in the street. Before they could escape, they were buried in a mass of timber, and three of them instantly killed, and four or five dangerously wounded, and others slightly bruised and badly frightened. Several would have perished but for timely assistance to extricate them. Two other unfinished buildings in that vicinity were also blown down, but no persons were in or near them at the time.

SINGULAR LAKES.—The Crater Lakes, in the town of Manlius, Onondaga County, New York, are curiosities, and are supposed to be of volcanic origin. They are, by the inhabitants about there, called the "Green Lakes." One of them is on the top of a hill, and is in the form of a tea-cup. The banks are two hundred feet high, and the water four hundred feet deep. The water appears of a deep green, but when taken up in a glass it is perfectly clear and transparent. Trees and limbs which fall into the water soon become encrusted with a bright green substance, which on being exposed to the air becomes hard. The timber decays and leaves this incrustation in the shape of hollow tubes. Wood saturated with this water and burned emits a strong odor of sulphur. A farmer who resides near once heard a great rush of water, and looking round saw the lake rising over the banks. He was alarmed, and fled with his team; but the water soon receded to its usual level.

WESTERN RAILROAD ENTERPRISE.—An Air-line Railroad under the name of the "Cleveland and St. Louis Railroad," according to The Toledo Blade, is in contemplation. The Road, according to the programme, is to run direct to Paris in Indiana, where it will unite with Terre Haute and Alton Railroad. The Blade says that a company under the General Railroad Law is already formed in Indiana, and stock taken, sufficient in amount to secure the construction of the Indiana portion of the work. This Road will cross the State of Ohio, almost midway between the Bellefontaine and Indianapolis Road on South, and the Toledo, Wabash and St. Louis Road on the North, and will intersect with the Dayton and Michigan Road at Lima, making the distance between Toledo and St. Louis by this route 390 miles. At Tiffin it will intersect with the Mad River and Lake Erie Railroad, thus furnishing a connection between Sandusky and St. Louis over a route of 418 miles, and the length from Cleveland to St. Louis will be 460 miles. It will also intersect with the Toledo and Norwalk Road, and the Sandusky and Mansfield Road.

SWINDLING A COUNTRYMAN.—Wednesday afternoon a countryman from Ohio, a wool merchant, stopping at the Western Hotel in Courtland-st., New York, was induced to go to Brooklyn on the representation of a man who pretended to be from the same State and engaged in the same business. After visiting the Navy Yard and other places of interest, they proceeded to the Hights, where they met another, a stranger apparently, who had just arrived from California, and before returning wished to dispose of the patent of a valuable invention, represented to be a safe for securing books, papers and money, from fire as well as burglars. Upon a bet being made between the two sharpers that it could not be opened, the countryman was induced to fork over $1,000 in the hands of one of the party, which no sooner done than the other grabbed at it and was off. The "friend" followed, and the countryman was soon distanced in the race. He subsequently related the circumstances to the Police Justice sitting at the City Hall, and efforts were made to arrest the offenders.

A NEW PRINTING PRESS.—The Milwaukie Sentinel says that Mr. S. D. Carpenter, late of the Madison Democrat, has succeeded in inventing a new printing press which has some very great improvements. It is expected that one will be exhibited at the World's Fair. Three of its prominent features are these: First, it feeds itself, and does it perfectly. Second, it works both sides of the sheet at once; the half cylinder rocking to and fro, printing one side of the sheet as the bed plate moves forward, and the other side as it comes back. The registry, too, is as accurate as machinery can make it. Third, the press registers its own work; a clock face, with hands, on the side, showing at each moment the number of sheets, as well as the number of tokens worked off. Being much less complicated than the Hoe presses, Mr. Carpenter expects to furnish them at greatly reduced prices. In running them, too, he saves expense, as one man can tend the press and the engine at the same time.

DESTRUCTIVE STORM AND TORNADO AT GREAT BEND.—The Binghamton Republican of June 23d, says: Yesterday (Wednesday) afternoon, a violent thunder storm and tornado at Great Bend tore up the trees, damaged crops, prostrated barns, and committed other injuries. A horse was also killed by lightning. The telegraph line between Carbondale and Montrose was broken down. There were four feet of water on the Railroad track—and we hear also that the water in the Susquehanna River, at Rock Bottom Mills, in this village, rose between six and eight inches. We have not learned the particulars of the storm. Its signs were seen in our village in the shape of black clouds in the east, heavy thunder and vivid lightning.

RAILWAY AXLES.—Mr. D. Cokely, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has the model of a new Compound Axle invented by him, designed to obviate the mischief and perils now encountered on Railroad curves, where the wheels on one side of the car must necessarily travel further and faster than those on the other, producing a tremendous strain on the axle and frequently breaking it. The object sought by this invention is an important one, and we trust it is attained. Whether this invention is preferable to others, especially that of Mr. P. G. Gardiner, of N. Y., is a question not for Editors but for practical Engineers, to whom we earnestly commend it. The old fashioned axle is clearly vicious and dangerous; let the best attainable substitute be designated and adopted forthwith.

ST. PAUL A PORT OF ENTRY.—The St. Paul (Minnesota) Democrat says: Messrs. Fullers have, on the way from Liverpool, forty-five crates of Queensware, upon which they will pay duties at our Custom House. They save from 23 to 37 per cent. by importing directly from Liverpool, instead of purchasing in New York. Large wholesale houses will soon be needed here, which will import their goods direct from Europe, and give the Surveyor of the port something to do.

Dr. J. A. Kelly was in a groggery drinking in Millroad, Knox Co., Ohio, on the 20th June, when his maiden sister, Elizabeth, went to the door to call him home. She was abusively ordered to go home and mind her business, when she picked up two or three stones and threw them among the decanters, breaking two or three of them, and then started for home. The rumseller caught a revolver from his bar, chased her and fired four shots at her, one ball lodging in her thigh, whence it cannot be extracted, and another inflicting a similar wound on a young boy, Moffit, who was sitting quietly on his stoop some doors from the groggery. The rumseller was arrested and held to bail in the sum of $2,000.

The Rome (N. Y.) Sentinel of June 29, says: All accounts agree that the wheat crop promises to be more than an average, and unless something occurs hereafter to prevent, we may calculate on a large product. Of the prospect of the other grains, we can only speak so far as this section of country is concerned; but in this part of New York we have never known them more promising. Corn has a good stand, and is more than ordinarily forward; the breadth planted is also large. Oats look well, and promise, at this early day, a good crop. Other grains and all the root crops bid fair to produce well.

SUMMARY.

From January 1 to April 28, 1853, eighty-two whalers put into Honolulu, of which one was Russian, four Bremen, three French, and the remainder American. At the port of Laihana, during the same period, seventy whalers had put in, of which one was French, one Bremen, and the remainder American. The total amount of oil shipped to the United States since January 1, 1853, has been 155,572 gallons sperm, and 2,172,814 gallons whale. Also, 485,435 pounds of bone.

The Detroit Free Press, June 23, says: In all portions of this State there is abundant promise of a heavy wheat crop. The only danger now to be apprehended is rust, and inasmuch as that depends upon the state of the weather hereafter, we must hope for the best. The spring crops are doing pretty well, though rain is much needed. We do not hear any complaint about the prospects of fruit.

Women's Rights have taken a new and useful shape. At Millersburg, Ohio, a few days since, the lords of the village having seen fit to neglect the cleansing of the streets, a bevy of damsels armed themselves with shovels, hoes, wheel-barrows and brooms, and commenced clearing up and wheeling away the dirt that had accumulated since the opening of spring.

A riot occurred July 1, in a lager bier saloon in Pittsburgh, in which the proprietor, named Augustus Lusler, was stabbed, supposed mortally, and the bar tenders, Francis Kellerman and Ferdinand Kaisir, were seriously wounded. The parties who inflicted the wounds are Francis Porter and George W. Lewis, young men of respectable connections. They have been arrested.

The Bowling Green (Ky.) Standard says: A difficulty occurred in this County on the 3d June, between Mrs. Marion Bunch and Miss Brown, in which the latter was killed. The particulars which led to this horrible tragedy are unknown, or the means by which it was effected. A sister of Miss Brown, in attempting to appease the affray, received several severe wounds, which, it is feared, will prove fatal.

The saleratus factory of Porter & Co., East Boston, was destroyed by fire on Friday morning, June 24. Loss, about $7,000; insured $6,300, including $1,500 on the building. The stables of Newton & Potter and J. W. Estabrook & Co., Boston, were destroyed by fire on Friday evening. Loss about $3,000. Newton & Potter were insured for $1,200.

The Cincinnati Gazette says: The lumber trade of Cincinnati has grown to be immense. It is not very long since that a few rafts of a hundred thousand feet each overstocked the market. Now in the season for running, the Ohio is full of fleets, some of which cover acres. We have heard of one this season from a single mill, which contained 1,000,000 feet of boards.

A Berkshire Judge, unable, a few weeks ago, to settle the disputed ownership of a dog which was brought before him, allowed the animal to decide for itself in Court. The dog passed one of the claimants, but went to the other, joyfully wagging his tail, placing his feet on his knees, and attempting to lick his face. The testimony of the dumb witness was considered conclusive.

Last week in excavating the premises of Mr. Peter L. Bogart, on the east side of Manhassett, a number of skulls and bones were found. Some of the skulls had the teeth set in. They are conjectured to be the remains of an Indian tribe who formerly lived there, and manufactured wampums from the clam-shells in the vicinity of the bar or beach.

During the thunder storm on Thursday, June 30, a German brickmaker, named Conrad Deitz, doing business in Fifty-first-st., N. Y., while picking cherries, in company with two others, at the corner of One Hundred and Tenth-st. and Tenth-av., was struck by lightning and instantly killed.

The whole of the Great Ohio Valley Railroad, from near Cincinnati to Bridgeport, opposite the City of Wheeling, is soon to be in process of construction. This road forms an important portion of what will be one of the shortest routes from Cincinnati to Baltimore, and from Cincinnati to Philadelphia, New York and Boston.

The ceremonies of the Inauguration at the Crystal Palace will take place on the 14th of July, the day before the Exhibition is opened to the public. On this occasion, it is expected that the President of the United States and some, at least, of the Cabinet officers will be present to assist at the Inauguration.

At the crossing of the Maine Railroad in Boston, on Wednesday night June 29, a man named Luther S. Brown, who was in a buggy, attempted to cross the track, when he was struck by an engine, thrown out, and almost instantly killed.

Dates from St. Thomas to June 10, inform us that the yellow fever is raging fearfully on that island. There are several American vessels in port that have lost officers and crews entire. There are at this time 30 seamen in the hospital, and the deaths number from 4 to 6 per day.

Advices from Turks Island to the 22d June state that heavy rains had fallen at that place, which destroyed about 150,000 to 200,000 bushels salt; in consequence of which salt had materially advanced, and was held at 15 cents.

There was a grand torch-light procession of the New York fireman on Saturday evening, July 2, on the occasion of the arrival of a Baltimore fire company, as their guests, to spend the Fourth of July and see the various objects of interest in New York and its vicinity.

On Wednesday night, June 29, three tows, comprising more than 100 barges and canal boats, left Albany for New York. They occupied the entire channel, so that the steamer Empire, in trying to shoot past the fleet, got aground on the flats, but slipped off soon afterward.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of TITSWORTHS & DUNN, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

A New Volume

OF WOODWORTH'S YOUTH'S CABINET commences with the July number, and of course now is a favorable time for new subscribers. A word to the wise is said to be sufficient, therefore the publisher begs to employ two words just to say that the Cabinet—the most popular illustrated dollar magazine in the Union—is more captivating than ever. The editor, in his Foreign Sketches, is now rambling with the reader among the wonderful ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeii. The Biography of Distinguished Americans is still continued. Try this magazine. You will find it just the thing for your family. Each number contains 48 pages. There are two volumes in a year—one commencing in July, and the other in January. A yearly volume embraces nearly 600 pages, and about 100 Illustrations.

Those who wish to subscribe, can do so at a reduced price, by taking the work in connection with other persons, and remitting the several subscriptions at the same time. Price, for a single copy, $1; 4 copies, $3; 7 copies, $5; and, in the latter case, an extra copy to the one who forms the Club. Payment invariably in advance. Bound volumes of the new series (three in number) 75 cents each, postage free.

Please to send on your orders by mail to the Publisher, D. A. WOODWORTH,
118 Nassau-st., New York.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U. S. and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

Miscellaneous.

Affairs in China.

Bayard Taylor, one of the editors of the N. Y. Tribune, was at Shanghae on the 28th of March, under which date he furnishes that paper with the following account of the progress of the Revolution:—

All the rumors which I mentioned in my last letter from Hong Kong are confirmed. The rebels have advanced upon Nanking as was anticipated, and that capital is in all probability in their hands at this moment. It is quite impossible to obtain a reliable account of their progress, as the Chinese proclamations invariably disguise the truth. The actions of the authorities are so thoroughly at variance with their public declarations that we are compelled to reject the latter entirely. On the other hand, the rumors afloat change with every hour. I can only give you what is said on both sides, without vouching for the correctness of any statement, except that of Nanking being beseiged and sorely pressed, if not already taken.

The authorities of this place at first denied that the rebels had advanced upon the Imperial city. Afterward they admitted that a rebel army of 6,000 men was encamped before the walls. Then they announced a victory of the Imperial troops, in which nine thousand of the enemy were slain. Then a second victory, in which twelve thousand were slain, and, finally, a third victory, with a slaughter of twenty thousand rebels. They now privately admit that the rebel forces amount to 60,000; but the popular rumor is that they are 200,000 strong. The Taou-Ty of Shanghae has purchased in all haste an English schooner to send provisions to the beleaguered Imperialists, and an American bark, the Science, has been chartered by San-qua, a native merchant, to carry stores to Chin-Keang-foo, near Nanking, which is supposed to be still in possession of the Government troops. The English Consul—acting, as is supposed, under the advice of Sir George Bonham—refused to permit the schooner to be sold to the Chinese authorities; a palpable blunder, which was overcome by selling her to an American merchant, who immediately resold her to San-qua. The American representatives intend to preserve the strictest neutrality in the matter, but the English seem inclined to overstep the mark, and indirectly encourage the Revolution. Nevertheless, the last British mail steamer from Hong Kong, the Ganges, brought up 100 cannon, which were immediately purchased by the Taou-Ty or his agents. The sympathies of the foreign mechants here appear to be with the insurgents, who are everywhere popular among the natives.

This popularity no doubt gives rather too favorable a color to the rumors which reach us. It has been reported several times that Nanking has already fallen. One account states that the besiegers undermined the walls in seven places and effected an entrance into the city, the Imperial Viceroy committed suicide in despair, and all the troops fell into the hands of the victors. Another report is, that the Imperial troops, sorely pressed, shut up in the city, without sufficient provisions, had themselves broken out into open rebellion, while the entire fleet of transports and war-junks on the Yang-tse-Kiang, conveying supplies and reinforcements, had been captured by the rebels. We are in hourly expectation of hearing that the great City of Soo-Chow, on the Imperial Canal—the capital of the silk-growing district, has been invested. Soo-Chow is only fifty miles from this place, and the consequences of its capture would probably be a march hitherward. The inhabitants of the city are in the greatest alarm, and all business, except the mere local commerce in the necessaries of life, is at an end. The principal merchants have removed and secreted their money and stores, and the province, which is very populous, will soon feel keenly the cessation of the trade, in which depends the very existence of thousands of the laboring poor.

However, the course of the rebels, wherever they have been victorious, has hitherto been most politic and humane. The people have not been disturbed in their employments, private property has been respected, and the internal commerce interfered with as little as possible. Only against the Tartar mandarins and their defenders have the insurgents adopted a sanguinary course. It is rumored that, if successful, they will observe a most liberal policy toward foreigners, but this can hardly be more than surmise. Another report says that the leader, Ting-Tuk-Whang, has some knowledge of English. It is not doubted but that two of his Generals must have been pupils of the late Missionary Gutzlaff—as is evident from certain expressions used in their "Religious Proclamation," in which they openly avow the doctrines of Christianity.

In some quarters the rebels are accused of murdering the Priests, and destroying the ancestral tombs and temples of the Chinese. This is believed to be incorrect, except in one or two instances, where they have done so in retaliation for similar outrages on the part of the Imperial commanders. It is certain, however, that they destroy all the Buddhist temples in their march, and they are said to have annihilated a college of 200 Priests in a city in the vicinity of Nanking.

I do not remember whether I have already stated that the leader of the Revolution, Ting-Tuk, is a descendant of one of the branches of the ancient Chinese, or Ming dynasty, and that his avowed object is to overthrow the present Ting, or Tartar dynasty. In fact, he is proclaimed as Emperor on the bulletins of his army, so that his cause has already risen above the dignity of a rebellion and assumes the aspect of a national war. It is Chinese against Tartar, and the people are not indifferent to the issue. Any change can hardly be for the worse; any kind of agitation is better than the dead stagnation of Chinese life. Viewed in all its aspects, this Revolution is one of the most remarkable of this Revolutionary Age.

Shanghae already feels most sensibly the effects of the paralyzation of trade and industry in the interior. Business has totally ceased. The native merchants have buried their silver, and the foreign residents have barely enough to pay for their household expenses. Four or five thousand junks lie in the river, but scarcely a pound of tea or a yard of silk is brought in. The English war-steamers Hermes and Salamander, and the brig Lily are here, and the French war-steamer Cassini. Sir George Bonham is on board the Hermes, and the report to-day is, that he will leave immediately for Ning-po. The movements of the Susquehanna are uncertain, but it is rumored that she will convey Col. Marshall up the Yang-tse-Kiang as far as the Imperial Camp, in order to confer with Seu, the Imperial Commissioner. She excites great astonishment here among the natives, being much the largest steamer that ever ascended the Woo-sung, and the American residents rejoice to see their country so formidably represented.

Wyandotte Cave.

From the Louisville Courier.

This Cave is in Crawford County, about 11 miles from Corydon, Indiana, and is situated of the Blue River, on the land of an old farmer, Mr. Rothrock. The mouth of the cave is located very strangely on the top of a high knob, and the approach to it is anything but romantic, as the ascent is steep, rugged and rocky.

The entrance is insignificant, being closed by a door, which the owner always judiciously keeps locked, to prevent spoliation. We first entered what is called the old cave, a very spacious and at first straight avenue which gradually descends for two or three hundred yards, and then divides into two principal branches. One of these is a continuation of of the "old cave," and contains nothing very remarkable until you arrive at the end, about three miles from the entrance. Here the principal object of curiosity is a massive pillar, which reaches from the floor to the ceiling, and supports apparently an immense circular dome above. The pillar is fluted very beautifully and regularly in a vertical direction, and appears very much like a work of art. It has been named the Pillar of the Constitution, while the dome above is called the Circle of the Union. Retracing our steps, we entered the other principal branch by a second door, which the propietor also kept locked. This, the new, and by far the most extensive and magnificent portion, has been only known since 1850. It contains many different avenues, leading in every possible direction, which in many places meet one another, and form a perfect labyrinth of passages. We traversed those only which our guide assured us were most interesting, and the first apartment of note that we arrived at was the Crown Chamber.

From the roof of this part, near the side, depends a most perfect formed crown, made by long delicate stalactites joined at the base, and forming almost a complete circle. Upon this magnificent crown is a very comfortable seat of rock, and very near by a cascade of crystal water issues from the roof and side. There were also in this chamber, pendent from the roof, some very queerly formed stalactites, which resembled very much in color and shape tobacco plants hung up to dry. We refreshed ourselves from the cascade, and took another avenue which presented in its passage many more difficulties than any we had yet encountered. In several places we suffered much inconvenience from the necessity of stopping; and for several hundred feet we were obliged to crawl upon our hands and knees, receiving severe rubs on our heads and backs whenever we attempted to be more lofty than the humble nature of the passage would allow. When the guide assured us that ladies had been through this passage, which he called purgatory, we struggled on perseveringly, and were richly rewarded when we arrived at the termination of the avenue. Here it expands into a beautiful apartment, in which stood three magnificent pillars, adorned with fantastic formations, which were exquisitely perfect.

From between the scales of rock which formed the roof, issued many vermiculated stalactites, which conglomerated at their bases, ramified off in every conceivable, fanciful way. With the acquiescence of the owner, we named this curiously beautiful apartment Pillared Palace. In this charming spot we remained as long as our time would permit; and then, returning through the purgatorial passage, we proceeded through another very extensive avenue, now over a rugged pile of rocks, and again across a sandy plain, until we reached what is very appropriately termed the Hill of Difficulty. This, together with Monument Mountain just beyond, is an immense pile of fallen rocks, far more difficult of ascent than the far-famed "rocky mountains" of the Mammoth Cave.

But the grand sight awaited us above. On the very summit stands a hugh monument like stalagmite, seven feet or more in hight, beautifully rounded on top. Near this, but lower down, are two other stalagmites, smaller but more beautiful; one of them is almost perfectly white, and in the dark gloom which surrounds it, looks like a massaive pillar covered with snowy drapery; the other is white only on one side, but is far more spotless than the first. We called the first the Drapery Pillar, and the other, from its resemblance in color to the cream-like whiteness of that French dish, the blanche mange pillar.

Around and above this mountain is a very grand ellipsoidal dome, the center of which we could scarcely discern by the feeble light of our candles. Elevating our candles by means of a long pole, we were able to see it more perfectly, and the long, beautiful, white, fringe-like stalactites which depended from around the edges of this grand concave.

There were also some penny form lactites translucent, delicate and snowy white. From the center of this dome to the level of the cave is an estimated distance of one hundred and seventy feet.

Such a combination of grandeur, gloom and magnificence cannot but make one, who views it, feel the entire inadequacy of verbal description.

The awful and almost overpowering silence of this subterraneous domain adds to the gloomy grandeur and sombre magnificence of this spot.

Until very recently it was supposed that the cave extended no farther in this direction, but a short time since the owner discovered on the further side of the mountain a small hole, through which water was trickling from above, and having enlarged this by the aid of a crow-bar sufficiently to admit of a passage, he found it was the entrance to many very extensive and beautiful branches beyond. The entrance is still very narrow, and one can only squeeze himself through with difficulty, by crawling downward feet foremost. It is very appropriately called the Auger-Hole.

After some very rugged and rocky walking, we found in one avenue two rocky slabs, so smooth and glassy as to appear like two large cakes of ice; and in the same avenue we saw some very curious stalactite formations, which nature must have formed when she was in a most fanciful and freakish mood, so grotesque were they in appearance. Here also we found some foot tracks, the only vestiges of man, excepting some perfectly preserved poles on the other side of the auger-hole. The tracks were very distinct, and were evidently the footprints of a very large native, as they were made by bare feet, and were at least four feet apart. The marks of two steps in one spot were remarkably distinct, and proved beyond a question the former presence of an Indian in in that part of the cavern. How he got there is a question not so easily solved, as this part has been very thoroughly explored, and no other entrance discovered excepting through the auger-hole, which was certainly, when first found, too small even to admit a boy. It is supposed by some that this hole must have been formerly much larger, and has since become filled up with rocky concretion by the continual dropping from above, which made it as small as it was when found.

We leave it to the curious to judge whether this was so or not; I imagined that the Indian did not like the looks of the place very much from the long strides he took—perhaps his torch was nearly out. In another avenue leading from this we found some very beautiful gypsum formations, resembling much the rosettes and snow balls found in Cleveland's Cabinet in the Mammoth Cave. The mutilating hand and smoking torch had not marred the perfect beauty of these chastely white, translucent, floral petrifactions; and the encrusted walls, and various festooned forms of singular beauty, rendered this the most enchanting spot in the cave.

We found on the floor here some long needle like fibrous gypsum which resembled very much asbestus. One portion of this beautiful avenue, where nature has been most lavish in her enchanting work, is called Queen Mab's Retreat; and a most fitting place it is for the Queen and her diminutive deities to retire to, when tired of frolicking in the moonlight, above, and troubling with dreams in their gallops the slumbers or of us poor mortals. These gypsum formations are truly "fairy-like creations of nature's architecture."

This spot is about three miles and a half from the main entrance; and as it was then getting late, we took no other of the numerous avenues which offered themselves, but retraced our steps to the auger-hole, through which we screwed ourselves, and, proceeding onward by several different avenues, reached the exit in safety. We had been in subterranean darkness for six hours, and the sight of the sunny colored world above was really a relief. In its general features, this cave is similar to the Mammoth Cave, and is undoubtedly, like it, the result of the dissolving power of water. The Mammoth is more remarkable for its great extent and large rivers; but this cave, we think, excels even the Mammoth in the variety and beauty of stalactites.

The rocks are principally carbonate and sulphate of lime, but there are also in many places very large veins of smokey gray and black flint. In the "old cave," fibrous crusts of pure Epsom salt adhere to the roof and the ground below is strongly impregnated with it. Nitre is also found in abundance. With the exception of a few white crawfish, bats are now the only animals within this dark abode, and beyond the second door we saw many hundreds of them, hanging in clusters from the wall with their heads down, in a state of apparent torpidity. The temperature is somewhat lower than in the Mammoth cave, the thermometer generally standing at 55 degrees.

The "old cave" has been known for many years, and was worked at least thirty years ago for Epsom salt; but the new portion has all been discovered after the present owner bought the land of Congress a few years ago. The cave derived its present name from the former name of Blue river, which was called by the Indians the Wyandotte river.

Female Beauty in Different Countries.

The ladies of Arabia stain their fingers and toes red, their eyebrows black, and their lips blue. In Persia, they paint a black streak around the eyes, and ornament their faces with various figures. The Japanese women gild their teeth, and those of India paint them red. The rows of teeth must be dyed black to be beautiful in Guzurat. The Hottentot women paint the entire body in compartments of red and black. In Greenland, the women color their faces with blue and red, and they frequently tattoo their bodies by saturating threads in soot, inserting them beneath the skin, and then drawing them through. Hindoo females, when they wish to appear particularly lovely, smear themselves with a mixture of saffron, turmeric, and grease. In nearly all the islands in the Pacific and Indian Oceans, the women, as well as the men, tattoo a great variety of figures on the face, the lips, the tongue, and the whole body. In New Holland, they cut themselves with shells, and by keeping open the wounds for a long time, form deep scars in the flesh, which they deem highly ornamental. Another singular addition is made to their beauty by taking off, in infancy, the little finger of the left hand, at the second joint. In ancient Persia, an aqueline nose was often thought worthy of the crown; but a Sumatran mother carefully flattened the nose of her daughter. Among some of the savage tribes of Oregon, and also in Sumatra and Arracan, continual pressure is applied to the skull, in order to flatten it, and thus give it a new beauty. The modern Persians have strong aversion to red hair; the Turks, on the contrary, are warm admirers of it. In China, small round eyes are liked, and the girls are continually plucking their eyebrows, that they may be thin and long. But the great beauty of a Chinese lady is in her feet, which in childhood are so compressed by bandages as effectually to prevent any further increase in their size. The four smaller toes are turned under the foot, to the sole of which they firmly adhere, and the poor girl not only endures much pain, but becomes a cripple for life. Another mark of beauty consists in finger nails so long that cases of bamboo are necessary to preserve them from injury. An African beauty must have small eyes, thick lips, a large flat nose, and a skin beautifully black. In New Guinea, the nose is perforated, and a large piece of wood or bone inserted. On the north-west coast of America, an incision more than two inches in length is cut in the lower lip, and filled with a wooden plug. In Guinea, the lips are pierced with thorns, the heads being inside the mouth, and the point resting on the chin. The Tunisian lady, of moderate pretensions to beauty, needs a slave under each arm to support her when she walks, and a perfect belle carries flesh enough to load down a camel.

Wood Gas.

The City of Wilmington, North Carolina, is now, for its size, the cheapest lighted city in the United States. The whole apparatus, including mains, gasometer, &c., cost but $18,900. This includes their transportation from Philadelphia, with, also, the pay and passage of workmen. By reference to Ure's Chemical Dictionary, a standard work, it will that be found a tun of coal, or thereabouts, yields about 10,000 cubic feet of gas. This is after eight hours distillation from the best selected coal. By actual experiments it has been found that a cord of wood will produce 93,000 cubic feet of gas. It will be perceived at once this renders wood gas much cheaper. Besides, it is a well ascertained fact that wood oils in the production of light are as 7 to 8 in favor of ligneous oils over coal. One reason that they have been so little used is, that they require to be distilled from wood previous to use; but this difficulty, it is said, has been obviated by a simple and cheap apparatus, invented and patented by Dr. McConnell. This invention places the use of gas within the reach of all rural villages, and will render every one, who chooses to be so, independent of the gas companies, for by its means they can manufacture their own gas, at a much cheaper rate than it can now be supplied by any company chartered within the United States. This gas has not the offensive smell of that produced by coal, and can be passed directly from the retort through the washer or condenser to the gasometer without further purification.

This discovery promises to open a new field of commerce; the vast amount of pine wood in Lower Virginia and North Carolina, now considered of no value, will be brought into market for the purpose of manufacturing gas, and the charcoal left after destructive distillation will pay the whole expense for manufacturing. Wood can be purchased in Carolina, and delivered at Wilmington, or in Pamlico Sound, for one dollar per cord; the transportation, &c., would not bring the cost up beyond four dollars. Wood, at five dollars per cord, yields 93,000 cubic feet of gas; coal, at six dollars per tun, only 10,000 cubic feet. An apparatus for manufacturing wood gas could be put up for one-seventh the cost of that for manufacturing coal gas. It is estimated that the City of New York might be lighted for one dollar a thousand feet, and yield a handsome profit to the manufacturers; whereas the City now pays three dollars per thousand. The Poor Customer.

"How much butter?"

"Only half a pound, if you please."

"And sugar?"

"Half a pound."

"And these oranges?"

"Half a dozen, sir."

"You go by the halves to-day—well, what else? Be speedy, ma'm, you're keeping better customers waiting."

"Half a peck of Indian meal, and one fine French roll;" said the woman, but her lip quivered, and she turned to wipe away a trickling tear.

I looked at her straw bonnet, all broken, at her faded shawl, her thin, stooping form, her coarse garments—and I read poverty on all—extreme poverty. And the pallid, pinched features—the mournful, once beautiful face, told me that the luxuries were not for her. Some invalid looked out from his narrow window, whose pale lips longed for the fresh, cool orange, for whose comfort the tea, and the butter, and the fine French roll were bought with much sacrifice. And I saw him sip the tea, and taste the dainty bread, and praise the flavor of the sweet butter—and turn with brightening eye to the golden fruit. And I heard him ask her, kneeling by the smoky hearth, to taste them with him. And as she set the broken pan on edge, to bake her coarse loaf, I heard her say, "By and by, when I am hungry."

And "by and by," when the white lids of the sufferer were closed in sleep, I saw her bend over him with a blessing in her heart. And she laid the remnants of the little feast carefully by, and ate her bread unmoistened.

I started from my reverie—the grocer's hard eye was upon me.

"You're keeping better customers waiting."

O! I want to tell him how poverty and persecution—contempt and scorn—could not dim the heart's fine gold, purified by many a trial; that that poor woman, with her little wants and her holy sacrifices, was better in the sight of God, than many a trumpet-tongued Dives, who gave that he might be known of men. An Exciting Scene.

A year or two ago, as the steamer Southerner was on the point of departure from Charleston, S. C., for New York, our attention was attracted by a number of passengers on board, and the excitement of a large crowd which had gathered at a particular place on the vessel's deck. We made our way into the throng behind the captain, and soon found a man dressed in the garb of a Quaker, seated on what appeared to be a chest, declaring that it should not be opened unless those who opened it killed him. While he was thus acting, a voice from the chest, (as if from a colored person in distress,) said in a smothered tone:

"Let me out—I had rather go to massa, oh! mercy! dis chile can't stan dis no how! Oh! golly, can't stan dis no longer."

"Look here, my friend," said the captain, "you'll please get off that chest."

"I'll do no such thing," he replied coolly.

"Oh, dear, luff me out dis!" came distinctly from the chest, as if the speaker was suffocating.

"Mate," said the captain, "bring some men and take that person off that chest, and break it open."

The Quaker resisted, was seized by the passengers, all believing he was stealing a darkey, contrary to the laws of the South, and held uncomfortably. The mate took an axe and forced the lid loose from the chest.

"Oh, don't, you'll kill me," said the satisfied voice. "I want to get out; I want to go back; oh, dear! I shall die."

"Hold on a few minutes longer," said a good-natured person, stepping out; "you shall soon be released."

Quite an intense feeling was now raised in the crowd, when the mate forced off the lid, and as it came from the box, an unearthly, demoniac laugh rang from the old clothes with which the chest was filled, and no sign of any living being was there. Amazement appeared on the countenances of the before angry, but now bewildered lookers-on. We were shortly after let into the mystery, by the captain saying that he had forgotten that Wyman, the Ventriloquist, was on board. That genius was standing near, and nearly choking with laughter at the anxious faces of spectators, and the excitement he had raised by thus waking up a nigger in a box.

Dreams.

Dreams usually take place in a single instant, notwithstanding the length of time they seem to occupy. They are, in fact, slight mental sensations unregulated by consciousness; these sensations, being less or more intense, painful or agreeable, according to certain physical conditions. On this subject the following observations occur in Dr. Winslow's Psychological Journal:—

"We have in dreams no true perception of the lapse of time—a strange property of mind; for if such be also its property when entered into the eternal disembodied state, time will appear to us eternity. The relations of space, as well as of time, are almost annihilated; so that while almost an eternity is compressed into a moment, infinite space is traversed more swiftly than by real thought. There are numerous illustrations of this principle on record. A gentleman dreamed that he had enlisted as a soldier, joined his regiment, deserted, was apprehended, carried back, tried, condemned to be shot, and at last led out for execution. After all the usual preparations, a gun was fired; he awoke with the report, and found that a noise in the adjoining room had, at the same moment, produced the dream, and awakened him. A friend of Dr. Abercrombie dreamed that he had crossed the Atlantic, and spent a fortnight in America. In embarking on his return, he fell into the sea, and, awakening in the fright, found that he had not been asleep ten minutes."

The Tea Culture.

I am not sufficiently acquainted with the soil and climature of our Southern States; but I have learned from intelligent Chinamen, with whom I have conversed on the subject, that California, both in soil and climate, is admirably adapted for its growth—as much so as any part of China.

The Thea Bohéa and the Thea Viridis, from which most of the tea imported is taken, are both hardy green-house plants, and have been many years cultivated by our gardeners, among other exotics. I have had them seed freely in pots in the house, and have raised many plants from seed thus matured. The plant is readily propagated from both seed and cuttings. The seed must be planted immediately after ripening, as it does not long retain its vegetative principle.

The tea is a species of Camelia Japonica; indeed, several varieties of the Japonica are cultivated for Tea, as the Camelia Sasánqua and others.

I have seen large plantations of Tea growing in the Botanic garden, and in the Emperor's gardens in Rio, and in the month of March, the ground covered with the fallen seed, whence I suppose any quantity might be obtained for cultivation. These seeds, put up in boxes of sand, might be brought to the States in perfect order.

The general opinion is that the Green and Black Tea are from the same plant, and that their qualities are owing to different processes which they undergo in preparing them. Now, this is a great error, as the Green and Black Tea are distinct in appearance and quality; the Green Tea has a much richer and more expansive leaf than the Black, and much greater astringency. The Chinese always use the Black Tea, it being considered by them more wholesome and nourishing.

In establishing a Tea plantation, it would be necessary at first to employ Chinamen, who might be had in any number from California, at very moderate wages. I have seen much of their farming operations in California, and I believe them to be the nicest cultivators in the world. I am satisfied that if Southern planters were to give up their slaves, and hire Chinamen at moderate wages, they would be greatly benefitted by the change. [Cor. Trib.

New Plan to keep Dust out of Railroad Cars.

Messrs. Atwood & Waterbury, of Waterbury, Conn., have discovered an actual preventative of dust in Railroad cars. We had the pleasure of testing the invention on Monday, last, and the result was entirely satisfactory. The day was very warm, and the track was thick with dust, but we rode thirty miles at full speed, without being any more inconvenienced, either from dust or heat, than if we had been seated in the most favorably located parlor in the Astor House.

The invention is extremely simple. An air-box is constructed on either side of the tender, with an aperture facing the engine, to receive the air. The air thus received rushes through this open space, into the baggage car, and from that into the passenger cars—the whole train being thrown into one vast saloon. All the cars are enclosed at the point of coupling by India-rubber canvass put together so as to be susceptible of very easy removal, if it is desired to separate the cars. There is a door on either side of the platform for the ingress and egress of passengers, which is only opened after the train is stopped, the windows remaining fastened all the time.

When in motion, the train becomes a perfect tube, through which the air, which finds admission at the aperture on either side of the tender, rushes with a force corresponding with the motion of the train. When going at the rate of but fifteen miles an hour, the air moved with sufficient force through the car farthest removed from the tender, to float a heavy silk pocket-handkerchief; and it rushed through the doors (being of the ordinary size) with force enough to blow one's hat off! And, best of all, in these refreshing breezes, not a particle of dust was perceptible! A ride, in a hot day, on a train thus equipped, is a luxury worth making a long journey to enjoy.

The only drawback to this invention is the heat experienced when the train is stopped. It is somewhat oppressive, but not much more so than in other cars, while no dust is blended with the hot air, rendering every respiration but little better than a rasp upon the lungs.

Any car can be adapted to this invention at the small cost of $35; and unless something as good or better is speedily discovered, we hope to see this improvement introduced elsewhere. We most cheerfully bear our unsolicited testimony to the perfection of this improvement. Nothing could more effectually accomplish its object. [Albany Journal.

MISSIONS OF WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

☞ The following Report of the Executive Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association was intended to accompany our notice of the meeting of that body two weeks ago, but was crowded out. A more encouraging report we have not often read.

Report of the Executive Committee.

The Executive Committee, in directing the Domestic Missions of the Association, have felt that their efforts should be mainly directed to aid the feeble churches of the Association. Relying upon the increased liberality of the churches, the Committee have extended their operations. Last year we had one missionary, located with two churches, supplying them alternately, to whom we paid about eighty dollars. This year we have had three missionaries, located so as to supply six churches, at an additional cost of about one hundred dollars. These six churches would all of them have been but partially supplied with the preached word, and some of them must have been entirely destitute of it, but for the aid thus furnished them. These churches are doing somewhat in aid of the work, and supply the greatest share of the salaries of the missionaries.

Report of Labors.—The reports of the missionaries have been, in each case encouraging and satisfactory. Bro. H. W. Babcock, who labors in Potter County, Pa., gives an encouraging account of his labors on his field. By his request, in his first quarterly report, two brethren were appointed to give a series of Sabbath Lectures in Ulysses and vicinity. That labor was performed in January last, and lectures were given in three localities in the vicinity of the Ulysses church. The lectures were well attended, by full and attentive congregations. At these lectures, Sabbath Vindicators were freely given and received, and several bound volumes of Tracts on the Sabbath were sold. In the report of Bro. B. for the next quarter, we are informed: "The prospects of the Sabbath cause in Ulysses are at present more encouraging than they have been. Since my last report, nine have embraced the Sabbath, and the leaven is yet at work." In his last report, just received, he writes, "During the present quarter, six have been baptized and have united with the church in Ulysses—all converts to the Sabbath. Sabbath investigation is still progressing. Tradition and superstition are doing what they can to keep up Sunday observance, but they are obliged to recede before the clear light of truth." There is an increased necessity for missionary labor in that vicinity. The little success which has attended Seventh-day Baptist efforts there, is enlisting the attention and energy of other denominations. In his first quarterly report, Bro. B. writes, "Besides preaching to the two churches, I am preaching at Cushingville, Peasely Hill, and Oswayo. At Cushingville prospects are still encouraging. The attendance is full, and a number have been reclaimed, and some of the youth are inquiring the way of life. At Peasely Hill there has been a comforting revival in progress. There have been five hopeful conversions in connection with my labors in that place, and sinners are yet inquiring. One in Ulysses has embraced the Sabbath. Indications at Oswayo are yet hopeful. There is a full attendance, and rather an increase of interest." On March 27th, he writes, "I have commenced efforts in two places I have not previously occupied, viz., at Raymond School-House, and Cobb Hill, in Allegany township. The Lord has graciously poured out his Spirit at all the stations I am at present occupying. A number have professed conversion, who have not yet embraced the Sabbath of the Lord."

Bro. Rowse Babcock, located with the churches in Erie County and vicinity, reports, that the churches at the time of his settlement with them were in a very low condition, many having moved away, some died, others left the Sabbath, and but a few left to sustain the cause. Besides his labors in the churches on the Sabbath, he has preached at several other stations on other days. In his last report he writes, "Notwithstanding the many discouragements that seem to lie before us, we have reason to bless God that the churches and societies have been somewhat comforted, encouraged, and revived, and some few likewise profess to have found deliverance from the bondage of sin."

Bro. L. M. Cottrell, located at Persia, also gives an encouraging account of his labors. At the time of his settlement there, the church was in a very low condition. Since that time some have been reclaimed who had backslidden, difficulties have been settled, and four have been added by letter to the church. He also reports one conversion in connection with his labors. The aspect of things in the neighborhood is improved, one prominent man in the community having relinquished the sale and use of ardent spirits. Sabbath Schools and Prayer Meetings are well sustained. He has preached monthly at Clear Creek, to a branch of the Persia church. The state of things there is encouraging.

Prospects and Plans.—The Committee, in view of what the year has accomplished, feel that they have the approbation of the Head of the Church in their efforts. The hope of benefiting the feeble churches in the Association induced them to incur great responsibilities, and now that a good beginning has been made, they feel that the missions must be sustained. We cannot think of withdrawing labor from either field. These must all be sustained and enlarged to meet the increasing interests connected therewith. Bro. H. W. Babcock informs us that there is a promising field of labor on the Drift-Wood Branch of the Cinnamahoning, about forty miles from Hebron. There are a few Sabbath-keepers there. Shall we occupy that field? We can but feel that we are called upon to occupy it, in the hope that on that side our borders may be extended. To meet all the calls thus made upon us, we feel that still larger drafts must be made upon the labor of our missionaries, and upon the Christian benevolence, and prayers, and "material aid," of our brethren. As we see the work progressing, we must not slacken our hands.

Finances.—The Committee commenced the year free from debt, and have been able to make through the Treasurer quarterly payments to our missionaries. We have given orders as follows: J. Bailey, $6 79; L. M. Cottrell, $50 00; R. Babcock, $50 00; H. W. Babcock, $90 00; amounting in all to $196 79. Of this sum $195 86 has been received from the churches, and $5 93 from the legacy of Nathan Green, as may be seen from the Treasurer's report. $17 54 have also been contributed by the churches to meet the loss of money sent Bro. Rowse Babcock; thirteen dollars of which have been appropriated to that purpose; the remainder is in the general fund.

Conclusion.—The Committee feel grateful for the prosperity that has attended their efforts, and the efforts of their missionaries. One missionary was laid aside awhile by sickness. Aside from this, nothing has occurred to interrupt their labors, and unusual prosperity has attended their labors. It is our earnest wish, as we submit to you the result of our operations, that the missions may be continued and extended by our successors; and we most affectionately ask the churches, and all our brethren, to give their hearts and hands to this work, as one that promises great usefulness to the churches, and much hope for the Sabbath cause, and salvation to souls.

We suggest to the churches that are receiving missionary labor, to take regular contributions in aid of the missions of the Association, aside from their regular subscriptions.

CHINA MISSION.

From a letter of Bro. Carpenter, dated Feb. 16th, to the Missionary Board, we extract as follows:—

"We hear nothing yet from the Jews in Honan. The Rebellion, which originated in Quaung-se, is becoming more and more formidable. The rebels have approached within three or four hundred le of Nankin. Great fears prevail, lest they should take that city. For, in that event, they could intercept the transportation of the rice by the inner passage towards Pekin. The outer passage is so infested by pirates, that it is considered dangerous. So, if you hear that Teen Tich has taken Nankin, you will know that we stand a fair chance of a change of dynasty. In that case there will be wars and rumors of wars."

We also give a few passages from the journal of Bro. C.:—

Jan. 7.—Preached in Sung Waung Mau, (temple of the city god, otherwise called "tea gardens," which I will designate S. W. M.) Also conversed with some of the keepers of the temple of Qua-te on the emptiness of their system. They assented to all I said.

Sabbath evening, spoke of the goodness of God in providing the needed salvation, in the chapel.

8.—Sabbath.—Went into S. W. M.; found a man who had been fighting, almost dead, and surrounded by a great crowd, to whom I preached peace in the name of Jesus.

At 3 o'clock, conducted our public Bible Class in chapel. Lesson: Settlement of the new world by Noah and Sons, his prophecies and their fulfillment; in which the audience were shown that they, being the descendants of Shem, were more nearly allied to Jesus than we foreigners are, &c.

9.—Went about 25 le into the country east of Shanghae, to a village called Yang-ka-Chung, where I preached to 150 more or less. On my return at Yu Sa spoke the word to about a hundred. Still further on my homeward way spoke to about fifty.

10.—Met a Sachu man in S. W. M., of about 65 years, with whom I commenced conversation. In a few moments, as many as could hear gathered around as usual, to whom I spoke for about twenty minutes on the vanity of idols and upon the works of Creation, Preservation, and Redemption of man, as proofs of the being and attributes of the true God. O, for the deliverance of these poor criminals from the bondage of error.

11.—Studied Chinese and Hebrew as usual, and discoursed to about 100 in S. W. M. Was not entirely without fears that, in some cases, it is casting pearls before swine, to preach Jesus in the greatest place of amusement in all this Province. But generally the audience is quite civil, and in many cases a lively interest appears to be felt; and were it not for the counteracting influence of heathenism and all old associations, more might be hoped for in this work.

12.—A little rain after a long drought. Streets muddy. Conversed with a man in a tea shop, in S. W. M., who thought that Jesus was the disciple of Shangte. This, he said, he had learned from the missionaries.

13.—Discoursed in S. W. M. Also conversed with our new coolie and washerman, who showed himself entirely ignorant of the awful depravity that is in every human heart.

14.—Discoursed in S. W. M. to 200 more or less, on filial obedience to our heavenly Father. A Kang Chu man followed me home, to whom I gave Genesis, Exodus, Mark, Catechism, and Treatise on the Sabbath.

15.—Sabbath. In S. W. M., discoursed to several tens. Also conducted Bible Class in chapel.

Evening after Sabbath.—A fire near us destroyed about 28 houses, the wind blowing towards us. A little excitement. One of the literati, in the employment of one of the missionaries, came to sell me some pictures of hell torments, made by himself, and according to Chinese ideas. I refused to purchase, and warned the man to make no more representations of what I feared he did not well understand, and also to flee from the wrath of God which is yet to come, and a dreadful reality to all the unbelieving world. The heaviest fall of snow we have seen in Shanghae. Went through the spacious grounds of S. W. M., but no opportunity for discoursing.

17.—In S. W. M., spoke to 50 more or less, on preparation necessary for a future state.

18.—Spoke in same place to about an equal number. One fellow undertook to break in rudely upon me, but after being sharply reproved, he withdrew.

19.—Preached to about same number on filial piety. Some seemed to obtain new light. May it do them good.

20.—Went into the temple of the city god, who was receiving worship. His attendant little gods were also receiving worship. I asked an old man, who lives in the temple, to give me the proof that men ought to worship such things. He refusing to communicate, I was left to preach Jesus to the bystanders, who gave respectful attention.

21.—Standing directly before the staging for the actors in S. W. M., and reading the inscription written in gilded characters, "Let the god listen to the melody," I inquired of a well-dressed young man the meaning. He refusing to explain it, I took it for a text, and having by argument demolished the idol, reared up the claims of One who "speaketh in righteousness, mighty to save." I was soon hemmed in on all sides by attentive listeners. But alas! "who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" It is comparatively easy to get men's ears, but how shall we win their stubborn hearts? But it is whispered in my ear,

> "Wait on the Lord, ye trembling saints,
> And keep your courage up;
> He'll raise your spirit when it faints.
> And far exceed your hope"

22.—Sabbath. While getting under way in my discourse in the S. W. M., a sprightly young man asked me to explain the word "Teen" (Heaven,) by which the Chinese sometimes understand the visible heavens, but in the classics generally the chief god Shangte. Glad to see interest enough to prompt a question, I explained to a crowd of listeners the Scriptural uses of the term.

At Bible Class exercise, the audience somewhat larger than at preaching exercise, owing doubtless to the novelty of the thing.

Evening after Sabbath, preached at Sa Hway jau.

23.—Started for a trip into the country, but was prevented by the rain. On our return called at an idol temple and left our testimony.

24th and 25th.—Rainy. Kept at my books.

26th.—Visited the S. W. M. No opportunity for preaching, but was followed home by a man from Che Keang Province, to whom I endeavored to explain the lively oracles.

27th.—Preached in S. W. M. to 50, more or less, on the preparation necessary for the day of judgment.

28th.—Preached in S. W. M. to 100, more or less, against idolatry, and in favor of the worship of the true God. The city god was stripped of his laurels in front of his own temple, and before his face and eyes, and yet no one came forth to his rescue.

29th—Sabbath. No meetings in chapel, in consequence of nearness of Chinese new year. Preached in S. W. M. to about 150, on the institution of the Sabbath as a powerful proof of the existence of the Creator of the world.

30th.—Went into the S. W. M.; found the place occupied by other missionaries. After they were through, addressed 150, more or less, on the proofs of Christianity in connection with the want of proof in the systems of idolatry.

31st.—Surveyed the ground. There being a theatrical performance, I found no opportunity to preach.

February 1.—A fire within fifty rods of us consumed more than a hundred houses and shops on one of the principal business streets. It raged from 6 to 11 last evening.

6.—No opportunity to preach for the last few days, the people are so busy in settling accounts for the year, and making preparations for the New Year.

8.—Chinese New Year. Preached in S. W. M. to 150, more or less.

9.—Wrote a letter to Dr. Boon, commenting on the new version of the Sacred Scriptures into Chinese.

10.—Preached to 150, more or less, in S. W. M., on the glory of the gospel. O how I love to tell of the wonders of divine love.

11.—Was rebuked with apostolic (?) sharpness by a missionary brother, for remembering those who are bound as bound with them, at the monthly concert a few days ago. I took it as meekly as possible. It appears that the brethren who are in league with slavery, are exceedingly sensitive to any allusions to the domestic institutions of the South.

Sabbath Evening.—Preached in chapel to about 15 persons, on the love of God in Christ Jesus.

12—Sabbath. In S. W. M., preached to about a hundred on the New Birth. At 3 o'clock, in chapel, to about 25, on the Resurrection of Christ. At 5 o'clock, at Sa Hway jau, on Religious Experience.

13.—Preached in S. W. M. to 100, more or less, on the Resurrection and Eternal Judgment.

14.—Mrs. C. took another little girl, as bright and healthy as one in a thousand, the daughter of an English merchant by a Chinese concubine. He is about to go to England, to be absent eighteen months. She is about four years and nine months of age. Such children would be heathen enough, if none of us would take them into our families. They are superior to the Chinese children, and of course promise a richer reward for our toil.

15.—Preached in S. W. M., on the Divine Goodness, to about 100 persons, who paid respectful attention.

Knowledge is increasing, light is spreading, and the day of Chinese redemption approaching. The Lord hasten it in his time.

From the Christian Watchman and Reflector.

EVENTS IN CHINA.

It is a curious and suggestive feature of the newspaper articles of the day, that the political affairs of the great Eastern Empire have become a leading topic of remark. A few years ago we had no interest in any Chinese question save the abundance and the price of teas and silks, and to trouble ourselves about dynastic strifes would have been deemed as unreasonable as solicitude for the issue of a contest between the Crows and Blackfeet of the Rocky Mountains. But things are changed. Steam and electricity, and commerce, whose servants they are, are bringing the world together, and giving interest to the movements of even barbaric nations. Alexandria is within four days of London, and Calcutta in a few years will be within as many hours of that metropolis. The wires will ere long stretch along the base of the Himmeleh Mountains to Pekin and Kamaschatka;—to meet at the straits the wires which reach further and still further westward from New York. All nations are agitated;—all must put themselves into relations with each other, and the race move together towards a common destiny. There must be all-embracing laws of commerce, and international laws gathering within their sway all nations,—the heralds of Providence announcing the triumph of an Universal Religion.

When China not long ago was closed against the world, we recollect that it was said, in relation to missionary movements, what matters it? Suppose it were open now, who is ready to enter? Let your missionaries possess the cities which border the empire; let them acquire the language; let them translate the Bible;—then when the doors shall be open, they may enter prepared for their work. So the event transpired. In a few years the doors were opened, not widely indeed, but with opportunities more than equal to the zeal of the church. Missionaries entered, and the work has gone on. The war with England which had this issue, brought China into new relations with the Western world. France and the United States followed England in the formation of treaties, and the affairs of the Empire began to awaken interest. Now still greater events follow. A rebellion, at first a cloud no bigger than a man's hand, rises in a distant interior province. Months pass away, and rumor assigns to it graver importance as a revolution. Then comes doubtful intelligence of remarkable religious ideas and connections associated with the movement. The leader is imperfectly taught in the doctrines of Christianity;—leading truths of the Bible are recognized in his proclamations;—the revolution is anti-idolatrous;—it threatens the dynasty:—Nankin is besieged, and, according to last reports, has fallen;—the Emperor invokes the aid of England, France and America to preserve his dominion.

Such are the events which have awakened the new and wide-spread interest in the affairs of China, which is felt in Europe and in this country. The daily press of England and America teems with leaders discussing the dynastic questions, and questions of policy, having more to say of the Celestial Empire in a single day, than it said twenty years ago in a twelvemonth. The fact is suggestive. If the exclusiveness of the Chinese is now to be broken up, and that vast empire is to become in all its parts accessible to commerce;—if especially a new rule is to acquire ascendancy, and men who overthrow idols and revere the true God are to exercise it,—then what a field opens itself to the church of Christ! China embraces a population of three hundred millions, far advanced in civilization and wealth, covered with towns and cities, and traversed by roads and canals, where every facility of commerce is likewise a facility for the spread of the religion of Christ. And even if, as some suppose, the alleged religious bearings of this great movement are all delusive, and the final results shall be narrowed down to a mere change of idolatrous rulers, and new commercial treaties enlarging but slightly on the present limits of foreign intercourse, there will still remain enough to tax to the utmost the prayers and zeal of the friends of missions. God has thus far opened China more rapidly than his people have been ready to enter it in the service of Christ.

The following are the comments of the London Times on the religious bearings of this revolution. That journal having commented on the political character of the revolution, proceeds to say:—

"The religions element of the movement is considered less distinct, and as the proclamation bearing upon this subject will command universal interest, we transfer it in its original phraseology to our columns. It appears to be mainly addressed to the members of the Triad Society, a secret association formed among the Chinese for the express purpose of effecting the expulsion of the Tartars, something like the Tugendbund in Germany, during the dominion of Napoleon, or those philosophical brotherhoods which pioneered the revolutions of 1789. The Christianity of the document is certainly not pure, but it will be seen that several Scriptural truths are recited, and that the Old Testament is appealed to by name. As far, however, as its mere language or professions are concerned, there are, of course, many disciples of the Christian missions in China competent to give as good or better accounts of their belief. The importance of the document consists in its being used, as if with authority, from the head quarters of the rebels, and in the introduction of such a subject into the communications of an insurgent chief with the people of the country. We learn, too, from independent sources, that certain religious views have undoubtedly been manifested in the proceedings of the insurgents. They have displayed considerable zeal in the purification of temples, and have been particularly earnest in destroying images—a resolution which is hardly traceable to any political principle, inasmuch as the idol-worship of the Chinese is not connected with the reigning dynasty, but prevailed long before the Tartar invasion. Whether these measures import merely a reformation of the national religion, or whether they really bespeak a design of substituting a purer faith for the creed of the Chinese, we cannot say. All we see is, that a successful pretender to the imperial throne of China, has actually addressed an appeal to the Chinese in the name of true religion, and has called upon them, in a proclamation reciting certain leading truths of Christianity, to reject corrupt spirits and worship the True Spirit."

"WE REST ON THEE."

These things belong to the life of faith, and are essentially the same, whether they have regard to our defense against the innumerable adversaries who disturb or threaten our bodily repose—or the spiritual enemies, within us and without us, that bring danger to our souls. In either case, perfect love to God, and perfect trust in Him, which trust is essential to love, gives REST—casts out all fear and doubt. "He that feareth is not made perfect in love," and therefore he has not yet attained to perfect rest. To enjoy this rest, which is the result of perfect love and perfect faith, is a state of inconceivable blessedness, infinitely greater than that of those whom the multitude look up to with envy and admiration. It is the state of the man who can say, in the quaint language of an old poet—

> The God that made my heart is He alone
> That of himself both can and will > Give rest unto my thoughts, and fill
> Them full of all content and quietness;
> That so I may possess
> My soul in patience,
> Until he find it time to call me hence.
>
> In Thee, as in my center, shall
> The lines of all my longings fall.
> To Thee, as to mine anchor, surely tied,
> My ship shall safely ride.
> On Thee, as on my bed
> Of soft repose, I'll rest my weary head.
>
> Thou, Thou alone, shalt be my whole desire,
> I'll nothing else require,
> But Thee, or for thy sake.
> In Thee I'll sleep secure; and, when I wake
> Thy glorious face shall satisfy
> The longing of my looking eye.
> I'll roll myself on Thee, as on my rock,
> When threatening dangers mock.

BAPTIST HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The following Address sets forth the origin and design of the "American Baptist Historical Society more fully than it was possible for us to do in our notice of its organization. The object is one of deep and general interest, and we hope it may be fully attained.

Address to the Baptists of America.

Brethren,—At the anniversary of The American Baptist Publication Society, held in the city of Philadelphia on the 5th day of May, 1853, an Historical Department was organized under the name of "The American Baptist Historical Society." A Constitution was adopted, which provides that the officers and Board of Curators shall be annually elected by the Publication Society, that an annual Report shall be presented to that body, and that an address shall be delivered at each anniversary upon some historical subject. The following gentlemen were thereupon elected for the year 1853-4:

President—Rev. Wm. R. Williams, D. D., New York.

Vice-Presidents—Rev. John M. Peck, D. D., Illinois; Rev. B. B. C. Howell, D. D., Virginia; Rev. Wm. Hague, D. D., New Jersey; Rev. Baron Stow, D. D., Massachusetts.

Secretary—Horatio Gates Jones, Jr., Pennsylvania.

Treasurer—Rev. Benjamin R. Loxley, Pennsylvania.

Curators—Rev. Joseph Belcher, D. D., Rev. John Dowling, D. D., Rev. J. Lansing Burrows, Rev. Heman Lincoln, Winslow Jewell, M. D., John Hanna, Esq.

The Board of Curators have already had a meeting, and the undersigned, as Secretary of the Department, was desired to prepare an address to the Baptists of this country, explanatory of the design of the new organization.

Brethren, the objects had in view by the founders of the Historial Society, may be summed up in a few words. We propose to collect, from all parts of the country, the history of each church, the biographies or sketches of the lives of the ministers of our denomination, the records and proceedings of all the various Baptist Associations, religious, benevolent, literary and ecclesiastical bodies, and valuable manuscripts, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers and books written by Baptist ministers or laymen. When this shall be done, it is proposed to arrange such documents as we may collect, in a convenient manner at the Rooms of the Publication Society, where access to them may be had by all who desire to study the early history of our church. In a word, it is designed to form a central depository for Baptist Historical papers, books and manuscripts, and to preserve materials for the future ecclesiastical historian, and to publish such of these historical documents as often as occasion may demand.

Brethren, we are aware of the magnitude of the work before us, and we are equally aware of its great importance—but, relying upon the God of our fathers, who has led our people through tribulations and persecutions to a high state of spiritual as well as temporal prosperity, we look with strong confidence to the future, and hope, under His blessing, to achieve a good work.

Brethren, we owe to the founders of our churches in this country—mere instruments, it is true, in the hands of a merciful Providence—a debt of gratitude for having firmly stood by the faith, when an adherence to it was the sure precursor of stripes, or imprisonment, or death. Regard for the past—veneration for the memories of the mighty men of old, and love for the truth, unite in urging us to gather the few records of their lives and acts which still remain, and which, in the course of a few years, may be scattered abroad and forever lost.

We therefore ask your co-operation, and appeal to you to send to the Historical Society such papers, manuscripts, books and documents as pertain to the early history of our churches, and such facts as you may possess, which will enable us to form a complete record of our ministers, our churches, and of the progress of our denominational principles.

All documents, books, &c., should be forwarded to the care of Rev. B. R. Loxley, No. 118 Arch-street, Philadelphia; and letters relating to the Society should be addressed to the undersigned at his office, No. 47 South Fifth street, Philadelphia.

Brethren, we trust that our appeal will meet with prompt and earnest attention—what is to be done should be commenced at once—and if all resolve to contribute something towards the object of our Society, we shall soon explore the whole field of inquiry. Let us remember that, by collecting the history of the past, and contemplating all that our fathers endured for the sake of Christ, we may confirm the faith of those who proclaim the same principles now, and increase the spirit of true piety in the hearts of all believers.

By order of the Board of Curators,
Horatio G. Jones, Jr.,
Sec. Am. Bap. Historical Society.
Philadelphia, June 10, 1853.

MICHAEL FARADAY.

Michael Faraday, England's most eminent chemist, was born in 1794, the son of a poor blacksmith. He was early apprenticed to one Ribeau, a bookbinder, in Blanford street, and worked at the craft until he was twenty-two years of age. Whilst an apprentice, his master called the attention of one of his customers (Mr. Dance, of Manchester street) to an electrical machine and other things which the young man had made; and Mr. Dance, who was one of the members of the Royal Institution, took him to hear the four last lectures which Sir Humphrey Davy gave there as professor. Faraday attended, and, seating himself in the gallery, took notes of the lectures, and at a future time sent his manuscript to Davy, with a short and modest account of himself, and a request, if it were possible, for scientific employment in the labors of the laboratory. Davy, struck with the clearness and accuracy of the memoranda, and confiding in the talents and perseverance of the writer, offered him, upon the occurrence of a vacancy in the laboratory, in the beginning of 1813, the post of assistant, which he accepted. At the end of the year he accompanied Davy and his lady over the continent, as secretary and assistant, and in 1815 returned to his duties in the laboratory, and ultimately became Fullerian Professor. Mr Faraday's researches and discoveries have raised him to the highest rank among European philosophers, while his high faculty of expounding to a general audience the result of recondite investigations, makes him one of the most attractive lecturers of the age. He has selected the most difficult and perplexing departments of physical science, the investigation of the reciprocal relations of heat, light, magnetism, and electricity; and by many years of patient and profound study has contributed greatly to simplify our ideas on these subjects. It is the hope of this philosopher, that, should life and health be spared, he will be able to show that the imponderable agencies just mentioned are so many manifestations of one and the same force. Mr. Faraday's great achievements are recognized by the learned societies of every country in Europe, and the University of Oxford in 1832 did itself the honor of enrolling him among her Doctors of Law. In private life he is beloved for the simplicity and truthfulness of his character, and the kindliness of his disposition. [Men of the Times in 1852.

Jephthah's Daughter.—The passage stands thus in our English version: "Whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering." It ought to stand: "Whatsoever, &c., shall surely be the Lord's, or I will offer it up for a burnt offering." The sense of the passage is perfectly obvious, with this correction, to any one reading the whole story. Jephthah had only one daughter, and had no other successor; but, on her being thus unexpectedly devoted to a single life, her father's family became extinct.

Strict Construction of Scripture.—How many singular heresies have grown up in the Church out of the literal rendering of a single passage of Scripture! Old Dr. Thomas Fuller once illustrated the folly of such interpretation in a very witty suggestion about the saying of the Apostle Paul: "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath." He warned his hearers to take the Apostle's meaning rather than his words, since, if they understood by it that leave was given to be angry until sundown, a Greenlander would have license to be mad for a quarter of a year.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

In the Old World the darkness of the political horizon thickens. Turkey is a hunted bird. Fluttering with fear, and hopping from branch to branch to elude the aim of the Russian Autocrat, she feels that her case is well nigh desperate. But she must fall. God has decreed it, and it is impossible for human power to prevent it. It is written in the sure word of Prophecy, that the waters of the great river Euphrates shall be dried, and the way prepared for the kings of the east. "Hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?" We have not a vestige of doubt, that the Ottoman Empire will, sooner or later, be among the Kingdoms that were. Things now look as if the crisis were near at hand, though possibly it may be delayed for a time.

That the key of the principal door of the church at Bethlehem should be placed in the hands of a Latin rather than a Greek priest, was viewed by the Czar as a most flagrant infraction of former treaties. Time has shown, however, that, under the stipulation for the custody of the Holy Place, there was lurking a proposition of a more arrogant nature, namely, that the Czar should exercise a special protection over those subjects of the Sultan who professed the religion of the Greek Church—a proposition which has now been brought out in all its offensiveness—thus claiming a dominion over the largest portion of the inhabitants of Turkey in Europe, which, though it be called nothing more than a religious protection, amounts in reality to a political supremacy. At least, the one is certain to lead to the other.

One can hardly help sympathizing with Turkey in this case, she being clearly in the right, and Russia as clearly in the wrong. She is now making the most active preparations for war, and who can help wishing that she may be able to humble the pride of the Autocrat? We fear, however, that the end will be otherwise. The integrity of the Turkish Empire has, for many years, rested upon the guaranties of Great Britain and France, and the moment that any longer continuance of such guaranties becomes doubtful, will be the signal for opening the drama, which will show up Turkey's ruin as one of the prominent acts.

But what is the state of things now? France urges the Turks to refuse to Russia the required concessions, and declares that the armed occupation of the Danubian paincipalities by the Russians, now threatened, shall be deemed sufficient cause for war. She therefore sends her fleet to the Dardanelles. But England—what is she about? Her present position looks very much like a connivance at the encroachments of the Czar. Why does she not promptly and strenuously insist upon the provisions of former treaties? If the disclosures made in the foreign correspondence of the New York Tribune are reliable, she is playing a double game. Lords Aberdeen and Clarendon are charged to have known all along, that the affair of the Holy Scpulcher was not the sole object of Prince Menchicoff's embassy to Constantinople. The general question of the Greek Christians of Turkey, and of the position of the Emperor of Russia with respect to them, together with the course about to be adopted by Russia, is said to have been explicitly stated by Baron Brünnow at London, and every point thoroughly canvassed, while Lord Clarendon, with the consent of Lord Aberdeen, in no wise disapproved or discouraged that course. In the mean time, the other ministers were pledging England, when interrogated on the subject, to the maintenance of the integrity and independence of Turkey. When Prince Menchicoff at last threw off the mask at Constantinople, it became necessary for Aberdeen and Clarendon to let the other ministers into the secret. The result was an unpleasant state of things, threatening the dissolution of the Cabinet. At last, Lord Aberdeen so far yields as to consent to the combined action of the English and French fleets in the Dardanelles, but at the same time sends a private dispatch to St. Petersburg, that he would not look upon the occupation of the Danubian Principalities by the Russians as a ground of war.

The prompt interference of Britain to check the aggressive spirit of Russia would, therefore, seem doubtful. Russia has understood this from the beginning, and hence her steady firmness, and growing insolence. Having counted on the connivance of England, she may have gone so far that she cannot now withdraw honorably, and so the war-cloud which has so long lowered in the heavens, may have already burst upon the nations of the Old World. If so, mighty changes are at hand. Let the Christian watch the signs of the times.

"CAN'T TAKE CARE OF THEMSELVES".—A complete refutation of the notion that negroes can not take care of themselves, is furnished by Rev. J. P. Tustin, pastor of the Second Baptist church of Savannah, Georgia, in a letter to the editor of the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer. He states that in that city, containing a total population of 23,764, there are 9,744 negroes, of whom about 3,000 are free, and the remainder slaves. Of the 9,744 negroes, 3,070 (nearly one-third,) are members of Protestant evangelical churches; viz: in three Baptist churches 2,538, in the Methodist African church 452; in the Independent Presbyterian church, and in two Episcopal churches, 40.

"The pastors of the two oldest Baptist churches are free negroes; the pastor of the third Baptist church is a slave. The pastor of the Methodist church is always a white minister regularly appointed by Conference, and is always expected to be a man of a high order of ability. The salaries of the three colored Baptist pastors are raised by voluntary subscriptions and pew rents among their members; and the first African church (under the care of the venerable Andrew Marshall) has generally paid a liberal salary—sometimes reaching toward $800 or $1,000. White people often attend preaching in the black churches, especially Andrew Marshall's, who often has very respectable persons present. The three colored Baptist churches regularly contribute one hundred dollars or over to Foreign Missions in Africa; and seventy-five dollars for missionary labor among the blacks in the bounds of our own Association. But the great bulk of the means furnished by the blacks in connection with their churches, is used for supporting religion among themselves. They have fine houses of worship, the first two lighted with gas, and having all the fixtures for convenience and comfort which are to be found in any churches. The blacks receive no assistance from the whites in their church matters. They are well able to take care of themselves."

Movements in the East—Nunneries—Free Church.

GLASGOW, June 24, 1853.

The most engrossing topic in all circles still is the Russo-Turkish question. By mere politicians, the result on "the balance of power" is the point mainly considered; by Christians, it is farther looked at in its relation to the spread of the gospel; and by those who give God thanks for the light of His "sure word of prophecy," it is received as one of the signs "that the Kingdom of God draweth nigh." With the first we may believe that Russia has been watching her opportunity, and seeking to turn it to account for purposes of territorial acquisition in her onward course towards eastern empire. And with them we may also refuse to place dependence on the good faith of the present Emperor of France in resisting, with Britain, Russia's aggression upon Turkey—should a portion of the spoils be promised him for abandoning that alliance. But we rejoice to know, in the prospect of what lies before us, that God reigneth, and that although a time of trouble, such as never was nor shall be, is to intervene, that yet glory gilds the darkening cloud, and the sun of righteousness shall arise with healing under his wings. With the second class of observers, we can rejoice that even through the "wars and rumors of wars" which the sin of nations and ambition of kings may occasion, a way is prepared for the proclamation of the glad tidings of salvation in regions hitherto impenetrable; and, knowing that Christ has given us assurance that the Gospel of His Kingdom shall be preached in all the world, as a witness unto all nations, before the end of the present age shall come, we can look with the greater complacency on such movements as are now being carried on in China, and as are threatened in the East, as opening channels through which the blessing may flow. And especially have we reason to bless God for so overruling the Russian demands, that the Sultan of Turkey has already issued a firman securing immunities and religious liberty to all Protestants, as well as to Papists and members of the Greek church, more ample than are enjoyed in most professedly Christian States. While those who witness for God in the observance of His Sabbath have been contemplating a mission to "the land of Immanuel," has not He been thus more effectually opening a door through which they may enter on the chosen field. For, with the third class to whom we have referred as interested in "the signs of the times," it may be regarded as certain, that the appointed work will be done, and that it ought to be the concern of each one of us to take care that we withhold not our hand from the appointed work, that so we may not miss our reward. Let us take the encouragements God has given to occupy till Christ come, that, when He that shall come will come, we may receive the acknowledgment and the reward to be then bestowed upon those faithful servants, small and great, who are found so doing. While the potentate of the north invades his neighbor's territories to acquire for an apostate church the keeping of a silver key of entrance to the scene of her superstitious and blasphemous performances, be it our part to avail ourselves of all opportunities of truly making known the savour of Immanuel's name, commending Him to "His brethren," and seeking to win them back to the allegiance they owe to Him who delivered them of old, and who, amid all their wanderings and perversity, has ever been to them a true sanctuary.

"The Recovery of Personal Liberty Bill," the title given to what is better known as the Nunneries' Bill, (although its operation was not designed to have been confined to Romish prisons,) was lost on the second reading in the House of Commons, two nights ago, by a majority of 207 against 178. It was opposed most virulently by the Romish members, in which opposition they were supported by Lord John Russell, very inconsistently, as to us it appears. With regard to the determination shown by the Popish representatives, it may be fairly inferred, perhaps, that there is a consciousness of something that requires concealment, within their Conventual buildings, when there is such anxiety to prevent legal inspection and inquiry as to their inmates. The bolts and the bars of such buildings, indeed, imply that from the first it is contemplated that the vows themselves of the nuns would prove insufficient to retain them there in calm contemplation and delightful meditation. Yet, sad to say, their numbers increase wonderfully in our land. In a Memorial to the Queen on the subject, by the Protestant Alliance, it is stated that there are upwards of 200 Conventual establishments in Great Britain and Ireland!

Mr. Foster, pastor of a Dissenting congregation in Kentish town, it is stated, has left his denomination, and intends establishing a Free Christian Church, the basis of which will be, "the Holy Scriptures, not human creeds, the only standard of human belief; the duty of all men to inquire for themselves." Others, it is added, intend to follow. It is an example, if the basis laid be rightly built upon, that all who truly love the Lord will be glad to see followed extensively. And there is no reason to doubt that the hold which human creeds have too long had in the Christian Church is being greatly relaxed, and liberty being taxed to inquire and believe what God has been pleased to reveal.

STEAMER ARCTIC, ON LAKE MICHIGAN,
July 4, 1853.

Toledo, the point at which our last letter closed, is a good specimen of a Western city. The extent of territory over which it spreads, indicates that land was plenty when it was laid out; its streets will be quite regular and liberal when enough buildings have been erected to define them, and keep teams and foot passengers from going for the most part cross-lots; its walks will be convenient when they are flagged or planked, so as to dispense with the stray boards which here and there stub toes in dry weather and float about in wet. In stores it abounds, some of which are arranged a la New York, and evidently do a large business. Of daily papers it has two or three, which enjoy a very large advertising patronage. At the hotel, we noticed that each traveler, on paying for his supper, was supplied with a newspaper fresh from the press—a custom which indicates a commendable care on the part of the landlord for the higher as well as the lower wants of his guests, and which strikes us as in much better taste than to offer to each a roll of tobacco leaves.

From Toledo or Monroe, the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Railroad takes passengers to Chicago, a distance of 250 miles, in ten hours. It runs through a section of country sparsely settled, in some parts heavily timbered, and not remarkably interesting to the tourist; but as it is the shortest and easiest route to the West, and is amply equipped with good cars and gentlemanly conductors, no fault can reasonably be found with it—on the contrary, it is worthy of much praise.

Chicago, the commercial emporium of Lake Michigan, occupies a site which twenty years ago belonged to the Pottawattomie Indians. Soon after the removal of that tribe, in 1833, enterprising settlers began to build a town, which now has a population of about forty thousand. The city occupies both sides of the river from which it takes its name, and is built on the borders of a slightly elevated prairie. That it is favorably situated for business purposes is evident from its rapid growth; and a brief visit will convince any one that its location is as handsome as it is convenient. The buildings have an appearance of comfort and convenience; the streets are generally broad, many of them are lined with trees, and either lead to the open prairie or afford fine views of the Lake. The Illinois and Michigan Canal connects Chicago with Peru, the head of steamboat navigation on the Illinois River, and has contributed largely to the growth of the city. It is 106 miles long, 60 feet wide, and 6 feet deep—was commenced in 1836, and completed in 1844. The branches of commerce in which Chicago is most extensively engaged are lumber, grain, and cattle. Perhaps we ought to add, as among prominent articles of traffic, building lots, of which we were told that there are already laid out and for sale more than are at present occupied by the city of New York.

From Chicago to Milwaukee, a distance of ninety miles, runs a good line of steamers, leaving each point in the morning, and touching at the principal places on the shore of Lake Michigan, among which are Waukegan, Kenosha, and Racine—places which have grown into importance with surprising rapidity, and are destined to continue their growth. Milwaukee is the largest of the ports on Lake Michigan, and is at present the chief city of Wisconsin. It has a fine location for commerce, being built on both sides of Milwaukee River, at its entrance into the lake. A large part of the produce of Wisconsin here finds a market, and is taken hence by steamboats and other vessels to Detroit and points on Lake Erie, and to the St. Lawrence, Erie, and Welland Canals. Of the commanding location and prosperity of this city, no better proof can be given, or asked, than the fact that its population, which was 1,700 in 1840, was over 20,000 in 1850, and is now probably near 30,000.

From Milwaukee one may take railroad to Milton and Janesville, places now, distant some three hours, instead of two or three days, as they were a few years ago. We passed over this road in company with our friend Joseph Goodrich, one of its Directors, who, speaking of the change which a few years have wrought, said, "Depend upon it, we old settlers, who have been accustomed to haul our wheat sixty miles to market over a bad road, enjoy the present facilities, which enable us to breakfast at Milton, do business all day in Milwaukee, and return home to supper." The road is doing a very satisfactory business, and it is generally believed that the stockholders will be amply repaid in dollars and cents for their investments and risks. They will certainly be repaid in the increase of the value of their lands, and the number of their social and domestic comforts. The perseverance which the Directors have shown, and the commendable manner in which the road is managed, deserve success; and we are glad to see a statement in the papers, that the receipts of the road in June this year show a large gain over the same month last year. In June, '52, only 36 miles of the road were in operation; in June, '53, 70 miles. The business has more than trebled, while the number of miles in operation has been doubled. It is thought that with the extension of the road to Stoughton and Madison, next fall, the monthly receipts will run up to $25,000 or $30,000.

Milton is a sort of head-quarters of Seventh-day Baptists in Wisconsin. Some fifteen years ago Joseph Goodrich and one or two others went in there; and finding the country—not a "howling wilderness," but—a beautiful and rich prairie, with here and there oak openings to furnish timber and give variety to the landscape, they determined to make a settlement. Gradually new comers took up lands around and north of them, until there are now three flourishing churches in that vicinity—Milton, Albion, and Christiana—and three societies about a hundred miles north-west of there—Berlin, Dakota, and Washara. At Big Foot Prairie, also, about thirty miles south-east of Milton, is a church, which has grown up in the region where Dr. Henry Clarke, formerly of Brookfield, first settled. Our stay in the neighborhood of Milton was limited to three days, including one Sabbath; but in that brief period, under the good pilotage of friends whose hospitality is notorious, we were enabled to see many of the locations of our people, which we found to be in most respects very desirable. We shall long remember with pleasure that day on which we were permitted to ride some forty miles over as fine lands as the sun ever shone upon, a large part of which are owned by Sabbath-keepers, many of them old acquaintances.

Time will not permit us in this connection to say all that we think about the West, particularly Wisconsin, as a location for Sabbath-keeping emigrants, and a field for Seventh-day Baptist Missionary efforts. And perhaps it is as well that what we now think upon these points should be more maturely considered before being expressed. Meanwhile we will say, that if any Sabbath-keepers are contemplating a removal to the West, with a view mainly of getting rich and escaping the restraints and burdens which their present church relations impose, we advise them to think twice before they start, and then to decide on staying at home; for such are not needed at the West, and will not in the long run benefit themselves or others. But if any contemplate a removal, with a view of enlarging the field of enterprise for themselves and their families, and at the same time of fully meeting the responsibilities which rest upon them as Christians, by engaging in earnest efforts to mould society after a scriptural model, we bid them God speed—they will find a broad field before them, plenty of work to do, and a glorious reward for their labors. As to missionary efforts, all we will now say is, that we wish some ministering brother, full of zeal and the Holy Ghost, and withal as discreet and far-seeing as he is zealous, felt disposed to consecrate himself to the cause in Wisconsin, and to travel and preach constantly wherever openings invite. Such a man would be welcomed by the ministering brethren already in the field; he would find Sabbath-keepers to supply a nucleus for religious gatherings in almost every part of the State; and at the end of ten years' faithful labor he would see, we doubt not, results which now he would scarcely dare to hope for.

P. S. For the information of friends, and to show the facilities of travel at the West, we will add, that leaving Milton at 5½ o'clock on Second-day morning, we were in Milwaukee at 8½ o'clock, in Chicago at 5 o'clock P. M., at Monroe on Lake Erie next morning, at Buffalo the following morning, at Alfred in time to attend the Anniversary of the School on Fourth-day, and at New York early Fifth-day morning.

OUR NEW SETTLEMENTS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have just returned from a visit to our new societies in the Northern part of Wisconsin. I spent a Sabbath in the settlement on Burr Oak Prairie, in Washara County. There are five families of Sabbath-keepers now there, and several more families were expected soon. They have a very pleasant location, and I think a good soil, where a man can, with a small amount of money, obtain a good home. The lands have just come into market, and can be had at government price. At Dakota, about fifteen miles east of the above-named place, and in the same county, there is another small settlement of Sabbath-keepers. I think there are fourteen families there, and all of them are devoted Christians. I was told that family worship was kept up in every house; Sabbath Meetings and Bible Classes are also maintained. There is a good chance to form a large and flourishing Sabbath-keeping society on lands that are good, and at government price. Several families have lately turned to keep the Sabbath. Those of our people who wish to locate themselves on new lands within the bounds of our society, had better make immediate purchases, as all the choice lots will be very soon taken. If they cannot come immediately, they would do well to forward the money to some judge of lands living in the place where they wish to purchase, and have him purchase for them. At Burr Oak Prairie perhaps Charles White would do well, or a Mr. Drake, whose first name is to me unknown. At Dakota, Hamilton Hull would do well, (he has acted as agent for several men at the East in the purchase of land;) Dea. George Babcock would also do well. Bear it in mind, that what is done should be done quickly. The country is settling very fast, and if you stop to earn one dollar you will lose two in location. Improved farms can be bought to good advantage in our older societies.

FREEDOM ABROAD ON FREEDOM'S DAY.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have for a long time regarded the Fourth of July more disgraced than honored in the manner in which it is usually celebrated in the present day, by the masses, who make license of the occasion for all kinds of revelry and dissipation; but a spectacle has just attracted my attention from my window, which tempts me to make a remark on the subject.

One of the prominent parts of the amusements of the day, time immemorial, in this village, is a fantastical parade or pageant of some ridiculous sort. The sight for to-day was in much better keeping. Two persons, white of course, male and female attire, the female with a child in her arms, disguised in slave costume, were seen mounted on horseback and running their horses down our main street, at utmost speed, as if pursued. It was a good personation of George and Eliza and her child, in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," en route to Canada, and occurred just as the whole street was crowded by hundreds, nay thousands of persons. It was got up and managed throughout in good taste, and withal was so significant, that I wished with all my heart that they could pass through every city and town in the Union on Freedom's Day. It would tell more than a hundred tirades against the inhuman monster who holds the negro in bondage—it goes back of the monster—it strikes at the falsification of the first principle of the Declaration of Independence, and makes American blood blush for its inconsistency.

To have completed the picture, they should have been followed by a heartless Overseer, and a burly Marshal. As it was, it was striking, yea, startling to the beholders—a sad exhibition, a mortifying commentary on the "Liberty and Equality," lauded and pealed to the skies on the return of every national anniversary. It spoke to the hearts of many, who have never given their attention to the infamy of negro oppression, in stronger tones than words could have imparted. The whole was conceived and carried out with such fitting propriety, that they did not pass through the street, a second time, and thereby burlesque their object.

ANNIVERSARY OF ALFRED ACADEMY.

The past year has been one of unexampled prosperity to Alfred Academy and Teachers' Seminary. The usual anniversary exercises, with which the year closed, were in point of spirit and interest quite equal to those of former years.

The examination of classes commenced on Thursday, June 30. Only those who attend these examinations can fully understand the machinery of the Institution, and appreciate the variety and scope of its work. This year the examination showed a steady advance in thoroughness and a higher grade of scholarship, and was considered quite satisfactory.

The exercises of the Music Class were held on Thursday evening, and were accompanied by a Cantata, styled The Flower Queen. This was repeated on the 4th of July, before the Alleganian Lyceum, at its request. The musical exercises throughout showed skill, enthusiasm, and perseverance, on the part of the instructress.

On the evening of July 4th, and the afternoon of the 5th, a public session was held by the Alleganian Lyceum—a society which seems to be managed with ability, and can scarcely fail to benefit its members who are aiming to become good writers and speakers. The addresses were evidently prepared with much care; and we hope to have the pleasure of laying before our readers one or two of them.

The Anniversary proper was held July 6th. The weather was auspicous, being cool and clear. At an early hour multitudes began to assemble, who soon filled the spacious Chapel of the Institution to overflowing. The exercises in the chapel were such as to sustain the interest of a large audience from nine till past one o'clock, more than four hours. Many of the essays of the young ladies showed a good degree of care in preparation. Of the orations by the gentlemen, most were well written and spoken.

We give below the order of exercises, simply adding, that Nos. 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 30, 31, 32, and 33, are members of the graduating class, together with Miss Keziah M. Green of Adams, and Miss Myra C. McAlmont of Hornellsville, who were not present to take part in the exercises:—

1. Salutatory, Mr. J. N. Davidson.
2. Introductory Essay, Miss H. Canfield.
3. The Anglo Saxon, Mr. E. Burdick.
4. The Pacific Railroad, Mr. J. Gilmore.
5. Make the best of the Powers God has given you, Miss H. M. Stillman.
6. The Roses of Life bloom in the Pathway of Truth, Miss E. B. Stelle.
7. The Science of Aptitudes, Mr. J. Black.
8. The Politician the Index of his Country, Mr. E. Wildman.
9. Pass on the Light, Miss S. A. Brown.
10. Keep thy Spirit Pure, Miss S. A. Weed.
11. Yankee Land, Mr. J. W. Shafer.
12. The Sciences, Mr. E. Smith.
13. Perseverance more Potent than Genius, Mr. D. A. Langworthy.
14. Point du jour, Miss A. Campbell.
15. The West, Miss L. T. Pattengill.
16. The True Student, Mr. J. H. Titsworth.
17. Desire of Reputation, Mr. W. L. Dailey.
18. The Mission of Song, Mr. W. H. Lewis.
19. The Uses of Adversity, Mr. A. Whitford.
20. Airy Thoughts, Miss M. A. Dake.
21. We Rise in Glory as We Sink in Pride, Miss H. Sherman.
22. The World is still Deceived by Ornament, Mr. W. A. Engle.
23. America—German, Mr. M. J. Stillman.
24. Is there no Remedy? Mr. L. J. Warden.
25. We are What we Pay the Price for Being, Miss M. D. Wilson.
26. Borrowed Plumes, Miss J. E. Wormley.
27. Practical Idiosyncrasies, Mr. L. R. Burlingame.
28. Agitation Essential to Reform, Mr. W. A. Rogers.
29. Liceat illis liberari—Latin, Mr. J. E. Wilson.
30. Socrates—Greek, Mr. E. M. Dunn.
31. Home, Mr. L. C. Rogers.
32. Closing Essay, Miss S. E. Saunders.
33. Valedictory, Mr. D. L. Freeborn.

ADDRESS TO THE GRADUATING CLASS—Prof. D. D. Picket.

ANNIVERSARY OF UNION ACADEMY.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

The Fourth Anniversary of Union Academy occurred on the 4th inst., with more than usual interest. The exercises were held in a beautiful grove near Shiloh, N. J., and there were in attendance between two and three thousand people. It was truly gratifying to observe the quietness and attention of the audience, and especially so when contrasted with the rowdyism and drunkenness of the usual celebrations on the Fourth of July. We were pleased to mark the influence which the school has exerted upon this community, during its quadrennial existence, in increasing the love of order, a thirst for intellectual pleasures, and a high moral tone in the views and productions of the students.

The Orations and Essays possessed a variety and pointedness of thought, which created and maintained a lively interest through the protracted exercises of the Anniversary.

The elocution of the speakers was free and impressive, aiming to interest others in the importance and teachings of their respective subjects. The students appear to have acquired correct views of the spirit and wants of this age. They plead the necessity of wholesoul energy in the active pursuits and professions of life; of true love, devoted to the good of man, the well-being of our country, and the glory of God; of firm and decided moral courage to meet and overcome the strong and alluring temptations of society, and maintain and promulgate the doctrines of sound morality and practical godliness. The constitutionality and requirements of the Maine Law were advocated with a worthy zeal. The movements of the times indicate the world's progress toward its complete conversion to Christianity. Agriculture was the primitive employment of man, has received the direct sanction of Deity, and is now engaging the attention of learned men, and obtains yearly accessions to its improvements and benefits. The pathway to true eminence consists in doing good, not in desolating the earth; the impressions which others have made upon the memory of man, we can make; the good which great men have conferred upon the world, we can confer; the course, views, and principles of the American patriot were noticed; the fraud, bribery, and high-handed tyranny of the Railroad Monopoly of New Jersey were denounced in severe and scathing terms, and an appeal was made to Jerseymen to assert their rights, and destroy the growing and aggressive monster of chartered power, which rules the legislative and executive departments of this State. The danger of intellectual culture destitute of moral guidance, the supremacy of the Christian religion in educating our faculties for the most perfect morality, were shown in a logical and eloquent argument.

The Essays of the ladies presented a sweetness of expression, and a clearness and correctness of sentiment and feeling, which reflected honor upon their heads as well as their hearts.

The Academic Choir, led by Miss A. M. Crandall, pianist of the Academy, discoursed sweet and lively music.

The Annual Address, delivered by Rev. A. D. Gillette, A. M., of New York, was a sound, comprehensive, and eloquent production. A synopsis of it is prepared by an able hand and will soon be forwarded to you for publication.

SHILOH, N. J., July 7, 1853.

The following was the Order of Exercises, after reading the Scriptures and prayer by Eld. W. B. Gillette:—

1. Energy the Soul of Enterprise, Elhanan W. Davis.
2. Genius of Yankeedom, Francis Veal.
3. The Hour before Eternity, Julia A. Mulford.
4. All would be Fatherless without God, Harriet L. Lawrence.
5. True Love, Fidelio B. Gillette.
6. Moral Courage, Joseph C. Bowen.
7. The Maine Law, Albert R. Jones.
8. Clouds of the Mind, Mary Jane Davis.
9. The Music of the Soul, Sophronia A. Tomlinson.
10. Conversion of the World to Christianity, Lucius R. Swinney.
11. Ignorance in our Country a Crime, Ruth M. Davis.
12. Forest Musings, (Poem,) Charlotte E. Davis.

ANNUAL ADDRESS—Rev. A. D. Gillette, A. M.

13. Agriculture, Thomas H. Tomlinson.
14. The Freed Bird, Priscilla Davis.
15. When shall we meet again? Lucie A. Wheaton.

18. I am Going Home, Nancy McDevitt.
19. The American Woman, Hannah W. Bowen.
20. Incentives of Fame, Horatio M. Tomlinson.
21. Examples of Illustrious Men, Jacob M. Harris.
22. Note the Bright Hours only, Margaret D. Woodruff.
23. Historical Review of our School, Mary B. Davis.
24. Monopolies of New Jersey, Richard L. Howell.
25. Education of our Moral Faculties, George E. Tomlinson.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE is to be opened on Fifth-day, July 14th, with appropriate and imposing ceremonies. The President of the United States, and official dignitaries from all parts of the world, are expected to attend the inauguration. On and after July 15th, the Palace will be open to the public.

MADAME SONTAG, assisted by Signors Salvi and Badiali, and a magnificent orchestra and chorus of seventy performers, is giving a series of Concerts and Operas at Castle Garden, New York, to continue five evenings in a week for two or three weeks.

THE BOARD MEETINGS of our Missionary and Publishing Societies, which were appointed at Plainfield, N. J., to-day, have been adjourned to Fourth-day of next week, at the same place and hours.

EDUCATION IN WISCONSIN.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

As it may be interesting to our people in the East, as well as in the West, to know something of the movements of the North-Western Association in relation to Education, I take the liberty to make, through the Recorder, the following statement.

At the last meeting of the Association an efficient Board of Education was appointed, which was to take into consideration the then almost entire destitution of educational facilities among us, and if possible to hit upon some plan by which a permanant and ample Institution of learning might be established at the most advantageous point within the denomination in this State. Accordingly, the Board, after listening to and critically weighing the inducements that might be presented by the different localities, located the institution at Albion, Dane County. Stock has been taken to the amount of some two thousand five hundred dollars, and a charter has been obtained from the State. The Trustees are now pushing forward the erection of the buildings as fast as practicable, in hope of having them ready for operation late this fall or early in the spring.

One great question now to be considered is, Where are teachers, of the right stamp and qualifications, that can be obtained to stand at the head of the educational movements of our rapidly-increasing denomination in the West?

A. W. COON.

LIBERAL DONATIONS.—A year ago last October, says the Journal of Missions, a man belonging to Massachusetts, about 70 years of age, apparently a hard-working man, and now known to be only in moderate circumstances, presented himself at the Treasurer's desk, saying, he wished to pay some money for foreign missions; and counting out from his well-worn-pocket book $1,400, he remarked, "There, I will pay that amount, and it will save my executors so much trouble." Last October $700 more came from the same source; and again in April, $600,—making in all, $2,700.

Last month, a lady of Connecticut paid $1000 to the Board; and the same day gave $1000 to the Home Missionary Society, and $1000 to the American and Foreign Christian Union.

These examples are not mentioned to confer honor upon the donors; they would be grieved and justly offended at such use of their liberality. Neither are they mentioned to claim for the donors more credit than belongs to many, whom, after all, it may have cost far more self-denial to give an unknown "mite;" they would be the first to disown any such claim. But they are mentioned for the consideration of the large number who might go and do likewise; and who, if they would do likewise, would find it for their exceeding joy in "that day."

GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH.—Like the Dutch Reformed Church in our country (says the Congregational Journal,) the origin and elements of the German Reformed Church are indicated by its name. Its members are almost exclusively Germans and their descendants, while they claim the famous Confession of Augsburg as the exponent of their faith. This Confession was drawn up by Luther and Melancthon, and presented to the Emperor Charles V. and the princes of the empire, in 1530. The German Reformed Church is mainly confined to Pennsylvania, though there are churches scattered over Ohio and a few in the South. In its government it is Presbyterian, and like the Dutch Reformed Church designates its Presbyteries, classes, and its highest ecclesiastical body, the General Synod. The whole number of classes is 23, ministers 303, churches above 1,000, church members 80,000, and Sabbath-Schools from 500 to 600. During the last year 5,000 were admitted to the church. The German Reformed Church has two Theological Seminaries, one at Mercersburg, Pa., and the other at Tiffin, Ohio, and also three colleges, one foreign missionary, thirteen domestic missionaries, and twenty beneficiaries of the Education Society, preparing for the ministry.

According to the Cicinnati Christian Advocate, the first Methodist family settled in Cincinnati, in the year 1804, in whose house the first Methodist sermon was preached, and the first Methodist class formed, consisting of eight persons, of whom four belonged to the family referred to. The first church edifice was completed in 1806. Now there are eighteen Methodist churches in the city, with 3,500 members, or nearly 200 to each church.

The Montreal Witness states that to the Wesleyan Methodist church in Canada, the past year has been one of great prosperity in many respects; that seasons of spiritual refreshing have been numerous, and have resulted in the admission of about 2,500 to the membership of the churches, above all that have been removed by death, expulsion, or in other ways.

There are at present one hundred and eleven evangelical clergymen in California. Of the Methodist church, South, 26; the same, North, 38; Congregationalists, 9; Baptists, 5; NewSchool Presbyterians, 8; Associate Presbyterians, 1; Reformed Dutch, 11; German Reformed, 1; Episcopalians, 6; Cumberland Presbyterians, 4; Old School Presbyterians, 9.

Under the head of "Newton Theological Institution Endowed," the Christian Watchman and Reflector says: We have great pleasure in announcing that the labors of the Trustees, and especially of their indefatigable agent, the Rev. Horace T. Love, have been crowned with success, and that on the first day of July the full sum of $100,000, necessary to bind the subscription, had been subscribed.

The Legislature of New Hampshire have granted a charter for a school at New Hampton, to be under the patronage and control of Free Will Baptists. A fund of $30,000 is to be raised, of which $5,000 has been subscribed by Col. Lewis, an enterprising gentleman in that section—a portion by citizens of New Hampton, and the remainder by the Baptist denomination.

European News.

European advices to June 29th have been received, the substance of which we give below.

A long debate took place in the British House of Commons on the 22d June, on the Bill for the inspection of Nunneries.

The Government of India had been discussed two nights, and resulted in a further adjournment.

The Illustrated London News has a picture of an inkstand presented by a Surrey Congregation to Mrs. H. Beecher Stowe.

A public meeting was held on the 20th at Almack's, London, to aid the Berkley Negro College at Bermuda. The Earl of Shaftesbury and Rev. R. Arde (colored) spoke.

A remarkable statement is current, to the effect that the Emperor of France intends to submit the question of peace or war with Russia to a vote of the people. On the other hand, it was rumored, but not authenticated, that the French Government had a copy of the Russian manifesto ten days since, and in conjunction with England, had recommended the Porte to accede to its terms, in the form of a note instead of a treaty. If this be so, the business is at once settled.

The Moniteur contains a decree of several columns regulating the affairs of the Bonaparte family. The Emperor assumes to be the sole master of the family. His consent is necessary to make a marriage or a divorce of any Bonaparte. No Bonaparte must go further than 75 leagues from home without permission, and the Emperor may punish them by arrest or exile.

Late dates from New Zealand report rich gold discoveries at Coromandel Bay, Auckland and Canterbury; also, copper near Nelson.

The following extraordinary news comes via Constantinople: A letter from Erzeroum, dated June 3, mentions that four calamities had occurred in Persia—inundations and cholera at Teheran, locusts at Ispahan, and a terrible earthquake at Shiraz and Cashan. At the latter place, 12,000 to 15,000 persons were said to have been killed by an earthquake during the night, and the pestilence arose from their unburied corpses. Last accounts from Teheran say the cholera was decreasing. The British had, as a measure of precaution, moved to the hills.

The London News has received from its Singapore correspondent the details of the occurrences connected with the investment and capture of Nankin by the Chinese insurgents: In my former letter was announced the fact of Nankin being invested, and the prevalence of a general opinion that the city would succumb. The rebels succeeded in capturing not only Nankin, but Che-kiang-foo —a city situated at the mouth of the grand canal, at its junction with the Yang-tze-kiang. The arrival of this news caused the utmost consternation at Shanghai, owing to the proximity of the insurgents to the City of Soochong, (distant seventy miles,) the capture of which place would command the whole inland traffic by the river and the canals. It will be remembered that Soochong is the city, the possession of which was deemed of so much importance during our last war, when the British force moved up the river from Woosung. The fall of Nankin took place on the 21st of March. The city remained only a short time in the hands of the insurgents. The Imperial troops having received strong reinforcements, ventured a general engagement under the direction of General Heangyung, at Tan yang, distant 30 miles from Nankin, which resulted in the discomfiture of the rebel army, and their evacuation of Nankin; but as the insurgents or revolutionary party have made up their minds to hold the last mentioned city as the seat of the new dynasty, they will not, in all probability, be long before contesting its possession.

The Daily News, via Singapore, learns that at Shanghae the British residents were greatly alarmed and had enrolled volunteers for self-defense, and had landed guns from the ships. The American residents had also held a meeting, but with much apathy, merely appointing Messrs. Cunningham, Wetmore and Warren a Committee to act if any thing should occur.

The British Agent, Sir George Bonham, was firm in his resolve to preserve neutrality, but had given direct aid to the Chinese Executive.

The armed brig Science, manned by Americans and chartered by the Imperialists, attempted to pass up the river to Nanking, but grounded and became a total wreck.

The Susquehanna frigate also attempted to reach the city, but from want of water had to return. Reports say that the whole American squadron was going to the seat of war. Nothing further of the progress of affairs is known.

Fourth of July Accidents.

Mr. Samuel Terry, of Mystic River, formerly of New London, Conn., and Mrs. Hill, wife of Mr. Cary Hill, also of Mystic River, were drowned in the Mystic River on Monday, by the upsetting of a small boat in which they were taking a sail. Three other persons were in the boat, but were saved. Both of the deceased left families.

At Neponset, Mass., a young lad named Williams fell directly before the railroad engine from a platform, and was instantly killed.

At Hingham, Mass., a number of persons were engaged in discharging a cannon, and Mr. Thomas Blossom and Mr. Eben Whitten were ramming home the charge, when a premature explosion occurred. Both Mr. Blossom's hands were blown off, his jaw broken in two places, and his cheek bone badly injured. It is the opinion of the physicians, that he cannot survive. Mr. Whitten had one hand blown off, but was not otherwise seriously injured.

Mr. Nathaniel Merrill, Jr., a young man about 30 years of age, was killed by the premature discharge of a gun, at Naugatuck, with which a party of men were firing a salute.

At Albany, N. Y., three men were accidentally drowned on the 4th, one of whom had been drinking, and had deliberately walked off a dock in the evening when it was quite dark. Considerable damage was done to two buildings by the use of fireworks.

The usual number of accidents by carelessness in the use of firearms and fireworks are recorded by our exchanges, but they are so numerous that we can only find space for the most serious and fatal.

The Polytechnic College of Pennsylvania.

This institution, recently chartered by the Pennsylvania Legislature, has secured an edifice in Philadelphia, and will soon be in active operation. The Polytechnic College is designed to include in its organization, a College of Mines, of Agriculture, of Arts, and of Manufactures; and to afford those destined for these important branches of industry, a thorough scientific education. The application of Science to the Arts, is daily rendering them more powerful sources of National progress, and demanding increased intelligence in those engaged in their prosecution. The Civil and the Mining Engineer, the Architect, the Manufacturer of Chemicals, of Sugar, and of Glass; those engaged or interested in the productions of the Plough, the Anvil, the Furnace and the Loom; all these have, under the stimulus of modern science, and of modern competition, assumed a new and nobler position; and hence their proper education has become an object of deep public moment, and one closely affecting national prosperity.

The plan of organization will comprise the following departments:

1. Mathematics and Civil Engineering.
2. Mechanical Philosophy, and the principles of Machines.
3. Metallurgy, and Industrial, Agricultural, and Analytical Chemistry.
4. Mining, Engineering, Mineralogy, and Geology.

A well supplied analytical laboratory, sections and models of mines and machinery, a geological and mineralogical cabinet, field operations, and architectural and mechanical drawing, will afford ample facilities for thorough and practical instruction. Students will be enabled to pursue one or more studies for a year, term, or less period, and after examination, will be granted certificates of capacity accordingly. [Tribune.

SUMMARY.

On Saturday, July 2d, as one of the female weavers in the Elliott Mill, Lowell, was combing her hair in the weaving room, it accidentally caught around the shaft, drawing her up by the hair between the shaft and ceiling, and jamming her head against the ceiling. The scalp was torn nearly off. Her thumbs, which were twined in her hair, were also torn off, from the great force with which she was drawn up. The force with which her head struck the ceiling was so great as to throw off the belt, thereby preventing her head from being ground to powder. She was released from her dreadful situation and the scalp was replaced. After some hours of unconsciousness she recovered her senses, and bids fair to recover.

A gentleman writing from Cuthbert, Ga., June 25, relates a tripple murder as follows: "The circumstances attending the death of Mr. Norton were diabolical in the extreme. A negro belonging to Mr. Stewart, the father of Mrs. Norton, soon after the family had retired, entered the house, and with an ax killed Mr. Norton, his little son six years old, and no doubt supposed that he had killed Mrs. Norton, as she had received no less than seven blows on the head with the ax. She is still alive, though unconscious."

We are undoubtedly on the eve of commencing the construction of a railroad thoroughfare to the Pacific. The last Congress ordered the preliminary surveys, and two parties are already in the field. It is supposed to be the intention of Government to have the results reported in time for action at the next session of Congress. The Pacific Railroad will then be the great topic of the session. The country will demand that prompt and ample provision shall be made to put the road through in the shortest time practicable.

A shocking accident occurred on the Conhocton Valley Railroad at Avon Springs, N. Y., about sundown July 1. The gravel train coming in with the laborors ran off the track a little west of the bridge over Genesee River. One man was killed instantly, and four others so badly injured that the physicians say they cannot live but a short time, and several others more or less injured, but not fatally.

Jefferson County, N. Y., is celebrated as the father of Governors; no less than three Governors from this county are now presiding over the destinies of three sovereign States of this confederacy; to wit, Gov. Wood, of Ohio; Gov. Farwell, of Wisconsin, and Gov. Matteson, of Illinois; all men who have worked their own path to the distinguished stations they hold, and who are remembered by their old neighbors and friends with much regard and pride.

The Dayton (Ohio) Gazette says the attorneys employed by John W. Carey in the suit brought by him against the Commissioners of that County, received their fees the other day, amounting to the snug little sum of $10,500, $5,000 of which went to one firm. The case was litigated some three years, involving a large amount of professional labor, and the amount recovered was in the neighborhood of $40,000.

A dispatch dated Philadelphia, Friday, July 8, 1853, say: This morning at 2 o'clock, the freight train which left Wilmington for Philadelphia, ran into Brandywine Creek, on the outskirts of the town. The bridge tender says that he gave the proper signals of the bridge being open, but no attention was paid to them. The locomotive, tender, and two platform cars, fell in, and the engineer, named Girvin, and a fireman, were drowned.

At a late election for city officers in Washington City, the question was presented of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating drinks within the city, provided Congress shall so amend the city charter as to confer that power upon the corporation. The returns show 991 votes for licenses, and 1,963 against; every ward being against, except the seventh and the island, which gave 2 majority for the license.

An enterprise is in progress in this city by an Eastern gentleman, under the auspices of the Peruvian Government, having in view the permanent establishment of a system of navigation on the South American river Amazon,—the largest river on the globe. Messrs. Lawrence and Foulkes are constructing the pioneer steamers, two in number. One is 120 tons, and her consort 80.

The Government has directed two United States steamers and the U. S. sloop-of-war Decatur to proceed to the Fishing Grounds. There is, however, nothing belligerent in this movement. The object is to prevent difficulties and protect the fishermen. The Government hope, by enlightening negotiation, to make amicable adjustment of all difficulties.

By a published correspondence, it appears that Samuel Martin, of Campbell's Station, East Tennessee, was the pioneer of cheap postage, and that for twenty-five years, by means of writing in the public press and sending circulars to influential people, he awakened attention to the subject. These facts are made known in the proceedings of the Pennsylvania Historical Society. Mr. Martin is now endeavoring to reduce the postage on books.

One of the Albany trains on the Hudson River Railroad, coming down on Tuesday night met with a very remarkable incident near Peekskill. A schooner had run close in shore in a cove over which the road is built, and her bowsprit extended over the track. The locomotive struck the bowsprit with full force, breaking it off, and throwing it off the track, without the slightest disarrangement of the train.

Last week there occurred an accident on the Central Railroad at Syracuse. The rear car became detached in consequence of the switch being out of order, and was thrown from the track. The coupling struck on a tie. The door was burst in, and one passenger severely injured. His name was D. H. Burdett. Nobody was killed, but many prodigiously frightened.

We see by a Cincinnati paper, that Dr. Wesley Smead, of the Citizens' Bank, has been giving $5,000 to the Widow's Home—making, in addition to former gifts, a donation of $20,000 to that beneficent enterprise. He also gave, a few days ago, $300 to the Relief Union, $600 to the different Orphan Asylums, and $100 to the Mary and Martha Relief Society.

On Friday evening, 20th ult., seven negroes, owned by Mr. James Potter, of Savannah, Georgia, attempted to cross the Savannah river, to their head quarters, during a heavy thunder storm, when their boat was capsized by a sudden squall, and five of them were drowned. This will take off the profits of the recovery of Sims from Boston, by Mr. P., in 1851.

A little son of Mr. James Kirkland, near Barnwell, S. C., was recently murdered by a slave girl, only 11 or 12 years of age. The girl, who was a house servant, had been chastised by her mistress, and soon after, from a feeling of revenge, beat the child to death with a club.

The Wabash and Erie Canal is at length complete. It has been twenty-one years in progress. The work unites the waters of Lake Erie at Toledo with the Ohio at Evansville. Its whole length is 459 miles, of which 375 miles are in Indiana, and 84 miles in Ohio.

The Attorney-General of New Jersey has proceeded by injunction against the American Exchange Bank at Cape May, for not doing a bona fide business. The State treasurer has given notice that the notes will be redeemed after the 20th inst.

A dispatch dated New Haven, Saturday, July 9, 1853, says, James Coglan, a switch-tender, lost his life this morning by jumping into Mill River to save a child which fell off the railroad bridge. The child was brought out insensible by a Mr. Bassett, but will recover.

Wilbur T. Littlejohn, a young man aged 23, was suddenly crushed by the cars passing under a bridge at Little Valley, N. Y., on the 4th. He was in company with others on a pleasure excursion, and had mounted on top of the cars, by which means he came to a sad and sudden death.

The Committee of Survey of the Newburgh and Syracuse Railroad, and the extension from Newburgh to Hoboken, have completed their services, and obtained a line, said to be of favorable grades, shortening the distance from Syracuse to New York sixty miles.

The carpenters concluded their work on the Astor Library in Lafayette Place three or four days ago, and the building is now complete. It has been erected at a cost of about $90,000;—the cost of shelving having occasioned an excess of expenditure beyond the original limitation, which was $75,000.

The rumored sale of Mount Vernon to a joint stock company, is the subject of universal comment, and may be mentioned in connection with the fact that the grave of James Madison, twice President of the Republic, cannot now be recognized!

The Hartford Times says that the New York and New Haven Railroad Company has paid Mrs. M. W. Dimock, of Mansfield, $5,000, whose husband lost his life at the Norwalk draw. It was all that Mrs. D. claimed, and it was promptly paid.

The examination into the circumstances connected with the Montreal riot continues. It appears probable, that the order to fire was given to the troops by some unknown and irresponsible person, who escaped detection, owing to the crowd and confusion.

It is a new thing under the sun for a steamboat to go to Albany and return in one day, as a regular daily business. The Francis Skiddy has made this innovation, leaving New York daily (except Sundays,) at 7 o'clock A. M., and Albany at 8 o'clock P. M.

Tuesday, the 5th, was celebrated by the colored citizens of Binghamton, N. Y., who are numerous and respectable, in a very enthusiastic and creditable manner, in commemoration of the Emancipation of the Slaves of New York, July 5th 1827.

At Haverstraw, Rockland Co., N. Y., last Sabbath evening, a tornado blew down a large frame house in which about 150 persons lived, killing five of the inmates, fatally wounding three more, and maiming a number of others.

The Utica papers mention the resignation of Wm. B. Welles, Esq., Cashier of the Bank of Utica, to take effect on the 1st of August. Mr. Welles has been connected with that Bank and its branches for nearly 40 years—19 of which he has held the position now resigned.

A terrible fire occurred July 5th, in Oswego, destroying all the city on the east side of the river. Several large flouring mills were burned, and hundreds of people turned out of doors and out of business.

During the exhibition of fireworks at Portland, Me., July 4, the jewelry store of Cushman & Hobbs was broken into and stripped of its contents, of the value of $4,000 to $5,000.

The Connecticut Legislature has pardoned nine of the inmates of the States' Prison.

A Mr. E. W. Digges, of New Orleans, was recently found dead in his bed at Capon Springs. The sum of $30,000 was found in his room.

Hon. Arthur Livermore, formerly Judge of the Superior Court of New Hampshire, died at Plymouth at the age of 87.

MARRIED,

In Milton, Rock Co., Wis., June 19th, by Eld. V. Hull, Mr. JAY HUMPHREY to Miss L. ROBBINS, all of Milton.

At New Market, N. J., by Eld. J. R. Irish, ETHAN L. BURDICK, of Fulton, Wis., to ANN F. RANDOLPH, of New Market, N. J.

In Scott, Cortland Co., N. Y., on the 30th ult., by the Rev. Joseph S. Lord, Mr. WM. H. BABCOCK to Miss SARAH A. BURDICK, both of Scott.

In Brookfield, N. Y., June 27th, by Eld. W. B. Maxson, Mr. JOHN J. PORTER to Miss EMILY ELIZABETH WILCOX, all of Brookfield.

In Plainfield, N. Y., July 4th, by the same, Mr. GEORGE H. ANGELL to Miss JANE ELIZA CLARKE, all of Plainfield.

☞ In a notice, last week, of the marriage of Elias Ayars, the lady's name should have been Smick, and not Smith.

DIED,

In Hornellsville, N. Y., June 25th, 1853, of a lingering disease of many years standing, CYNTHIA, wife of David Satterlee, aged sixty-five years, eleven months, and one day. Sister Satterlee was a daughter of Charles and Patty Saunders, formerly of Rhode Island. In 1787 the family moved to Berlin, N. Y., where at the age of seventeen she united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church. In a few years she moved to Alfred, and was one of sixteen who constituted the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in that place at its organization in 1816. In 1847 she removed her standing to the Hartsville Seventh-day Baptist Church, of which she was a worthy member at the time of her death. Her funeral services took place on the 26th June, when Rev. N. V. Hull preached a very appropriate discourse from Rev. 14: 13. In the death of this sister the community is bereft of a peace-maker, the church of a very devoted member, a large family of children of a Christian counselor and mother, and a husband of a very kind companion. H. P. B.

In Durhamville, Oneida Co., N. Y., July 1st, Doct. WILLETT STILLMAN, in the fifty-fifth year of his age. The deceased was a descendant of New England ancestry. His father, Eld. Willett Stillman, was a native of Westerly, R. I., from which place he removed at an early period to Whitestown, N. Y. It was after his father's settlement in Whitestown, that the deceased was born. The father, desirous that his son might be fitted for professional life, made the necessary provision for his education. He pursued a course of academical instruction in his native town, after which he attended the usual series of medical lectures at Fairfield, N. Y. Having thus prepared himself for public life, he entered upon his professional duties in Durhamville in the autumn of 1828. Much might be said of his skill and fidelity as a physician, and of the high esteem in which he was held by his numerous friends and patrons; but it is unnecessary. The fact that he secured and retained the confidence of the community for a quarter of a century, is the best possible tribute that can be paid to him in his character as a physician. After a most painful illness of five weeks, his spirit took its flight on Friday morning, July 1, 1853. A bereaved wife and two children (a son and daughter) are left to mourn his loss, while the community in which he was so long and favorably known not only deeply sympathize with the afflicted, but feel themselves afflicted with them.

In Adams, N. Y., June 22d, sister HANNAH BABCOCK, daughter of Samuel L. Babcock, aged 21 years. In the death of this young Christian, the church and society, and the family of which she was a member, have sustained a great loss. From the scenes of hilarity and pleasure she will not be missed; but in the prayer circle and sick room her loss will be felt. She died as she lived—a Christian. When living, death had no terror for her—it had lost its sting. In her death, the grave gained no victory—she died in the Lord. Her memory will be cherished long in the heart of the Church and the Sabbath-School, where we bow to this bereavement in sad resignation. J. S.

In Almond, N. Y., July 6th, of consumption, ROWENA R., wife of Lorenzo Maxson, in the 28th year of her age. Sister Maxson some years since sought and found peace in the Saviour; at which time she united with the Presbyterian Church of Almond, under the pastoral care of Rev. Joel Wakeman, of which Church she remained a member at the time of her death. For several years past, however, she has observed the Sabbath of the fourth commandment. She died in the full hope of eternal life. N. V. H.

At Marlboro, N. J., on the 2d inst., Mrs. MARTHA SCUDDER, wife of Eli Scudder, aged 49 years.

At Salem, N. J., on the 2d inst., Miss ELIZABETH PRIER, daughter of Mr. Samuel Prier.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of TITSWORTHS & DUNN, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

A New Volume

OF WOODWORTH'S YOUTH'S CABINET commences with the July number, and of course now is a favorable time for new subscribers. A word to the wise is said to be sufficient, therefore the publisher begs to employ two words just to say that the Cabinet—the most popular illustrated dollar magazine in the Union—is more captivating than ever. The editor, in his Foreign Sketches, is now rambling with the reader among the wonderful ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeii. The Biography of Distinguished Americans is still continued. Try this magazine. You will find it just the thing for your family. Each number contains 48 pages. There are two volumes in a year—one commencing in July, and the other in January. A yearly volume embraces nearly 600 pages, and about 100 Illustrations.

Those who wish to subscribe, can do so at a reduced price, by taking the work in connection with other persons, and remitting the several subscriptions at the same time. Price, for a single copy, $1; 4 copies, $3; 7 copies, $5; and, in the latter case, an extra copy to the one who forms the Club. Payment invariably in advance. Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U. S. and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

Miscellaneous.

Fadeless is a Loving Heart.

Sunny eyes may lose their brightness;
Nimble feet forget their lightness;
Pearly teeth may know decay;
Raven tresses turn to gray;
Cheeks be pale, and eyes be dim,
Faint the voice and weak the limb;
But, though youth and strength depart,
Fadeless is a loving heart.

Like the mountain flower,
Peeping forth in wintry hour,
When the summer's breath is fled,
And the gaudier flowerets dead,
So, when outward charms are gone,
Brighter still doth blossom on,
Despite Time's destroying dart,
The gentle, kindly, loving heart.

Wealth and talents will avail,
When on life's rough sea we sail;
Yet the wealth may melt like snow,
And the wit no longer glow;
But more smooth we'll find the sea,
And our course the fairer be,
If our pilot, when we start,
Be a kindly, loving heart.

Ye in worldly wisdom old,
Ye who bow the knee to gold,
Doth this earth as lovely seem
As it did in life's young dream,
Ere the world had crusted o'er
Feelings good and pure before—
Ere ye sold at mammon's mart
The best yearnings of the heart?

Benevolence and Gratitude—A True Story.

It was a raw, bleak night; the rain was falling fast, while the wind blew in violent gusts. A Portsmouth night-coach stopped at the principal inn of the town to change horses. The cold and wearied travelers alighted for a few minutes to enjoy the comfort of a blazing fire, as well as to take refreshments.

"Will you give a poor fellow a night's shelter in your hay-loft?" asked a weather-beaten sailor, addressing one of the ostlers who was fastening the harness.

"No, not to such as you," answered the man; "you had better make the best of your way off, or you'll get more than you look for, if you prowl about here any longer."

"Perhaps, young man," replied the tar, "you may one day be sent adrift upon the world, without a penny to keep your head above water; and as to honesty, I know better than to take what is not my own, if I have not a shoe to my foot."

"I wouldn't trust you farther than I could see you," said the ostler; "and if you don't be off I'll make you."

Poor Jack was turning away hungry and foot-sore, when he was tapped on the shoulder by a lad who acted as stable-boy. "If you were to go down the road to the first little shop you come to," he said, "widow Smith would, I dare say, let you sleep in her wood-house; she is a good old creature, and is always ready to help any one in distress."

"Thank you, thank you," said the sailor.

These few words caused a revulsion of feeling in the breast of the forlorn stranger; they told him that there still were hearts in which kindness flowed.

John Willis, on coming ashore, had been robbed of his little all, a thing of no uncommon occurrence, and he was now compelled to beg his way to London. He deeply felt the rebuffs he frequently met with. The prevalence of imposition frequently renders it hard for those who are really in need to get help, for their truthfulness is often questioned.

Jack followed the directions given him; but he found the shop closed. He felt that it was an unseasonable hour; still the favorable account he had received of its owner encouraged him to tap gently at the door. His summons was answered by the worthy dame, who, having listened compassionately to his tale of suffering, bade him enter and share her frugal meal. The tar entertained his benevolent hostess with a recital of some of the shipwrecks he had witnessed, and the narrow escapes he had himself had. And she piously directed his mind to the good Providence which had preserved him to the present hour, and the Saviour who had died to redeem him. The repast over, the widow placed some clean dry straw in one corner of a shed attached to her dwelling; and, with a thankful heart, the wearied traveler stretched himself upon it, and slept as soundly as if on a bed of down.

Before continuing his journey in the morning, Jack looked in to thank the good woman for the shelter she had given him; he found, however, a warm meal awaiting him. Having partaken of it, and accepted a few cents to help him on his way, he departed with a hearty benediction from his hostess.

Ten years passed, and the little incident here recorded had long escaped the memory of all save one of the parties concerned. Ten years had wrought many changes in the town and most of its inhabitants; but they had glided gently over the head of widow Smith. The only alteration perceptible in her, was, that her hair had become more silvery, and her form was now slightly bent. She still continued her labors of love; and though her means were very limited, she was looked upon as the friend and neighbor of all who were sick or in want.

One morning a large official-looking letter was put into Mrs. Smith's hand by the postman. Its purpose was to beg her attendance in London on the following day, when the writer said she would receive gratifying intelligence, which it was wished to communicate to herself personally. Much consultation and gossiping ensued. One of her neighbors thought it a hoax, to play the old lady a trick; another said it would be highly imprudent for a woman of her years to take such a journey, especially to trust herself alone in such a wicked place as London; while the third was quite sure that the writer had some evil design. It did appear a formidable undertaking to one who had never strayed ten miles from her native place. The widow's credulity had often been imposed upon, yet she would believe any thing but that any one would intentionally deceive or wrong her. She had great confidence, too, in the protecting providence of God, whom she served in humble dependence on his grace in Christ, and therefore felt no fear in complying with the request in the letter. Wherefore, notwithstanding the ridicule of some, and the remonstrances of others, the good dame started by the first coach which passed through on the morrow, and reached London in time to meet the appointment.

The address given her was at an inn, and on arriving there she was immediately ushered into a private apartment, where two respectable-looking men were waiting to receive her. The widow's surprise was increased when one of them accosted her with the familiar phrase, "How do you do, mother? Don't you remember me, my worthy?" added he, in answer to her half-frightened, inquiring glance. "I am Jack Willis, the sailor you housed and fed ten years ago, when he had neither money nor friends. I am now captain of a merchantman; and this gentleman," turning to his companion, "will, in my name, do the needful to settle an annuity of fifty pounds upon you, as a proof of my gratitude for your kindness, and especially for your good advice, which I hope, by God's mercy, led me to think of Christ, and trust in him for salvation."

The widow, unable to give utterance to the emotions of her swelling heart, burst into tears.

Widow Smith returned to her cottage home, thankful to God for his blessing on her humble efforts to benefit a fellow creature in body and soul, and for his bountiful care for her, and delighted that she had now increased means of usefulness; and never after did she listen to a tale of suffering without thinking of poor Jack Willis. The Late Sultana of Turkey.

The decease of the Sultana Bezur-Aalem, mother of the reigning Sultan of the Ottoman Empire, has lately been announced. A recent letter from Constantinople gives an account of this woman, which has an interest bordering on romance.

The deceased princess was of Christian origin, and in 1811 was kidnapped by Circassian freebooters from a village near Ananour, in Georgia. Her father was a wealthy peasant, and was killed fighting valiantly for the protection of his daughter. The girl, Mariam by name, was embarked at Sotcha, for Trebizonde, and from thence was conducted to Constantinople, and sold for £150 to the celebrated Kosref Pacha, who gave her the romantic name of Bezur-Aalem, (assembly of the world,) and on account of her beauty gave her an education to fit her for the imperial seraglio. She learned to read and write, to play the tamborine, to sing and to dance, and she acquired these accomplishments with astonishing facility. At the age of fourteen she was presented by the Pacha to Heibetullah Sultana, Sultan Mahmoud's eldest sister, with whom she remained until she attained the age of seventeen, when, on account of her capacity and beauty, she was given to Sultan Mahmoud, who at once acknowledged her as one of his wives. She had but one son, the present sovereign, Abdul-Medjid, but she always maintained a superiority over all the other women, and was the preferred favorite. The monotonous life of the harem is easily imagined. It is a focus of intrigue and jealousy, and the princess had no occasion to display the talent and benevolence that have since rendered her so popular.

When in June 1839, Sultan Mahmoud died, and his eldest son, Abdul-Medjid, at the age of sixteen, buckled the sword of Osman, the Princess Bezur-Aalem became valide sultina, and took the reins of the State in hand. Things went on thus for many years. The son consulted his mother for every affair, and the mother's injunctions were religiously obeyed. We must slur over the intrigues of the Sultana with Riza Pacha, they are of too notorious a character; but up to the last week she was engaged in the public business. She was naturally parsimonious, but her acts of benevolence are innumerable. She never forgot her Christian origin, and protected the followers of her former faith on all possible occasions. She was often to be seen incognito at the lokaf (tribunal,) inquiring if justice was done to cases she had decreed, and more than one judge has been dismissed for acts of intolerance. She often visited the poorer quarters of the city, and gave aid to the sick and needy, without making known her quality. The treasury allowed her a monthly stipend of £7727, but she expended double that sum, chiefly in acts of charity. She built and endowed the only Turkish civil hospital in Constantinople, and gave her name to it. She built and endowed the free school on the Lancasterian principle, under the direction of Kemal Effendi. She has also contributed towards the building and repairing of a great many public fountains. The Turkish Steam Company was established through her influence and interest in the concern. The coal mines of Hereke are worked for her account. In fine, most of the enterprising commercial transactions have seen her among the chief shareholders, with a view to encouragement. It is strange that she has not endowed a single mosque or Mussulman institution, and it is universally believed here that she still adhered to her Christian faith. She had repeated inquiries and researches made for the members of her family, but they were ineffectual. It is probable that the civil commotions and wars in the Caucasus have long since annihilated and dispersed her relatives.

Osier Willow—Its Preparation for Market.

The best time for cutting is in the spring, just as the sap begins to run. When wanted for baskets only, they should be cut every spring. After a new bed is planted, the first year's growth will be small, but will increase in number and size the following year, as the stumps grow larger. Where large willows are wanted, for making the frames of cradles, wagon bodies, &c., they should be cut only every second year.

After cutting they should be bound in convenient sized bundles, with some of the small sprouts, and the butt ends set in a wet place, to prevent the bark from tightening before it is convenient to strip or peel them.

The process of stripping off the bark is very simple, and may be performed by a boy ten years old. All children are fond of this work, and often make quite a frolic where there are several employed on as many benches, striving who can peel the greatest number in a given time.

The machine for stripping is also quite simple, being nothing more than two pieces of tough, sound wood, forming two parts of a triangle, opening about one inch at the top, and coming close together at the bottom, like the letter V. Inside of each prong must be inserted a small piece of round iron, or large size wire, leaving about one half of its diameter projecting from the wood; the iron coming close together at the bottom of the crotch. This machine should be firmly fixed in the end of a strong wooden bench, something similar to that used by coopers for shaving hoops. When worked, a bundle of willows, washed from the mud, should lie parallel with the bench, the operator sitting astride of it, and drawing the sprouts through, the bark will strip off; if not, the sprout should be turned and drawn through where the bark adhered.

After stripping, the willow should be spread in a clean dry place until the moisture has evaporated, to prevent mould or mildew, and then put up in bundles of from fifty to eighty pounds, carefully bound at several places with some of the sprouts, to prevent breakage or damage in moving them. Sometimes it is necessary to boil or steam them before stripping, which bleaches them at the same time. It will now be fit for market, and should command from three and a half to four dollars per hundred pounds.

A Fashionable Man.

The United States has a distinguished representative at the High Court of Fashion, in the person of a Mr. Charles Astor Bristed, of New York city. He writes to the Home Journal that he can find in Paris no gloves fit to wear, though he has "not a bad hand," and his glove-bill exceeds $400 per annum. This thing is daguerreotyped as follows by J. Ross Browne:—

"When I first saw him, he was on his way from Florence to Milan, in quest of a pair of pantaloons of a particular style. No man in Europe understood cutting except Pantaletti. There was a set in Pantaletti that made him indispensable. He had tried the Parisian tailors, but they were deficient in the knees. It was his intention to proceed at once from Milan to Leipsic for boots; the Germans were the only people who brought boots to perfection, and decidedly the best were to be had at Leipsic. He expected to be obliged to return to Paris for shirts; there was a set in the collar of the Parisian shirt that suited him. His medicines he always purchased in London; his cigars he was forced to import from Havana; his Latakia tobacco he was compelled to purchase himself in Smyrna, and this was partly the occasion of his present visit. As to wines, it was nonsense to undertake to drink any but the pure Johannisberg—which he generally saw bottled on the Rhine every summer, in order to avoid imposition. His winters he spent in Spain; it was the only country where good cream was to be had; but the coffee was inferior, and he sometimes had to cross the Pyrenees for want of a good cup of coffee. No mode of traveling suited him exactly—in fact, he disliked traveling. Riding he hated because it jolted him; walking, because it tired him; the snow, because it was cold; the sun, because it was warm; Rome, because it was damp; Nice, because it was dry; Athens, because it was dusty. (By the way, I disliked Athens myself, chiefly on that account; Bimby was right there.) But it was impossible for him to live in America again. What could any man of taste do there? No pictures, no ruins, no society, no opera, no classical associations—nothing at all, except business; and all sorts of business he despised. It was a ridiculous as well as a vulgar way of spending life. In fact, the only decent people were the French; a man might contrive to exist a while in Paris. Not that he approved altogether of the French language; it wanted depth and richness; the only language worthy of a man of sense was the Sanscrit. As soon as he had suited himself to boots at Leipsic, he was going to perfect himself in Sanscrit at the University at Berlin; after which he hoped to recover the effects of a hard study by a tour through Bavaria, which was the only country on the face of the earth where the beer was fit to drink."

American Clocks for China.

From Chambers's Journal.

With all their ingenuity and industry, the Chinese appear to employ themselves but little in the art of clock-making; and it may be safely declared that Geneva turns out more time keepers in a year than are produced in the whole of the Celestial Empire. In the large city of Nankin there are not more than forty clock-makers; Su-chew has thirty, and Ning-po not more than seven; while, until recently, the value of the clocks and watches imported into China from Europe, amounted to about half a million dollars yearly. It is said that the number of clocks really manufactured in the country in a twelvemonth does not exceed 1,500—a fact the more remarkable when contrasted with the state of the case in other countries. The watch and clock-makers in London, including those who manufacture portions of the mechanism only, amount to more than 1,000; and, as is well known, the enterprising horologists of New England make and export clocks every year by tens of thousands. These latter, with that keen spirit of trade which characterizes them, have lately been turning their attention to China as a profitable market for their handicraft; and a request was dispatched some time since from the United States Patent Office, to such American citizens as were resident in the flowery land, for any information that might promise to benefit the branch of industry in question.

From one of the replies which this "request" elicited, we gather that the Chinese have always been too deficient in their acquaintance with astronomy and mathematics to construct proper sun-dials; and that their knowledge of these instruments was obtained from Europeans; while hour-glasses are known only as a contrivance "employed in Western countries to measure time." Many Celestial gentlemen make it a sine qua non to carry two watches; among these, specimens of very ancient workmanship are sometimes met with, as rotund as "Nuremberg eggs;" and the wearers are too often anxious to make the pair go well together. The trouble they gave some of the Jesuit Fathers, who were skilled in clock-making, will be found mentioned in the Lettres Edifantes et Curieuses.

A Chinese day comprises twelve periods, each equivalent to two hours, and they are represented by twelve characters on the clock-face, being those used also to designate the months. "The first in the list (meaning Son) is employed at the commencement of every cycle, and to the first of every period of twelve years, and also to the commencement of the civil day—at 11 P. M.—comprehending the period between this and 1 A. M. The month which is signified by this term is not the first of the Chinese year, but singularly enough coincides with January. Each of the twelve hours is divided into eight kih, corresponding to quarter-hours. The diurnal division of time does not appear to have been in use in the time of Confucius, as mention is made in the spring and autumn annals of the ten hours of the day."

¶ The writer whose remarks we quote, recommends his countrymen, in manufacturing clocks for the Chinese, to adopt the clock face commonly used in China, with some improvements, one of which would be to surround the twelve "hoary characters" with a ring of numerals from one to twenty-four, every alternate one of which would be opposite the half hour mark of the inner circle, corresponding with a whole hour of our time, and to continue the use of the four signs which now stand near the center of the face to indicate midnight, dawn, noon, and evening. The pendulum is to vibrate seconds; the minute-hand to make half a revolution at every sixty seconds; and the hour-hand is to go but once round the face in the whole diurnal period. As the result of this arrangement—"At one o'clock P. M., our reckoning, the hour hand will be half way between the large character at the top and the next one to the right; and the minute-hand, having made half a revolution, will point perpendicular downward, and the clock strike one. At the expiration of another of our hours, a whole Chinese hour will have expired, when the former hand will have reached the first large character to the right, and the latter will be directed to the zenith—the clock striking two." The minute-hand is, therefore, to make twelve revolutions in the twenty-four hours.

The clocks are to be constructed with lines and weights, as those with springs are not liked in China; and as a Celestial always likes to see what he is buying, it is suggested that the marks be made as visible as possible, and of good quality, to avoid the loss that would be sure to follow attempts to palm off clocks made to sell merely. To gratify the Chinese wish for utility, the lower part of the door is to contain a looking glass, or, if not this, something very ornamental; and inside, instructions in the native character for fixing, winding, regulating, &c. Such clock as are here described can be manufactured in Connecticut for $2 50 each; and as they can be sold in China at from $5 to $6 each, we may shortly expect to see a great and profitable trade in American time-keepers between the two countries.

Good Advice.

The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia North American tells the following tale:—

About three years ago a young man presented himself to Mr. Corwin for a clerkship. Thrice was he refused, and still he made a fourth effort. His perseverance and spirit of determination awakened a friendly interest in his welfare, and the Secretary advised him in the strongest possible terms to abandon his purpose, and go to the West, if he could do no better outside the Departments.

"My young friend," said he, "go to the North-west, buy one hundred and sixty acres of Government land, or, if you have not the money to purchase, squat on it; get you an axe and mattock, put up a log cabin for your habitation, and raise a little corn and potatoes; keep your conscience clear, and live like a freeman, your own master, with no one to give you orders, and without dependence upon anybody. Do that and you will be honored, respected, influential and rich. But accept a clerkship here and you sink at once all independence; your energies become relaxed, and you are unfitted in a few years for any other and more independent position. I may give you a place to-day, and turn you out again to-morrow; and there's another man over there at the White House who can turn me out, and the people by-and-by can turn him out, and so we go. But if you own an acre of land it is your kingdom, and your cabin is your castle; you are a sovereign, and you will feel it in every throbbing of your pulse, and every day of your life will assure me of your thanks for having thus advised you."

If the thousands who so ardently strive for places under Government, would ponder well these words, and exercise a sound discretion in their application, thus many a young and gallant spirit would be saved from inaction to be useful to the world, and a joy rather than a grief to its possessor.

Preserving Butter.

The farmers of Aberdeen, Scotland, are said to practice the following method for curing butter, which gives it a great superiority over that of their neighbors:—

"Take two quarts of the best common salt, one ounce of sugar, and one of saltpetre; take one ounce of this composition for one pound of butter, work it well in the mass, and close it for use. The butter cured with this mixture appears of a rich, fat, marrowy consistence, and fine color, and acquires a brittle hardness, nor tastes salty." Dr. Anderson says: "I have ate butter cured with this composition that has been kept for three years, and it was as sweet as at first." It must be noted, however, that butter thus cured requires three weeks or a month before it it used. If it is sooner opened the salts are not sufficiently blended with it, and sometimes the coolness of the nitre will be perceived, which totally disappears afterwards. The above is worthy the attention of every dairy woman."

Flowers and Shade Trees.

I seldom see two people envy one another seriously about their flower-beds or shade trees. There is a kind of religious, humanizing, generous effect in loving the beautiful things of nature, that makes us love to see every body have them; while those who stake their respectability on dress or housekeeping, almost universally dislike to see others approach their standard, or rival them in their boasted sphere. This shows that learning to love the beautiful things of nature, beautifies our spirits—while priding ourselves on bright tin pans, well scoured floors, or costly furniture, disfigures our immortal part. The country house that has its shade trees, its shrubbery and flowers, has hallowed memories to win back the hearts of its wanderers, and brighten their gloomiest hours. The woman who fails to have a green spot and shade at her door, fails in one important part of her domestic mission! Her home will not be so endeared to its inmates as it otherwise would be! True, the outside decorations should chiefly belong to man's labor; but very many men will not plant a tree or flower, who could be taught to love them and add to them if some one would begin. So, girls, do not scrub, and cook, and scour, until you have no time left to plant a tree or vine or flower. Little care will suffice them when once planted; and they will do more to beautify and adorn your home than the contents of a tin pedlar's cart, polished every week, until they dazzle you and outshine the neighborhood. [Mrs. Swisshelm.

No one can ever become learned except by his own application. Modes and opportunities of education may facilitate our progress; but on the whole, our attainments must be resolved into our own diligence.

Errors in Printing.—We have often felt mortified, on looking over our paper after it was all struck off, to find a variety of errors more or less important staring us in the face, for which we were sure nobody would forgive us. But we have long since learned to think that nothing is perfect in this world, and console ourselves with this reflection. Our eye having just fallen upon the following, we avail ourselves of this testimony in our favor:—

Some hundred years ago a number of the Professors of the Edinburgh University attempted to publish a work which should be a perfect specimen of typographical accuracy. Every precaution was taken to secure the desired result. Six experienced proof-readers were employed, who devoted hours to the reading of each page, and after it was thought to be perfect, it was pasted up in the hall of the University, with a notification that £50 would be paid to any person who could discover an error. Each page was suffered to remain two weeks in the place where it had been pasted, and the Professors thought that they had attained the object for which they had been striving. When the work was issued, it was discovered that several errors had been committed—one of which was in the first line of the first page!

Ann Arbor.—The Ohio Organ has the following account of the origin of "Ann Arbor," in a letter from that flourishing Michigan city:—

"Thirty years ago, two travelers, with their wives and children, stopped on the spot where Ann Arbor now stands, and concluded to remain there for the night. The weather was hot and sultry; angry clouds swept along the sky and threatened rain, sudden, severe. Not a house was visible, and in this emergency, the two men were compelled to do something to protect their families from the peltings of the pitiless storm. Accordingly they erected a frail structure with the limbs of trees; over the tops of which they spread a few pieces of white canvas, thus making a handsome little arbor: and as their good wives were both called Ann, their husbands appropriately named their little retreat Ann Arbor. Thirty years have since rolled by, and the city of Ann Arbor now marks the spot where the weary travelers sought safety and repose."

Danger of Taking Things for Granted.—It was objected to the system of Copernicus, when first brought forward, that if the earth turned upon its axis, as he represented, a stone dropped from the summit of a tower would not fall at the foot of it, but a great distance to the west; in the same manner as a stone dropped from the mast-head of a ship in full sail does not fall at the foot of the mast, but at the stern of the ship. To this it was answered, that a stone, being a part of the earth, obeys the same laws and moves with it; whereas it is no part of the ship, of which consequently its motion is independent. This solution was admitted by some, and opposed by others; and the controversy went on with spirit; nor was it till one hundred years after the death of Copernicus, that the experiment being tried, it was ascertained that the stone, thus dropped from the head of the mast, does fall at the foot of it. [Archbishop Whately.

Embalming the Dead.—Dr. Holmes, who for seven years was Examining Physician to the Coroner of New York city, has, after a long series of experiments, succeeded in discovering a method of preserving the bodies of the dead. The process is very simple:—An artery in one of the lower limbs is opened, and by it a liquid is injected into the blood. The length of time required for the operation is only fifteen minutes. A reporter of the Tribune has seen the body of a female child which was embalmed upwards of a month ago by Dr. Holmes, and from the appearances of the body it would seem that the experiments of the Doctor had been highly satisfactory. Dr. Holmes intends taking immediate steps to secure a patent for this discovery.

Oyster-Shells for Fruit-Trees.—A correspondent writes to The Germantown Telegraph as follows: One of the most effectual applications I have ever made to fruit-trees in an old and barren situation, is a compost in which finely broken oyster-shells were the principal ingredient. The oyster-shells have generally a large per centage of saline matter attaching to them, in a fresh state, with some animal matter, and much lime. By breaking them and mixing them with wood ashes, and spreading it thickly around old trees, an almost immediate and decided improvement will take place.

Remedy for Cancer.—Col. Ussery, of the parish of De Soto, informs the editor of the Caddo Gazette that he fully tested a remedy for this troublesome disease, recommended to him by a spanish woman, a native of the country. The remedy is this: Take an egg and break it, pour out the white, retaining the yolk in the shell, put in salt and mix with the yolk as long as it will receive it, stir them together until the salve is formed; put a portion of this on a piece of sticking plaster, and apply it to the cancer about twice a day. He has tried the remedy twice in his own family with complete success.

To Destroy Roaches.—Take an earthen bowl, or other high earthen vessel, and fill it half full of molasses and water, made very sweet; place it on the floor near the haunts of the insects, and place one or more thin strips of board or shingle, with one end resting on the vessel and the other on the floor. The insects, attracted by the odor of the mixture, will ascend these strips and plunge into the mixture, where they will speedily drown. Of course precaution should be first taken to exclude every thing else which will attract them, from their reach.

The Farm Lands of the United States are set down in the census as amounting to 118,457,622 acres of improved, and 184,621,348 of unimproved—total 303,078,970 acres, worth in the average $10 per acre. The average value of the Farm Lands of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey and Pensylvania is about $30 per acre (New Jersey highest, Pennsylvania lowest;) while Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont average about $15 per acre. We are rather surprised to see the farm lands of North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee valued in the average $5 per acre.

LIFE:

Its Preparation, Action, and Rewards.

A Valedictory Oration, delivered by E. M. Dunn, on the occasion of the Anniversary of the Alleghanian Lyceum, at Alfred Seminary, July 6, 1853.

A union of effort bespeaks a common interest. What common interest is it, my friends, that has given origin to this literary society, and forms the basis of all similar institutions? It is a consciousness of individual power, and a disposition to develop that power in the most efficient and practical manner. Our instructors may have guided us in the first efforts of thought, may have led on the mind in the incipient stages of erudition, and may have initiated us into the proper methods of a worthy discipline; yet something more than this must be done ere we are prepared for the great contest of life. The mind must be thrown back upon its own resources, and, prompted by the high motive of self-development, must independently pursue the path of intellectual advancement. Upon the consciousness of this necessity our society bases its existence, embracing characters various in talent and disposition, analogous to that great body of actors moving to and fro on the great drama of human life. This being our object, let us consider for a few moments, the preparation, action, and rewards of life.

Within the limits of this critical period are involved not only our own future destinies, but the fate of all those sacred interests which are fast gliding into our hands. The law of our nature has apportioned this season as the formation period of our characters, and whether we will or not, the omnipotent present is stamping its impress upon all coming time. Our purposes may as yet be unsettled; our bark may be playing upon the first waves of the deep, tossed hither and thither by every breeze; but soon her course will be fixed, and her pilot will remain true to the compass. The generation of men now upon the stage of life are watching over us with anxious solicitude, and the shades of departed good men are bending from the skies an earnest glance, to see whither we will turn. The changes of the rolling year have not been inaptly compared to the different periods of human existence. The gentle footsteps of Spring, as it noiselessly bears on its bosom joy and gladness to the wakening earth, kindling in the heart a ray of hope of that bright harvest which is to come, is not unlike the first dawnings of youth, when the pulse beats high, and hope, nurtured by noble impulses, lingers not at a tame mediocrity, but points the soul upward to a glorious eminence in the future as the reward of its present toil. But listen a moment, for here our analogy ends. The seasons come and go, and revolving years complete unceasingly their wonted cycles; but the spring-time of human existence comes but once, and if the flowers that then bloom in the pure heart wither and decay, their fragrance is lost forever. Those thrilling and prophetic aspirations that buoyed up the spirit in youth, and which are the stimulants to great deeds, are gone—a listless indifference possesses the soul, and all human progress is at an end.

But the seed-time is no more important than the soil. That preparation which we would seek is an intellectual discipline which will make us fitted for the stern duties of life. No superficial show of learning will meet the demands that will be made upon us; for a brief contact with the world will expose our deception, leaving us the sad dupes of our own folly. An erroneous opinion exists in the minds of too many, that a liberal education should be the heritage of a few, descending only upon those who, standing on the watch-tower of their country, survey with undimmed eye the world of interests clustering beneath, and wield the destinies of humanity; or upon those who, within the sacred sanctuary, proclaim the oracles of God. Time will not allow us to argue the absurdity of this opinion, yet it may not be unjust to remark, that in this enlightened age, when the sun-light of knowledge is streaming in from every hand—when free thought is the grand fulcrum on which rests our national freedom—when it matters not whether our fathers won immortal honors before the walls of Troy, or lie buried in obscurity—when the spiritual is so fast gaining predominance over the material—the very consciousness of entertaining such an opinion should make a man hang his head with shame.

Happy it is for us, that our efforts bespeak we have no sympathy with such a sentiment. We have asked ourselves, not so much what pursuits we shall hereafter engage in, but how honorably we may represent any of the avocations of life. As the only effectual mode of preparation, we have revered the testimony of scholars of many enlightened ages and centuries, who find in the rigid course bequeathed to us, both classical and scientific, the best means for the development of the mind. And he who attains the highest excellence in this routine of discipline, has good reason to hope for future excellence in his profession. True, he who runs the swiftest in the onset does not always bear away the olive crown; yet, if academical honors be the brightest laurel that will ever deck the brow of the youthful aspirant, it is only because that energetic spirit which brought him so triumphantly to the very threshold, has left him on entering the field of strife.

This assertion, too, is founded upon reason; for those very difficulties that present huge barriers to the humble student, are analogous to those that will meet him in life; and that patience and ambition which buoyed him up while struggling through them all, will be required of him who will afterward take the first rank among his fellow men. No mind is great without great preparation. Success is a boon Providence confers only on condition of incessant toil.

Do you say, that the burning eloquence of Patrick Henry is a refutation of this sentiment?—that the hand of art had no part in moulding his greatness? Watch his intense earnestness, as he followed through the winding mazes of political debate. Behold his bright eye flash as the discussion warms with interest. Does it not mean something? Did it not indicate the workings of the mind within. True, he was indebted to nature for that impassioned love of liberty, that was born with the child; yet the fires of intellect within would never have emitted those scintillations of genius, had not the influence of mental exertion kept them ever glowing. And though he resorted not to the fountains of literature which the researches of others had opened to the world, yet he never passed a moment idle. In his lonely hours, the wrongs of humanity were his constant study. Long had he cherished the principles of freedom, till his soul expanded with the theme; and when the moment of action came, how could he be otherwise than eloquent? And from his life let us deduce the truth, that the mind becomes great by revolving great thoughts.

We all know, that the delights of the soul are infinitely superior to those of the body; and now, while we are just beginning to develop the faculties of the mind, who can tell where all this development will end? It becomes us to test our minds to the utmost, and leave the issue with God.

But from our preparatory condition, let us look out upon the world of action opening before us—a vast amphitheatre of various employments. Before me are candidates for all of these honorable professions. Honorable, did I say? Yea, verily, he who thinks the humblest calling in God's arrangement is beneath his dignity, is unworthy of a place to labor in his beautiful temple. The levers which move the arts of industry and commerce, which fraternize the world, are alike essential to human progress. The humble plowman performs an office in the economy of active life, equally important with the diplomatist or the sage. That omnipotent Destiny which presides unseen over the interests of humanity, has created all of these departments of labor for a wise purpose.

And here let me remark, that our avocations in life should not be regarded as ends, but only as means to a higher object. That object should be the exercise of a spirit of universal philanthrophy. Hence our occupations become only the expression of that grand principle which should be the aim of our life. What characteristic is it, then, that will give the most forcible expression of this spirit? We reply, that it is the attainment of excellence in whatever pursuit may be our choice. The works of creation are all designed with reference to this end. Nothing bears an insignificant office. The tender blade of grass bears an indispensable relation to our comfort. Look out upon yon broad and lofty forests, and reflect that "they have arisen from little seeds, which the birds of the air have scattered, and the hunter has trampled into the soil." Look far out into infinite space, where the human eye can scarcely reach. Strike out from the universe yon feebly glimmering star, and Jupiter would no more travel his accustomed path around the central orb of day. Is there anything insignificant here? Again, in the works of nature, from the lowest to the highest, each is stamped with perfection, manifesting strikingly that great love for humanity which prompted God in his wonderful design. There is nothing wanting in the violet, that lends its fragrance to the breeze. Behold yon crystal fountain, away back among the rocks and caves, where the thirsty traveler may cool his parched tongue; follow down along the stream, as it trickles beneath the rugged mount, and spreads itself to clothe the fields with rich fertility, murmuring the praise of Him who bids it flow; and is it not all as perfect in its adaptation to human wants as the mighty ocean that covers three-fourths of the globe? Survey with microscopic aid the tiny animalcules that sport in the sparkling dew-drop, and has not each a mechanism as wonderful and as perfect as that which sustains the human soul? So from the example of Him who hath made all things well, let us learn that every condition of life, from the chimney sweep to the king on his throne, is a connecting link in the chain that binds together the frame-work of human society. And no one who has a true philanthropic spirit beating within him, will mar the beauty of that social compact, by contenting himself with mediocrity, however humble his calling.

Having spoken of the importance of a thorough preparation, and of the necessity of placing upon your action the mark of the highest excellence, let me ask you what are the rewards you expect to achieve? Our ideal visions of the future were never brighter than they are to day. And methinks, could they be pictured on yonder wall, and the stone be rolled away from the sepulchres of the mighty dead, the spirits of a Webster, a Whitefield, or a Franklin, would rise up, and claim these early dreams as their own. But are our aspirations the result of ambitious fever? Do we hear the shouts of human applause? Do we behold, far up the rugged steeps, the laurels of political distinction, and the ensigns of earthly power? And as they hang waving on the topmost pinnacle, do they beckon us onward? However exalted we may think these promptings are, yet they are debasing to our nature. Man fails to attain that perfect and beautiful development, or to achieve that good for humanity, which he might, were his hopes of reward commensurate with his true destiny. We forget that our philanthropic aims are but the breathings of a divinity within us—that the soul and the thinking part of our nature are emanations from God, and as such their enjoyments and manifestations may be similar to His. We are proud in the thought that we are immortal; we cling to it as the most sacred attribute of our nature; yet we strip our immortality of all its glory, in attaching to our actions motives which at best are but the promptings of a selfish spirit. Beware how you labor to gratify the longings of worldly ambition, for when your head is silvered o'er with age, and the trophies of public favor may be encircling your brow, and the treasures of wealth may glitter in your coffers, your heart will be a cold and desolate thing; those glorious buds of promise, which now only want a little more celestial light to burst them into life, will then be withered and decayed; every sentiment of truth and loveliness, which makes the young heart so truly noble, will then be gone, and amid the hollow caverns of the soul, the spectres of murdered innocence will raise their hideous shrieks, and leave thee no joy nor solace then; and as thy bended form totters on the verge of this life, with the honors fading on thy brow, and leaving your gold and silver behind, the fiends of desperation will drag your spirit down to drink in misery from an ocean of its own element.

Ah, my friends, I would infuse into your souls the breathings of a higher spirit. And as in your every pursuit you strive to attain perfection, I would have you seek a reward kindred to that which God enjoys, when He looks upon every thing He has made, and sees that He has expressed His love for humanity in the most perfect manner. Ah, what a dignity would invest the daily labor of the husbandman, could he realize, that while he is wielding the implements of industry, he is toiling not for houses nor for lands, but that he is writing in indelible characters the expressions of his good will on the great heart of humanity. We all know the joy that bursts upon the soul when we have done a kindness to our neighbor; but to have that happiness constantly accompanying our every effort, is there not sufficient reward here? What though trials and troubles come, yet there is a joy within that lights up the darkest hour. What though the son of Ajax may bear away the prize which we have rightly won, yet he cannot steal away the only jewel we care to cherish, the triumph that glows in the secret places of the soul, when the thought comes over it, that in acting well our part we have conferred a gift on mankind. As our Saviour hung transfixed on Calvary, do you not think a wave of bitter agony broke over the heart of the great Jehovah, as He looked down and beheld His suffering Son? But His serene majesty, who alone knew the depths of that suffering, could bear it all, happy in the thought of the glorious result that was to rest upon mankind. Such is an exhibition of the self-sacrificing spirit that you should carry into the world, and such is the glory that must attend the offering.

From a consideration of this subject, we are naturally led to a contemplation of the scene before us. With this hour ends the near relationship which we have sustained as active members of the Alleghanian Lyceum. But as we go, we are happy in the assurance that our Society will live so long as our "Alma-Mater" may have an existence. To our friends and patrons—you who have watched over us with manifestations of kind encouragement—if our feeble efforts have awakened in you a grateful confidence for our future career, may you never experience that your confidence has been misplaced. We offer you the tribute of our young hearts, trusting that you will guard with the same deep solicitude the interests of those who will more ably fill our places. To our brother and sister associations, of whom in the one we are proud to recognize a worthy rival, and in the other a brighter star ever beaming a cheerful radiance on our pathway—to the one we are indebted for that wholesome stimulus which a generous emulation excites, and to the other for that refining influence which the female character has reflected upon us. Many of us shall no longer bear a part in these manly and vigorous contests; but as we depart from this arena of intellectual exertion, our mutual esteem is not lessened by the conflict. The pleasing friendships which we have formed with you are like flowers that bloom along the banks of the stream of life, whose fragrance will never be forgotten.

Members of the Alleghanian Lyceum, what more can I say to you, than has already been suggested by the theme before us? As our Society is founded in part upon a desire for a closer sympathy than that which exists between the members of the school in general, so to-day we find our hearts are interwoven in stronger bonds of attachment than exist between us and those beyond the borders of our association. We shall feel an interest in each other's welfare long after many of the companions of our youth shall have been forgotten. And as you stand up in distant parts of the land, the bright embodiments of a philanthropic purpose, and as we view the monuments of human reform rising one by one in the march of progress, we will turn a long and earnest glance towards each other, to see what monument our deeds will erect for the honor of the age we represent. And as our foster-parents wend their way down the decline of life, they will turn their glance aback to see whether we are nobly performing our mission, or have wandered away to worship at the shrine of earthly glory. And could they now read upon the tablets of our hearts a declaration of fidelity to the principles of strict integrity, they might well feel proud of their departing children. Animated by a sense of our responsibilities, and in the exercise of an omnipotent will, you cannot direct your ambition too high. I will not say that either of you may become a Homer, a Shakspeare, or a Milton—characters who, in the language of another, "rise up above the level of their fellow men, and stretch out their hands to each other across the interval of ages, transmitting to each succeeding generation the torch of science, poetry, and art;" but though you may not equal these, yet, like the fabled Prometheus, who scaled the Olympian hights, and stole the fire from the celestial gods to bestow on perishing mortals, so you, standing on some exalted position, may catch the holy flame from these master minds, and warm up the hearts of humanity with new life, with grander conceptions of mental and moral excellence. Let not the language of passive indolence say that your aspirations are extravagant, but remember, that there is no point of human excellence so high but that you may actually reach that very point, and with your own hand write underneath those glowing words, I have conquered. Aided by a thorough preparation, and prompted by a desire to benefit the world, there is no power on earth can check your progress, and no power in heaven will. But, more than all, remember, that "the world which stretches out before you is but the vestibule of an immortal life." The thoughts and aspirations moving within you are but the pulsations of a deathless spirit. The deeds that are transacting around you extend their influence beyond the present, and appertains to your relative happiness or misery on the shores of eternity. Then may you so live that when you approach the end of your earthly pilgrimage, and the shadows of futurity mingle with the last rays of departing life, as you look back upon the varied scenes through which you have passed, you may be able to say, "I have fought the good fight," I have won the prize. That this may be your final reward, is the prayer of him who to-day bids you farewell.

NIGHT SONG.

FROM THE GERMAN.

Heart, be still!
In the darkness of thy woe,
Bow thee, silently and low;
Comes to thee whate'er God will:—
Be thou still!

Be thou still!
Vainly all thy words are spoken,
Till the word of God hath broken
Life's dark mysteries—good or ill—
Be thou still!

Sleep thou still!
'Tis thy Father's work of grace.
Wait thou yet before his face,
He thy sure deliverance will,— Keep thou still!

Lord, my God;
By thy grace. O may I be
All-submissive, silently,
To the chastenings of thy rod;—
Lord, my God.

PROVIDENCE PROSPERS HONESTY.

A poor boy, about ten years of age, entered the warehouse of the rich merchant, Samuel Richter, in Dantzic, and asked the book-keeper for alms.

"You will get nothing here," grumbled the man, without raising his head from his book, "be off!"

Weeping bitterly, the boy glided towards the door, at the moment that Herr Richter entered.

"What is the matter here?" he asked, turning to the book-keeper.

"A worthless beggar boy," was the man's answer, and he scarcely looked up from his work.

In the meanwhile, Herr Richter glanced towards the boy, and remarked that, when close to the door, he picked up something from the ground. "Ha! my little lad, what is that you picked up?" he cried. The weeping boy turned, and showed him a needle.

"And what will you do with it?" asked the other.

"My jacket has holes in it," was the answer; "I will sew up the big ones."

Herr Richter was pleased with this reply, and still more with the boy's innocent, handsome face. "But are you not ashamed," he said, in a kind, though serious tone, "you so young and hearty, to beg? Can you not work?"

"Ah, my dear sir," replied the boy, "I do not know how, and I am too little yet to thresh or fell wood. My father died three weeks ago, and my poor mother and little brothers have eaten nothing these two days. Then I ran out in anguish and begged for alms. But alas! a single peasant only gave me yesterday a piece of bread; since then I have not eaten a morsel."

It is quite customary for beggars by trade to contrive tales like this; and this hardens many a heart against the claims of genuine want. But this time, the merchant trusted the boy's honest face. He thrust his hand into his pocket, drew forth a piece of money, and said:

"There is half a dollar; go to the baker's, and with half the money buy bread for yourself, your mother, and your brothers, but bring back the other half to me."

The boy took the money, and ran joyfully away.

"Well," said the surly book-keeper, "he will laugh in his sleeve, and never come back again."

"Who knows?" replied Herr Richter. And, as he spoke, he beheld the boy returning, running quickly, with a large loaf of black bread in one hand, and some money in the other.

"There, good sir!" he cried, almost breathless, "there is the rest of the money." Then, being very hungry, he begged at once for a knife, to cut off a piece of the bread. The book-keeper reached him in silence his pocket-knife.

The lad cut off a slice in great haste, and was about to bite upon it. But suddenly he bethought himself, laid the bread aside, and folding his hands, rehearsed a silent prayer. Then he fell to his meal with a hearty appetite.

The merchant was moved by the boy's unaffected piety. He inquired after his family and home, and learned from his simple narrative, that his father had lived in a village, about four miles distant from Dantzic, where he owned a small house and farm. But his house had been burned to the ground, and much sickness in his family had compelled him to sell his farm. He had then hired himself out to a rich neighbor, but, before three weeks were at an end, he died, broken down by grief and excessive toil. And now, his mother, whom sorrow had thrown upon a bed of sickness, was, with her four young children, suffering the bitterest poverty. He, the eldest, had resolved to seek for assistance, and had gone at first from village to village, then had struck into the high road, and at last, having begged everywhere in vain, had come to Dantzic.

The merchant's heart was touched. He had but one child, and the boy appeared to him as a draft at sight, which Providence had drawn upon him as a test of his gratitude. "Listen, my son!" he began, "have you then really a wish to learn?"

"Oh, yes; I have, indeed!" cried the boy; "I have read the catechism already, and I should know a good deal more, but at home I had always my little brother to carry, for mother was sick in bed."

Herr Richter suddenly formed his resolution. "Well, then," he said, "if you are good, and honest, and industrious, I will take care of you. You shall learn, have meat and drink and clothing, and in time earn something besides. Then you can support your mother and brothers also."

The boy's eyes flashed with joy. But in a moment he cast them to the ground again, and said sadly, "My mother all the while has nothing to eat."

At this instant, as if sent by Providence, an inhabitant of the boy's native village entered Herr Richter's house. This man confirmed the lad's story, and willingly consented to carry the mother tidings of her son Gottlieb, and food, and a small sum of money from the merchant. At the same time, Herr Richter directed his book-keeper to write a letter to the pastor of the village, commending the widow to his care, with an additional sum enclosed for the poor family, and promising further assistance.

As soon as this was done, Herr Richter at once furnished the boy with decent clothes, and at noon led him to his wife, whom he accurately informed of little Gottlieb's story, and of the plans which he had formed for him. The good woman readily promised her best assistance in the latter, and she faithfully kept her word.

During the next four years, Gottlieb attended the schools of the great commercial city; then his faithful foster-father took him into his counting-room, in order to educate him for business. Here, as well as there, at the writing desk, as on the school bench, the ripening youth distinguished himself, not only by his natural capacity, but by the faithful industry with which he exercised it. With all this his heart retained its native innocence. Of his weekly allowance, he sent the half regularly to his mother until she died, after having survived two of his brothers. She had passed the last years of her life, not in wealth it is true, but, by the aid of the noble Richter, and of her faithful son, in a condition above want.

After the death of his beloved mother, there was no dear friend left to Gottlieb in the world, except his benefactor. Out of love [illegible] he became an active, zealous merchant. He began by applying the superfluity of his allowance, which he could now dispose of at his pleasure, to a trade in Hamburg quills. When by care and prudence he had gained about a hundred and twenty dollars, it happened that he found in his native village a considerable quantity of hemp and flax, which was very good, and still to be had at a reasonable price. He asked his foster-father to advance him two hundred dollars, which the latter did with great readiness. And the business prospered so well that, in the third year of his clerkship, Gottlieb had already acquired the sum of five hundred dollars. Without giving up his trade in flax, he now trafficked in linen goods, and the two combined made him, in a couple of years, about a thousand dollars richer.

This happened during the customary five years of clerkship. At the end of this period, Gottlieb continued to serve his benefactor five years more, with industry, skill and fidelity; then he took the place of the book-keeper, who died about this time, and three years afterwards he was taken by Herr Richter as a partner into his business, with a third part of the profits.

But it was not God's will that this pleasant partnership should be of long duration. An insidious disease cast Herr Richter upon a bed of sickness, and kept him for two years confined to his couch. All that love or gratitude could suggest, Gottlieb now did to repay his benefactor's kindness. Redoubling his exertions, he became the soul of the whole business, and still he watched long nights at the old man's bedside, with his grieving wife, until, in the sixty-fifth year of his life, Herr Richter closed his eyes in death.

Before his decease, he placed the hand of his only daughter, a sweet girl of only two-and-twenty years, in that of his foster-son. He had long looked upon them both as his children. They understood him; they loved each other; and in silence, yet affectionately and earnestly, they solemnized their betrothal at the bedside of their dying father.

In the year 1828, ten years after Herr Richter's death, the house of Gottlich Bern, late Samuel Richter, was one of the most respectable in all Dantzic. It owned three large ships, employed in navigating the Baltic and North Seas, and the care of Providence seemed especially to watch over the interests of their worthy owner; for worthy he remained in his prosperity. He honored his mother-in-law like a son, and cherished her declining age with the tenderest affection, until, in her two-and-seventieth year, she died in his arms.

As his own marriage proved childless, he took the eldest son of each of his two remaining brothers, now substantial farmers, into his house, and destined them to be his heirs. But in order to confirm them in their humility, he often showed them the needle, which had proved such a source of blessing to him, and bequeathed it as a perpetual legacy to the eldest son in the family.

It is but a few years since that child of poverty, of honest industry, and of misfortune, passed in peace from this world.

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." Ps. 37: 37. [Translated from the German.

Hon. Wm. Ellsworth, while governor of the State of Connecticut, instructed a Bible class from week to week in one of the Congregational churches of Hartford. He remarked, that when he quitted the gubernatorial chair in the State-house and came before the class to teach them the word of God, he felt that he was not going down, but going up.

THE SCRIPTURES IN PRISON.

Everywhere the work of the Bible is substantially the same; and it cannot be circulated anywhere without producing its appropriate results. We have seen in former cases the effect of the Bible among the French soldiery, where, if anywhere, we might expect resistance to religious influence. The following, drawn from the report of the French and Foreign Bible Society, shows that the divine word is powerful to conquer sin, and pride and ignorance.

Another instance, says the report, will enable you to judge of the instantaneous action of the Bible upon the human soul. Two soldiers were placed in a military prison, for causes very different; one for a very grave offense; the other for a violation of discipline, surely, very rare; in other words, for refusing to perform some part of the service which he considered inconsistent with the law of the gospel.

The former was sentenced for five years, the latter for a much shorter period. Let us now hear the statement of the former of these soldiers:—

"After I had been three years," he said, "in the military prison, they brought in a man named E——, whom I had never seen before. Scarcely was he in the establishment, when he began to spread around the good order of the gospel. My comrades and myself began to mock the new comer. Meantime I was struck in my conscience, at seeing that young man so mild and so patient towards us, who tormented him when he announced to us the good news of salvation.

"One day, as I was weary in my room, the thought occurred to go and see E. He was alone. I am sure he was praying, for I found him standing up near his bed, his head uncovered, although it was cold. I spoke to him. His New Testament lay upon the bed. I took it in my hand, moved by a sort of mechanical curiosity, and I lit upon that verse—Rev. 1: 14—'His head and his hair were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire.' At the same instant, flaming eyes of fire looked to the bottom of my heart, and I was greatly alarmed. I asked my comrade what it could be; and immediately he spoke to me so as to enlighten me upon my sins, and upon the need, by all men, of salvation by grace, through faith in Jesus Christ. He spoke to me also of prayer. My spirit was troubled all day. The evening approached. I dreaded the night as a frightful moment; I could not sleep for fear of waking in hell. I could only, in short, groan, weep, and attempt to pray. It seemed to me as if an immense weight, which had till then crushed my soul, was removed; and I felt myself relieved, and the good Saviour deigned to come and dwell in my heart. Ah! how happy I was to have near me, in that comrade whom I had persecuted, a brother who loved me, and whom now I loved. From morning till evening, we were together; we read the holy word, and the Lord enabled me to make some progress. Soon the story spread through the prison that I was mad; but the more my opponents tempted me, the more, without being moved by it, I clung to Jesus Christ."

The report adds, "We are happy to be able to say, that since his conversion, the author of this statement remains faithful to the cause of the gospel. On his release from the prison, he resumed the service; and he honors, by his conduct and by his language, the beautiful name of Christian, which he is so happy as to bear." [Bible Society Record.

DEATH OF CARDINAL WOLSEY.

On Monday morning, tormented by gloomy forebodings, Wolsey asked what was the time of day. 'Past eight o'clock,' replied Cavendish. 'That cannot be,' said the Cardinal; 'eight o'clock! . . . No! for by eight o'clock you shall lose your master.' At six o'clock on Tuesday, Kingston having come to inquire about his health, Wolsey said to him, 'I shall not live long.' 'Be of good cheer,' rejoined the Governor of the Tower. 'Alas! Master Kingston,' exclaimed the Cardinal, 'if I had served God as diligently as I have served the king, he would not have given me over in my grey hairs!' and then he added, with downcast head, 'This is my just reward!' What a judgment upon his own life!

On the very threshold of eternity, (for he had but a few minutes more to live,) the Cardinal summoned up all his hatred against the Reformation, and made a last effort. The persecution was too slow to please him. 'Master Kingston,' he said, 'attend to my last request; tell the King that I conjure him, in God's name, to destroy the new pernicious sect of Lutherans;' and then, with astonishing presence of mind in this his last hour, Wolsey described the misfortunes which the Hussites had, in his opinion, brought upon Bohemia; and then coming to England, he recalled the times of Wickliffe and Sir John Oldcastle. He grew animated; his dying eyes yet shot forth fiery glances. He trembled lest Henry VIII., unfaithful to the Pope, should hold out his hands to the Reformers. 'Master Kingston,' said he in conclusion, 'the King should know, that if he tolerates heresy, God will take away his power, and we shall then have mischief upon mischief—barrenness, scarcity, and disorder, to the utter destruction of this realm.'

Wolsey was exhausted by the effort. After a momentary silence, he resumed, with a dying voice—'Master Kingston, farewell. My time draweth on fast. Forget not what I have said and charged you withal; for when I am dead, ye shall, peradventure, understand my words better!'

It was with difficulty he uttered these words; his tongue began to falter, his eyes became fixed, his sight failed him. He breathed his last at the same minute the clock struck eight, and the attendants standing around his bed looked at each other in affright. It was the [illegible] of November, 1530. [D'Aubigne.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, July 21, 1853.

A REMINISCENCE OF THE PAST.

An allusion in the Report of the Missionary Operations of the Western Association, published in last week's Recorder, to a promising field of labor on the Drift-wood Branch of the Sennamahoning Creek, Pa., awakens some pleasant recollections, of which we will briefly speak.

In the year 1832, the writer, being then a member of the First-day Baptist denomination, was ordained to the work of the ministry, and sent out to the interior of Pennsylvania to labor as a missionary. His location was at Milesburgh, in Center County, and his circuit extended from that place over a large district of country, embracing furnaces, forges, rolling-mills, and the various departments of the iron trade, as well as much good farming country. Many a delightful season has he had in preaching to congregations composed almost exclusively of colliers, forgemen, ore-diggers, and such like; warm and hearty was the hospitality enjoyed in their houses. Milesburgh itself was, and still is, the seat of extensive and valuable iron works, and the country around was filled with such establishments.

Towards the end of December, according to a previous arrangement, the writer, in company with a brother of the Milesburgh Church, made a visit to the Sennamahoning country. The journey at that time occupied two days, on horse-back. The first night we lodged at a German settlement, soon after we had crossed the West Branch of the Susquehanna. The neighbors were called in, numbering in all about a dozen persons, and we endeavored to preach Christ to them. Among them were three young men lately come from Germany, of good education and polite manners, one of them professing to be a minister of the Lutheran denomination. The people appeared gratified with any thing in the shape of a religious meeting, as it was upwards of two years since they had had any thing of the kind in the neighborhood, and it was thirteen miles from any place of regular preaching.

The second day's journey was almost entirely through a wilderness. After riding about three miles we passed the last habitation, and then for twenty miles was one unbroken forest. Not a human being did we see the whole distance, nor any signs of life, save the deer that now and then bounded through the woods. Toward night-fall we emerged into the valley of the Sennamahoning, which we forded, and after riding a few miles farther, reached the place of our destination—a wild, broken, forlorn looking region, seemingly shut out from all the rest of the world, and exciting a feeling of wonder in the visitor how the inhabitants ever got there. But on this point some of the old residents relieved us a little.

Most of the settlers, if not all, were from the State of New York, and having come into Pennsylvania by the way of the East Branch of the Susquehanna, struck across from Wilkesbarre to the West Branch. They followed up this Branch with their wagons, as far as they could; but the roads running out, and nothing but forest remaining before them, they left many of their goods by the way, packed the remainder in canoes, and so paddled along many days, till their wilderness home was reached. Afterwards, as opportunity served, they returned and collected their goods. One woman told us, that it was full three years before she got all her furniture together. Those were days of hardship, compared with which emigration to our western country is but play.

But in this wild, and comparatively uncultivated region, we enjoyed one of the most refreshing seasons of communion with God's people, that has ever cheered our pilgrimage. A little Baptist Church, consisting of about fifteen members, welcomed our coming. We preached three days and evenings in succession, to about a hundred people, (more or less,) and had good evidence that the power of the Lord was present to save souls. While we preached, some of the good sisters went out into the woods to pray; and God answered their prayers in stirring the assembly to such a degree, that there was scarcely an individual who was not moved by the preaching of the word, and a large number of them gave good evidence that "the gospel came not unto them in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." It was a rich recompense for the toil of the journey we had made, and was one of those soul-comforting seasons which God graciously gives, now and then, to those who labor in his cause. It will never be forgotten.

We felt no particular interest in the Sabbath cause in those days, otherwise we should have sought out the few Sabbath-keepers who were then living in the settlement. Our Journal which we kept, contains the entry: "A number of Sabbatarians live in the neighborhood, and some few Methodists." Besides this, there is no other reference to them. But we have a very distinct recollection of a tall, venerable, dignified looking gentleman, who was introduced to us as Elder Bliss. He took part in the exercises of the meeting, and we accompanied him to his house on one occasion. He was, at that time, (if memory serve,) a widower, and lived with his daughter, whose husband's name we have forgotten. We cannot, at this distance of time, remember whether our conversation turned at all on the Sabbath question, or not. If it did, it made no particular impression on our mind. We simply remember the interview as a very pleasant one. But we are glad to hear that there are a few scattering Sabbatarians still in this region, and we trust that the missionary of the Western Association will be able to encourage and confirm them, and that, through his and their instrumentality, the cause of truth may be promoted, till the entire community shall be imbued with its influence. Why the Sabbath cause has not utterly died out there, is a wonder to us; but the fact that it has not, ought to be taken as evidence that God has something for us to do in that community. We hope the Western Association will understand its duty in this respect. "Lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is left." God will accomplish great things by them yet. Secluded as they have hitherto been, they are destined to be brought into more frequent intercouse with the world. If we mistake not, the route of the Sunbury and Erie Railroad will lie somewhere in that direction. Brethren, look sharply, and let not promising opportunities be lost. T. B. B.

COMMON SCHOOL CELEBRATION.

Whatever tends to elevate man—whatever tends to place the rising generation on higher vantage ground than their fathers occupy, is hailed with joy by every philanthropist and Christian. Our common schools must ever be looked upon as one of the great levers for elevating humanity. They are fountains from which must ever issue streams of knowledge, liberty, and morality. In cherishing these, we cherish the best interests of our country. It was with such sentiments that we received notice of a Common School celebration, to come off at Alfred Academy on the 13th inst., with an invitation to come and see what little folks could do. We went with "expectation on tiptoe," feeling assured, from our past experience, that the "little people" would offer something worth listening to, and we were not disappointed.

The morning was cool and breezy, and withal very exhilarating, like most mornings up here in these mountains. At the appointed hour, teams bearing scholars from the various districts were seen wending their way towards the Academy. Embowered amid branches just plucked from the woods, many of the scholars came, singing some spirited air, and waving flags inscribed with appropriate devices and mottos.

Having assembled within the commodious chapel of the Academy, the exercises were opened with prayer by the Town Superintendent, Eld. Jared Kenyon; after which the various schools passed brief examinations, under the direction of their respective teachers. These exercises embraced not only the elementary branches, but ranged through various departments of study, interspersed here and there with specimens of rhetoric, oratory, and song—mostly juvenile, it is true, but none the less real and satisfactory for all that.

These examinations gave a clew to the daily routine of the labors in the schoolrooms from whence they came. There was also illustrated that old and truthful maxim: "As is the teacher, so will be the school." How readily and perceptibly are the more important traits of the teacher's character and capacity stamped upon the school? Is the teacher devoted to his calling?—the scholars will very soon begin to manifest a like devotedness to their studies. Is the teacher high-souled and enthusiastic?—the scholars will very early manifest like characteristics. Is the teacher vulgar, coarse, boisterous?—the school will labor under like difficulties. Is the teacher possessed of a modest, fine-wrought spirit, with genial heart-sympathies?—a responsive spirit will spring up among the scholars. Whether the teacher is indolent or industrious, ignorant or intellectual, immoral or moral, like tendencies will develop themselves in the school. How important, then, that those officers to whom are committed the general and chief interests of the school, should guard with the utmost vigilance the sacred trust committed to them! How important, also, that no pains or money should be spared in procuring teachers well qualified for their arduous and responsible duties! Where can money be better invested than in the proper development of mind? Improvements in farms, and stock, and canals, and railroads, and navigation, and machinery—indeed, in all material things—sink into insignificance before the improvement of mind.

A short address was given by Prof. D. Ford—his subject, Education True Wealth. He remarked that in selecting for his subject the value of education for the whole people, he had selected an old and well-worn theme; but old themes, like old wines, are generally better than the new—at least old sense is better than new nonsense. He said, that he had three words which he wished to speak—one to the little people, one to trustees, and one to parents. He demonstrated to the little folks, very much to their satisfaction, that wealth was anything which they could use to their advantage. This being the case, money and houses and lands and merchandize, are not the only kinds of riches. Friends are riches—enemies are riches, if we but know how to use them to our advantage. Education is true wealth, because it is truly advantageous to its possessor. He that has a knowledge of the simplest elementary branches of education, is far richer than he who has many houses, and farms, and flocks, and much money, without such knowledge. He who has a good physical, intellectual, and moral education, is truly rich. This kind of wealth is not for the few, but for the whole people.

In his word to teachers, Prof. Ford enforced the idea, that they were treasurers, whose duty it was to bestow spiritual wealth upon their pupils. In doing so, there were two leading ideas that should guide them—1st. To guard against a multiplicity of studies. There is a tendency at the present day, to introduce studies into the Common School which do not properly belong there. The three great pillars on which the Common School rests, are reading, writing, and calculation. These must not be destroyed or undermined in favor of less important studies. The second idea was to guard against being superficial. Be sure that the pupil is thorough in whatever he undertakes. This is far more important than rapidity of progress.

His word to patrons was, Foster your schools. Common Schools are far behind railroads, telegraphs, and the various other improvements of the age. It is very important to give them a start, by paying good prices for good teachers—by visiting the schools, and cheering the teachers in their labors—by celebrations—and by all of those general cooperations and expenditures that will tend to give progress.

The following resolutions were presented, and after having been remarked upon by D. Ford, J. M. Allen, A. A. Lewis, and H. W. Benjamin, were adopted by the audience:—

Resolved, That in view of to day's exhibition of their labors, the Teachers of this town deserve well of their pupils and patrons.

Resolved, That in our opinion, town celebrations and examinations are well calculated to create an interest in public schools, and we therefore recommend holding at least one annually.

Resolved, That our Common Schools need our most strenuous efforts for improvement, since the progress of common school education is far behind the progress of the age in other respects.

Resolved, That our common schools are, and should be regarded as, the ground-work of future greatness.

Sentiment.—May these youthful intellects, whose bright unfolding we have witnessed to-day, prove a future blessing to their parents, the church, and the world.

These were followed by remarks from the Town Superintendent, in which he pointed out some of the difficulties under which our schools are laboring, from the want of books, the want of coöperation on the part of patrons, and urged the need of a reform upon many points. A Committee, consisting of the Town Superintendent, and the Senior Trustee of each district, was appointed to make arrangements for holding a celebration next year. After prayer by J. M. Allen, adjourned to meet on the 29th of June, 1854.

Such celebrations are eminently calculated to inspire the young with enthusiasm and an [illegible] love for learning, to enlist the sympathies of parents in the education of their children, and to give new impetus to our educational movements. **

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday Opening of the Crystal Palace—Table Moving—Test Bill.

GLASGOW, July 1, 1853.

The question as to the Sunday opening of the Crystal Palace is less prominently before the public than formerly. It is now understood, that the building will not be completed earlier than Spring, which diminishes the interest of present discussion, the value of which may be lost before it can be applied. Still, petitions, both for and against the opening, are from time to time presented to Parliament. Among these, there was one presented to the House of Lords from a person sufficiently notorious to induce mention of it. This petition was from Robert Owen, the infidel and spirit-rapper, praying that the Palace should be opened on Sunday, excepting during divine service—and was presented to the House with a eulogy on its author, by Lord Brougham, who once taught from the Rectorial Chair of the University of Glasgow, that man is irresponsible for his belief.

Spirit-rapping has now given place, in great measure, here, to table-moving; and men, instead of being afraid to deal with an unseen power exercising such influence even upon inanimate matter, are striving to find, and pleasing themselves with the idea that they have discovered it as a fact, that, unconsciously, a muscular pressure through the hands is communicated, by which the tables are made to revolve. Faraday has just offered some such explanation; and he ridicules the idea of supernatural agency as having anything to do with the matter. His explanation, however, is palpably defective; for pressure cannot, surely, be the power by which tables are lifted up, and are even made to dance. All the published experience on the subject testifies that an exercise of the will is necessary; while, in the case of certain individuals, that exercise of the will is said to be sufficient of itself to produce the effect, without either hands or person coming into contact at all with the article of furniture which is sought to be acted upon. It was stated some time ago, when this table-moving was much practiced in Rome, that "the Pope himself has seen and verified the fact," as if it were something very remarkable. Now if, as it appears to us, this be the work of the dark apostate spirit, there is nothing so wonderful in its being either seen or done by the head of an apostate church. He is probably less likely to be made aware of its origin than the humblest of the true followers of Christ. Looking also at the melancholy results which have followed the practice, we are the more confirmed in this view. Besides lunacy thereby produced, even the London Sun, a paper which would have mocked at any explanation of evil spirits being the agents, gave a statement from the writer's knowledge of a Miss C. in Surry Place, who, having been so engaged, found that her fingers afterwards remained bent into the palms of her hands, so that they could not even by force be opened, but required soft bandages to prevent the nails cutting into the flesh. After weeks had elapsed, they were worse rather than better.

The Scotch Universities' Test Bill has not yet been read a second time in the House of Commons. The Lord Advocate has, however, intimated his intention of altering the declaration to be taken by the Professors of lay chairs. He proposes that they be required to promise not to teach officially any thing inconsistent with the Scriptures or the Confession of Faith, or opposed to the Established Church. This alteration will not be satisfactory to either friend or foe of the latter body.

THEOLOGICAL CLASS.

For the purpose of meeting certain wants that cannot otherwise be met, at present, among the young men of our denomination who are preparing for the ministry, it has been resolved to establish, by individual effort, a THEOLOGICAL CLASS. The following is the plan, as far as at present matured:—

1. The Class is to be under the immediate care and supervision of Eld. N. V. Hull, at Alfred, Allegany Co., N. Y.

2. The Class will commence operations Thursday, September 1st, 1853.

3. The course of study is to extend through two years, and to embrace the following general outline, viz: Mental Science, including Intellect, Sensibility, and Will; Moral Science; Hebrew; Greek Testament; Exegesis; Natural Theology; Evidences of Christianity; Ecclesiastical History; History of Theological Doctrines; Sacred Rhetoric; Introduction to the Study of the Scriptures; Composition and Debates on the principal points in Theology; Composition and Delivery of Sermons; Pastoral Theology, including Lectures, accompanied with practical exercises in ministerial duties.

4. It is proposed to combine the theoretical and practical as much as possible, a fine opportunity for which is afforded by the pastorate amid which the class is to be located, being one of the largest and most widely extended of the denomination.

5. Although the Class is entirely independent of Alfred Academy, as a class, yet, as a majority of the studies enumerated in the above course are already taught in that Institution, the members of the Class will be permitted to pursue those studies in the Seminary.

6. Tuition free.

EXPLANATION.—The undersigned has consented to engage in the effort proposed above, not only from a sense of duty, but at the suggestion of others in whose judgment he confides. He also desires it to be expressly understood, that it is not intended by this movement to forestall the denomination in their proposed efforts to establish a Theological Seminary, but only to meet present demands and that this enterprise will be most freely and cheerfully yielded into the hands of the denomination, whenever they are willing to assume the responsibility. N. V. HULL.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The Inauguration of the Crystal Palace took place on Fifth-day last, July 14th, and was attended by some fifteen thousand persons, including the President of the United States, several members of the Cabinet and of Congress, Officers of the Army and Navy, Governors of various States, Foreign and Home Commissioners, Foreign Ministers, the Common Council of New York, Members of the Press, holders of season tickets, &c. The Opening Prayer was offered by Bishop Wainwright; the Introductory Address was delivered by Theodore Sedgwick, President of the Crystal Palace Association; and the concluding Address by Franklin Pierce, President of the United States. The exercises throughout were interspersed with vocal and instrumental music of the highest order and in great abundance. The occasion was one of extreme interest, and will long be remembered with pleasure by those who participated in it. We give below the remarks of President Pierce, and may hereafter give the address of Mr. Sedgwick, to which they were in reply.

Remarks of President Pierce.

SIR: I return you, on behalf of those of my constitutional advisers who are with me, and on my own account, my warm and cordial thanks for the reception you have been pleased to extend to us. I have come, Sir, to testify the interest I feel in, and the respect I entertain for, this great Industrial Exhibition—designed and calculated to promote all that belongs to the interest of our country. You, Sir, and the gentlemen who have been and are associated with you, have imposed upon all of us a deep debt of gratitude for your energy and perseverance in this great enterprise. Whatever the shortcomings of which you have spoken may be, I can only remark, that they do not appear here; and so far as I have been able to perceive, they are lost in your complete and transcendant success. [Loud and continued applause.] Everything around us reminds us that we live in an utilitarian age, when science, instead of being locked up for the admiration of the world, has become tributary to the arts, manufactures, agriculture, and all that goes to promote our universal prosperity. Sir, if you had achieved no other good but that which you have in bringing together in this metropolis citizens from all parts of the Union, you would have fulfilled perhaps, one of the most important of missions—that of strengthening and perpetuating that blessed Union. [Great applause.] But you have done more, and you have nobly alluded to it. Your Exhibition has been the means of bringing here, from all the civilized countries on the face of the globe, men most eminent in all the walks of life; and thus you have done more than could be done in almost any other manner to promote that great object dear to you, dear to me, and dear to my venerable friend near me, (Bishop Wainwright,) peace and good will among men. [Applause.] I have not the voice at this time to address you at any greater length, and conclude by again returning to you my thanks for your generous reception, and tendering my heart's best wishes for the success of your praiseworthy enterprise. [Applause.]

—The Crystal Palace is now open to the public, and will amply repay the expense and trouble of a visit. The edifice is said to be far more beautiful than its original in London, though much inferior in size. It covers about five acres of ground, and will probably hold twenty-five thousand persons without serious inconvenience. The sides are composed of glass supported by iron, and the whole is surmounted by a dome which is truly magnificent—a complete triumph of art. Many of the articles for exhibition are not yet arranged, and two or three weeks will elapse before all will be in perfect order.

THE MINE EXPLORED.

On opening a work, recently purchased, with the above title, I am led to exclaim, in the popular appreciation of the passage in Job: "Oh, that mine adversary would write a book;" for, in this instance, I could confidently add: "Thine own mouth condemneth thee, not I; yea, thine own lips testify against thee." The full title of the book is, The Mine Explored, or Help to Reading the Scriptures." It is made up, principally, of Scriptural references to Scriptural subjects, and is published by the "American Sunday School Union."

We are informed, in an introductory note, that "it was written by the late Benjamin Elliot Nicholls, M. A., of Queen's College Cambridge, (Eng.,) and was originally published by the (London) Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. It has required no material alterations to fit it for the purpose of the present publishers. It has a value for religious teachers of all grades, for Bible Classes, and for advanced members of Sunday Schools, which will not fail to be discerned by the diligent and discriminative reader. It recommends itself to the student of the Holy Scriptures, as affording great facilities to the reading, marking, learning, and inwardly digesting, their precious truths." And further, the reader is advertised that "no books are published by the AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION without the sanction of the Committee of Publication, consisting of fourteen members from the following denominations of Christians, viz., Baptist, Methodist, Congregationalist, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Lutheran, and Reformed Dutch."

With this introduction, that all its contents are certified and endorsed by nearly all the evangelical denominations in the land, and as it purposes to afford "great facilities" to the student of the Scriptures, and as it is not any part of its object to obscure or withhold any matter connected with Scriptural authority for any Scriptural institution—I, therefore, make advantage of their chapter on the "Weekly Sabbath," to show what authority they derive from the Scriptures, and what a specimen these First Day sticklers find in the Scriptural Mine for sanctifying the Rest-Day. Be it as they have made it.

The Weekly Sabbath—Page 161.

When was the Sabbath first appointed to man? (Gen. ii. 2, 3.)

Were the Jews reminded of the duty of its observance before the giving of the Fourth Commandment, and on what occasion? (Ex. xvi. 22—26)

How were the Jews reminded of the antiquity of its institution in the Fourth Commandment? A. By its being spoken of as an ESTABLISHED festival, and by the reference made to God's having hallowed the seventh day, at the creation of the world.

What additional sacrifices were offered on that day, morning and evening? (Num. xxviii. 9, 10.)

Was there any assembly of the people for public worship? (Gen. xxiii. 3.)

Mention some passages, by which it may be shown that it was a spiritual service which was required of them. (Isa. lviii. 13, 14; Ps. xcii., the title of which is remarkable.)

What punishment was threatened for its neglect? (Ex. xxxi. 14.)

Is there any instance of this threat being executed? (Num. xv. 55.)

In enumerating the sins of the Jews, what did their rulers and prophets say in a peculiar manner brought upon them God's displeasure? (Neh. xiii. 18; Ia. xvii. 27; Ezek. xx. 24.)

What account have we of the Lord's observance of the Sabbath? (Mark i. 21; Luke iv. 16, 31; xiii. 10.)

"The restoring and ascertaining the Sabbath was the first point of religion that was settled after the children of Israel came out of Egypt, as being of the greatest moment, and this in relation to the original institution, for the law at Mount Sinai was not then given."

To this, all Seventh-day Baptists can cry, Amen! Amen! The Mine has been explored, and what is found? Not an iota for the First Day of the Week—not an atom for "Lord's Day"—not a mark for the so falsely called "Christian Sabbath." Nay, had there been the most distant Scriptural allusion to a change of the Sabbath, or the slightest authority to maintain man's subterfuges for the substitution, would not these sticklers have given it, if they legitimately could? Their own paucity of proof betrays them. Their own position condemns them. Such a production is a sufficient confutation of their pretensions—such a labor is a sufficient triumph for us. We can afford to pass it round, and ask them to eat their own words. We want no greater triumph. W. M. F.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., July 15th, 1853.

ALFRED ACADEMY.—We have received a Catalogue of the Officers and Students of Alfred Academy and Teachers' Seminary for 1852–3, from which it appears that the number of students in attendanec last year was 460. Of these, 188 were ladies, and 272 gentlemen. The number of resident graduates was 12, graduating class 14, under graduates 434. The Board of Instruction includes eight gentlemen and four ladies. The next term will commence on the third Wednesday in August.

IMMORTALITY—SPIRIT RAPPING.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I wish to propose a question or two to believers in the immortality of the soul.

How can you discountenance the "spirit rappings," without giving Bible proof that they are false? The soul being immortal, how do you know that the dead do not communicate with the living in this way? How do you know that this is not the work of God to introduce the millennium?

If you ask me how I know that the spirit rappers are liars, I answer, the Bible says, "The dead know not any thing." Eccl. 9: 5. But ought you not to give some better testimony than that of "lunatic asylums and distracted churches," before you condemn them, lest you be found fighting against God?

R. F. COTTRELL.

Reply.

"The dead know not any thing;" that is, not any thing that pertains to this life, or "that is done under the sun," as the next verse of the chapter shows to be the meaning. That they are not capable of knowing any thing whatever, is not taught by the passage referred to. The passage, thus interpreted, is a good weapon against the spirit rappers, but makes nothing against the soul's immortality.

Another passage against spirit rappings, and still more to the point, is this: "And besides all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed; so that they which would pass from hence to you, cannot; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence." Luke 16: 26. T. B. B.

SABBATH-KEEPING ADVENTISTS.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In the report of the last session of the Western Association, I notice a statement from the church at Ulysses which is calculated to prejudice the minds of your readers against those advent believers who keep the Sabbath. I cannot answer for any individuals at Ulysses, but I had much rather hear such say that they believe that "children have no souls," than to hear some one else state their belief for them. Not that I wish to impeach the church at Ulysses, for they only say it is "nearly" so.

I wish to say, through your paper, that I am acquainted personally with the leading lecturers who are teaching the Sabbath in connection with the advent—have heard them much for two years or more—and I never heard any one advance any doctrine like the above. I am acquainted with James White, the editor of the Advent Review and Sabbath Herald, published at Rochester, N. Y.—have heard him lecture, and read the paper, and have not discovered that he taught such a heresy. He also publishes a paper called The Youth's Instructor, in which are lessons for very small children. Would he attempt to teach the way of salvation to those that "have no souls?"

You will see, that justice to honest seekers after truth demands that this correction should be given to your readers.

A lover of the truth, R. F. COTTRELL.

MILL GROVE, N. Y., July 8, 1853.

THE MEETING-HOUSE AT ALFRED CENTER.—In our recent visit to Alfred Center, N. Y., we were glad to see that the new meeting-house of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church of Alfred was progressing finely. The frame, which was up, is 52 by 85 feet on the ground. There is to be no gallery. Sixteen feet in front are appropriated to an entry, over which there is to be a room for primary meetings, Bible-classes, &c., and for the transaction of business. The large room will be 52 by 69 feet. The cost of the whole will be not far from four thousand dollars.

THE LIQUOR LAW IN THE LEGISLATURE OF NEW YORK.—There is very little prospect that the Legislature of New York will at this session do anything effectual towards protecting law-abiding and tax-paying citizens against the annoyances and burdens of the rum traffic. On the 17th inst., the Assembly refused, by a vote of 52 to 46, to order the Prohibitory Liquor Bill to a third reading. The session will probably close this week, and there is only a bare possibility that something may be done.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.—A Catalogue of De Ruyter Institute for the year ending June 28, 1853, is before us. The number of students during last year was 181, of whom 96 were ladies, and 86 gentlemen. The next term commences on the 31st of August. For the names of instructors, terms, and other information, see circular in advertising column.

ORDINATION.—Bro. D. E. Maxson was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry, July 7th, 1853, at the church in Hartsville. An appropriate sermon was preached by T. E. Babcock, from 2 Cor. 5: 20; consecrating prayer by Leman Andrus; charge by James Bailey; hand of fellowship by J. Kenyon. Benediction by the candidate.

THE PRESIDENT of the United States spent last week in an excursion to New York. At all the principal places on the route he was received with demonstrations suited to the occasion and to his office. He returned to Washington at the close of the week.

A London paper says that Her Majesty's commissioners have recommended the erection of 58 new churches in the diocese of London, and that most if not all of them will be commenced as speedily as circumstances will admit.

An immense Roman Catholic Church for Italians is about to be erected in London. Ground for it has been purchased for $37,000, mostly raised by the Church in Italy. This Church is to have confessors to hear confessions in all languages.

The churches of the Sandwich Islands give from $20,000 to $30,000 annually, for the support of the gospel among themselves and elsewhere—one of the results of missions.

General Intelligence.

European News.

The steamship Arabia, with European dates to July 2d, arrived at New York on the 13th.

There is little news by this arrival. What little there is respecting the Turkish difficulty is far from definite. The absence of reliable intelligence is rather remarkable, with the Mediterranean full of steamers, and a telegraph line extending eastward to Trieste.

Mrs. Stowe is said to have received an offer of $10,000, and half the profits, from Messrs. Constable & Co., to write a temperance tale.

Perforated Postage Stamps are about to be issued in England, Government having made a contract with a Mr. Archer to supply them. The stamps are separated from each other by lines of small perforations, rendering them easily detached when required for use. We believe this is an American invention.

Mr. Van Buren and son, accompanied by Mr. Campbell of U. C., visited the Dublin Exhibition on the 28th ult., and were conducted through the building by Professors Harrison, Barker, and other members of the Committee.

Confirming a report previously mentioned, a letter from Smyrna, June 15, states that the City of Shiraz, in Persia, was totally destroyed on the night of May 1.

The steam yacht North Star, Capt. Eldridge, having on board Commodore Vanderbilt and party, arrived at St. Petersburg June 21, after a passage of 6½ days from Southampton.

California News.

The steamship Illinois arrived at New York from Chagres last week, bringing California dates to June 16th, treasure to the amount of nearly $2,000,000, and 569 passengers.

The news by this arrival is not remarkably important. The San Francisco Evening Journal says: "The news from the mines is not very encouraging. The mines are overrun with emigrants. Every branch of industry is very dull."

The Union remarks: "The interior press speaks encouragingly of mining matters. The rivers are, however, uncommonly high, and miners will be unable to thoroughly drain them until very late in the summer. The 'dry diggings' are being rapidly supplied with water by means of canals or ditches; some of these companies are realizing much money from their investments."

The San Francisco Times and Transcript says: "The Golden Gate carries a good account of our agricultural prospects for the present season. The harvest has commenced, and from every part of the State the report is that the grain product will vastly exceed that of 1852. All sorts of field crops are equally good."

Commercially, the intelligence is not favorable to interests abroad. The market is overstocked with many of the chief articles of consumption. Some lately arrived cargoes have been sold at a discount of 10 per cent. from the cost.

Dueling seems to have become almost epidemic in California. Hon. Messrs. Gwin and McCorkle, members of Congress, after exchanging three shots ineffectually, with rifles at 30 paces, were reconciled by the mediation of their seconds. Mr. John Nugent, of The San Francisco Herald, was badly wounded by Alderman Hayes, having suffered a compound fracture of the right arm. Dr. A. B. Crane, formerly of Louisiana, died on the 12th ult., from the effect of a wound received the day previous in a duel with Edward Toby.

The ship Carrier Pigeon, Capt. Doane, from Boston for San Francisco, went ashore on the 6th ult. in a thick fog, on Point New-Year, about thirty miles south of San Francisco. At the time of the accident, it was blowing strong from the north-west. Fifteen minutes after the ship struck there was seven feet water in the hold, and in half an hour the water was above the lower deck. The Carrier Pigeon was a new clipper of 845 tuns burden, built in Bath, Me., in December, 1852, and was owned in Boston by Messrs. Reed & Wade of that city. She cleared on her first voyage on the 28th January. The cargo and ship are probably worth more than $200,000.

We clip the following items from The San Francisco Journal of the 16th ult:

Jose Borello, a Mexican, aged 27 years, was hung at Stockton, in pursuance of a legal sentence, for the murder of H. H. Jones, committed a year ago. He confessed his crime to the Padre, and also that he had belonged to an organized band of robbers. Though bold in the execution of villainy, he was completely unmanned at the gallows, requiring to be supported while the rope was being adjusted about his neck.

A Chinaman, who had stolen $400 at Dry Town, was handed over to his own countrymen, who, after whipping him, under pretext of sending him to San Francisco, took him aside and shot him through the head.

Intemperance in England.

Dr. Bailey, writing from London to his National Era, thus exults over the No License vote of Washington City:

"Thank Heaven for that! Could they witness what I daily see—the legions of gin-shops here, with men, women, and children thronging their doors; women drinking in the open streets—spending the earnings of beggary in rum instead of bread—they would never repent their vote. I have never before been so profoundly impressed with the policy of the Maine Liquor Law; never before felt so deeply grateful to the persevering advocates of Temperance in my own country. Intoxicating liquor, in some form or other, is almost universally used in London. You cannot spend a sociable evening with a friend without the decanter being produced; and if you call at a clergyman's house, you are asked to refresh yourself with a glass of wine. It is useless to attempt any reform among the poorer classes, while this bad habit prevails among respectable and wealthy people. This is a lesson long ago learned in America, but they have yet to learn it in England. They do not recognize the truth, that drinking in high places encourages it in low places; that the common use of intoxicating spirits is in itself an evil, an abuse; that temperate leads to intemperate drinking, and is appealed to in mitigation or excuse of its enormity. Ragged-schools, dormitories for the poor, bath-houses for the working classes—all are doing a good work; but they can really accomplish very little, comparatively, so long as the poor spend their earnings, waste all their substance, and make brutes of themselves, by gin-drinking. The Temperance Movement in England is far behind the times."

Catastrophe last Sabbath.

On Sabbath morning, July 16th, at 2 o'clock, the Hudson River, six miles below Poughkeepsie, was the scene of a sad and fatal catastrophe, which resulted in the death of at least seven persons, and the wounding of many more. The steamboat Empire, while on her downward voyage from Troy, was run into by a sloop, whereby one of her boilers was thrown overboard, probably exploding as it went, and the boat set on fire. The fire was quickly subdued, but the steam and hot water killed seven persons, and severely scalded about a dozen others. Some were driven overboard, mainly through fear, but how many is not known. Some of the officers of the boat say only three or four; but others report fifteen or twenty; the latter number probably too large—the former too small. From the evidence adduced, it would appear that the blame rests alone with the navigators of the sloop. It seems that there was a young man at the helm of the sloop, who swears that he did not know starboard from larboard; and there was a man on the look out who is believed to have been sound asleep, and only awoke when the hot water from the boiler fell upon him.

Four years ago the same boat met with a similar collision, and sank in the river, near Newburgh. On that occasion thirty persons lost their lives. The pilot (now captain) was indicted for manslaughter, but the case has never come before the courts.

A reporter of the New York Tribune, after hearing the evidence before the Coroner's Jury, and the various statements of persons who witnessed the catastrophe, gives the following as a reliable account of the occurrence:—

The Empire left Troy at six o'clock, with (as stated by the Captain,) about 90 passengers, an unusually small amount of freight, among which were some half dozen horses. She had her usual crew. Nothing unusual occurred until when close up to the west shore about a mile and a half above Clinton Point, and six miles below Poughkeepsie, it being about half-past 1 o'clock, A. M.; the wind was rather fresh from the south at the time, and the tide at ebb. The pilot at the wheel, (Mr. Hudson,) discovered a sloop coming towards them. At the time she was first discovered she was about half a mile off. Thinking, of course, there would be no difficulty, he laid his course the usual way to cross over to Clinton Point, and so on down. When the distance had been decreased about one-half, he (the pilot of the E.) thought he saw a disposition on the part of those on board of the sloop to crowd him, and he eased her up a little more to the west shore. Matters remained thus till the space between them was reduced to about 100 yards—when the sloop was luffed up to the wind, and ran square into the course of the Empire. From this moment a collision became inevitable. The sloop struck head on, running her bowsprit into the larboard boiler of the E., either causing it to explode or knocking it overboard instantaneously. The whole of the guard and braces under it were taken out as smoothly as it could be done with a saw. About eight state-rooms on each side, with the whole of the state-rooms and upper decks, were completely carried away, together with the braces described above. Both smoke-pipes came down, steam pipes, chimneys—in fact, all her upper works, in the space before mentioned, (except starboard boiler, suspension frame, and a brace,) giving her the appearance of a pretty general wreck. From all accounts, the scene that followed among the passengers (who had nearly all retired to their berths for the night) and crew is beyond accurate description. The consternation and confusion was intense. The agonizing groans of the wounded and dying—the shrieks of the females and children—the wailing and crying of relatives—the rough, hoarse voices of the officers issuing orders to prevent further destruction of life—all made up a scene most appalling and heartrending in the extreme, and such a one as many were heard to pray they never might witness again.

In the midst of the excitement the steamer was discovered to be on fire, the casing of the starboard boiler having caught from the excessive heat of the furnaces. The force pump and hose were brought in requisition and this source of danger immediately checked.

In the first excitement a number of passengers jumped overboard. The second pilot (Mr. Carpenter) tells us that only four went over, three of which were rescued clinging to the guards, and the other, a fireman, swam on shore. The hands on the sloop state that there were at least twenty persons overboard, (among whom they recognized the cries of at least one woman)—many of whom were most assuredly drowned.

The boat was entirely crippled, and at the mercy of the wind and tide for two hours, till she finally drifted to the east shore, where she now lies, about 500 yards south of Clinton Point, 100 yards from the shore, and six miles below Poughkeepsie.

Revivals in France.—G. de F., a well-known correspondent of the New York Observer, gives an interesting account of a great revival of religion "in the Department of Drome, France, where of 250,000 inhabitants, 50,000 are connected with the Protestant communion, though few of them are pious, in the proper sense of the word. In the village of Montmyrans, there is perhaps not a single house in which the Lord does not reckon some converts; many children have been led to Jesus, and persons of all ages have been brought to the foot of the cross. The Roman Catholics are much amazed at these things. In other villages, also, the same good work is visible, and the children of God elsewhere who have been laboring and praying for such displays of the riches of grace, are encouraged and quickened.

"A remarkable and deeply interesting work, says Rev. Mr. Monod, has been going on among the Roman Catholic medical students in Paris. Once a week a number of them have met at his house for religious exercises, and among them he found some of the most devoted Christians he had ever known. They have formed a Young Men's Christian Association, whose meetings are attended by about thirty young men, and a series of lectures has been delivered, attended by about eighty of the students."

One Villain Caught.—The downward trains of the Albany express line on the Harlem Railroad have encountered for the several evenings past, obstructions placed across the track, near Scarsdale Station, 29 miles from New York. The obstructions consisted of planks or logs laid across the track. Fortunately, however, each time the cow-catcher of the locomotive threw the obstruction from off the track, thus frustrating the wicked design of the fiend who placed it there. On Wednesday evening the Company placed a watchman secreted in the bushes near the spot where the previous obstruction had been made. In this they were successful, as a short time prior to the approach of the express down train, due at 9¾ P. M., a man of decent appearance emerged from the woods, rolled down a large sleeper or log upon the track, and commenced to make it fast by placing stakes firmly in the ground, evidently determined that his diabolical purpose should be successful this time. At this moment the watchman emerged from his hiding place, seized the villain while in the act of making the log fast on the rail, and made him a prisoner. The wretch was conveyed to the jail at White Plains and committed for trial. He is respectably dressed, and declines giving any name, but it is understood to be Charles Andrews. It is supposed his object was to plunder the pockets of the killed and wounded, after the catastrophe which he hoped to produce. [Tribune.

Hard Hits but true to Life.—An exchange says that if subscribers to journals, like church members, in "stopping their paper," were required to produce an editorial certificate before they could subscribe for another, there would be some curious develments—as for example: "We certify that A. B. stopped his paper because the editor refused to allow him six columns for a personal vindication which concerned nobody but himself. We certify that C. D. refuses the paper because the editor did not publish the obituary notice of a relative, which was never sent to him, but which he ought to have detected in some exchange paper. We certify that E. F. wishes to transfer his patronage to another paper, because, having taken this paper six years without paying a cent, he felt insulted by having a bill sent to him by way of reminder. We certify that G. H. in his own opinion, is a poet of the first water; but the editor unfortunately differing from him in his opinion, is regarded by him as wholly unqualified for his office."

SUMMARY.

A novel surgical operation was recently performed in this city by Dr. Dixon. It was for a cancer of eight years standing, involving the whole of the lower lip. The membrane lining the lip being sound, the operation consisted in dissecting off the diseased part and removing it, leaving the membrane in its natural place. Then two incisions were made downward from the corners of the mouth to the chin, and the skin covering the latter, being loosened on each side, was crowded up, and by a few delicate stitches connected with the membrane. The lip is now nearly well, and is perfectly natural and symmetrical; and when entirely healed a slight scar from the cut on each side of the chin will be the only trace of the disease, or of the operation for its removal.

Two men in Illinois, near Lacon, recently came to a terrible death. A companion had stolen a bottle of liquor, as he supposed, which he handed them for a treat. They both drank of it in such haste that its pungency and deadly power were not discovered until too late to avert the evil. It turned out to be nitric acid, diluted in rain water, said to have been procured for the purpose of galvanizing. But a moment elapsed before they fell to the ground, overwhelmed with the most intense and excruciating pain. They rolled and tumbled, and clawed their faces and the earth with both hands, indicating, by the contortions of their bodies and groaning, all that agony which would ensue if they had swallowed red-hot coals. Death soon ensued.

A Madison County paper sates that a Mr. Harrison, of Eaton Village, on Friday, the 1st., inst., was burned to death. A child of Mr. H. being sick, and the fluid in the lamp getting low, Mr. H. (who was watching the child) proceeded to fill the lamp from a can containing some two quarts of camphene, assisted by Mrs. H. who held the lamp, which was burning, in her hand. The flame communicated with the contents of the can, causing a most terrible explosion, bursting out the windows, and otherwise damaging the house, and so severely burning Mr. H. that he lived but a few hours. Mrs. H. was also burned, and now lies in a very critical condition, though hopes are entertained for her recovery.

Two Irishmen, named Foley and Donovan, who had been at work on the Conhocton Railroad, near Pembroke, Genesee County, were shot dead by Officer Farnham, of Pembroke, on Wednesday. The two men, with some twenty-five or thirty others, had been engaged in willfully destroying the property on the Conhocton Road, and had gone off to Richville, on the Canandaigua Road. Mr. Farnham went over to Richville to arrest the chief offender, when he was set upon by the whole gang, with threats of taking his life. One of the men had him by the throat, when, in self-defence, he shot two of them dead.

On the 2d of July last, a man named Joseph L. Smith got upon the train at the Edgeworth Station on the Saugus Branch Railroad, for a ride to Malden Center, and on his fare, which was only five cents, being demanded refused, to pay, and upon several occasions after, on meeting the Conductor of the train, he used insulting language toward him—asking him if a bill had been made out for the amount, &c. This being several times repeated, the Conductor had the said bill made out in the shape of a warrant, on which Smith was taken before Justice Willard of Charlestown, and fined $5 and costs, amounting in all to a little over seventeen dollars.

A lamentable accident occurred at Havana, W. I., on the 10th inst. A horse race was to come off on the Military Parade Ground, just outside the city walls. For the accommodation of the spectators, seats were erected—some of them twenty feet high. Just as the Captain General entered, and the sports were about to commence, a portion of the seats gave way, precipitating some five hundred persons below; about forty or fifty were either killed or wounded, comprising all ages and sexes. The actual loss of life had not been fully ascertained.

Worcester is one of the busiest of New England's manufacturing hives. Its skilled mechanics are constantly turning out something new. One of the latest is a Cotton Picker. It is a machine having an internal organism moved by a clock-spring. Its external form is that of an acute-angled triangle, with two equal sides, nearly four feet long, the third side being about one foot. An endless chain is made to pass over the acute angle, the chain being so made as to seize, at that point, any substance of the nature of cotton, and convey it to the other end of the machine, where it is dropped into a bag. The machine is hung by a strap over the shoulder, and it is made to do the work of ten men in the field.

An infant daughter, 14 months of age, of Mr. Toney Leopler, residing in Stagg-st., Williamsburgh, was recently thrown into convulsions by the continued discharge of firearms in the hands of persons in the adjoining yard, and died a few hours afterward. The parties were notified to cease firing by officers Kiehl and Thompson, but paid no attention to their request. Coroner Dickinson held an inquest upon the body, and the Jury rendered a verdict of "Death by convulsions, caused by the discharge of firearms, and the parties are censurable for not desisting when requested."

There will be a Convention of Editors and Publishers of Western New York in Rochester on Wednesday, the 27th day of July inst., for the purpose of transacting such business as shall be deemed important. A preliminary meeting will be held at the Eagle Hotel, at 11 o'clock A. M., when the place of holding the Convention in the city will be made known, and other preliminary arrrangements will be made. All the Editors and Publishers of Western New York are invited to attend and take part in the proceedings.

The Boston Traveler of July 16th, says the schooner Empire, Capt. Barker, arrived at this port to-day from Darien, Ga. During the voyage all of the crew, consisting of two sailors, a cook and boy, together with the mate, died of Southern fever. The last man died on the 9th inst., since which time Capt. B. has been obliged to navigate the vessel, and bring her into port alone. Capt. Barker himself had been sick, but had recovered. He was for six days alone on the ocean.

Of the large family of Presbyterian churches in the United States, there are eight distinct branches, viz.: the Old School, the New School, the Associate Reformed, the Reformed Presbyterian, the Reformed Dutch, the German Reformed, and the Cumberland; these all hold to a common form of church government, to the parity of ministers, and the order of "ruling elders;" but wide differences exist among them in relation to theological doctrines.

A Farewell Missionary Meeting was held in Spring-st. Church on Wednesday evening, July 13, to take leave of Mr. and Mrs. Barker, who are about to depart for Ahmednuggur, India, where Mr. B. is to be stationed as a Missionary. After the usual singing and prayer, addresses were made in consonance with the occasion. The Missionary was to sail from Boston on Wednesday, July 20, in the ship Arabella.

Judge Humphreyville, a member of the late Ohio Constitutional Convention, and at present Judge of an Ohio Court, has decided the tax law of that State, so far as it refers to Banks, unconstitutional and void, on the ground that the Constitution only authorized the Legislature to tax Banks as other property is taxed, but that this law taxes them much more than other property is taxed.

Mrs. Mary Atwood, the mother of Mrs. Harriet Newell, so well known in missionary annals, died in Boston on Monday last week. Her remains were conveyed to Haverhill for interment by the side of her husband's, who died in 1808. It is understood that Mrs. Newell was buried on Isle of France. The mother was aged 84 years.

Hon. Samuel Appleton, of Boston' died very suddenly at 5 o'clock on Thursday afternoon, July 7. In the morning he was in as good health as usual, but soon began to fail in strength, and gradually sunk, until he expired at the hour named. He was widely known as one of the most upright and public-spirited merchants of the State.

The Choctaw Indians from the South, consisting of twenty-two men, eighteen females, and two little ones, arrived at N. Y. on Tuesday morning, July 12. They are a part of a numerous nation of Indians formerly resident in Southern Mississippi and South-Western Alabama, now occupying the southern part of the Indian territory.

Among the cases before the Police Court, yesterday, says the Boston Traveller, was that of James Collins, his wife Margaret, and his son John, the latter only fourteen years of age, for drunkenness. The boy, when arrested, was dead drunk. He was fined $2 and costs, and committed in default of payment. His parents were sent to the House of Industry for six months.

The number of deaths in New York, as stated in the City Inspector's Report for last week, was 564, which is an increase of 26 on the previous week. Of these, 45 were caused by consumption; 84 by cholera infantum; 53 by convulsions; 41 by diarrhea; 36 by dysentery; 14 by debility; 28 by marasmus; and 16 by inflammation of the bowels.

The following fragment of conversion was overheard, the other day, on board a steamboat: "I met Lord Ellesmere and his party at Niagara, the other day. I knew the ladies were persons of distinction the moment I saw them, because they wore no jewelry, nor any other ornament whatever!"

The Church Herald has been furnished with a letter, written by a member of the Episcopal Church in North Carolina to Bishop Green, which states that Mrs Ives will return home with her brother, Dr. Hobart, he having received notice from the Pope, that Dr. Ives will be ordained a priest, and could no longer be considered her husband.

In the Massachusetts Convention, the report of the Committee, that it is inexpedient to act on the petitions in favor of the right of women to vote on the acceptance of the Constitution, and that the word male be stricken from the Constiution, was accepted by a large majority.

In the Municipal Court at Boston, on Friday, Wm. Borrowscale, convicted of an attempt to extort $500 from N. D. V. Taylor, fruit dealer, Merchants'-row, was sentenced to two years at hard labor in the State Prison.

William Paine, Esq., late United States Marshal of Maine, met with a serious accident on the 4th, at his residence in Portland. While on a ladder picking cherries, a rung broke, and he fell to the ground, striking a severe blow on the back of his neck, injuring his spine severely.

A great fire has been raging in the Dismal Swamp, whose intensity and rapid spreading was very much aided by the long drought that has prevailed. Nearly the whole region from the Moccasin track to Elizabeth city was one sheet of flame.

A dispatch dated Madison, Wis., Wednesday, July 13, 1853, says that Judge Hubbell has been acquitted of the charges brought against him. The vote was unanimous in his favor, and the Court adjourned sine die.

About 14 per cent. of English printing is at present wasted on silent or needless letters. The adoption of a phonetic alphabet would save, therefore, 14 per cent. of what is now expended for books, newspapers, and printed documents.

Five persons were buried by the fall of a wall at Charleston, S. C., on the 12th inst. One of them named, John Johnson, was taken out dead, and another, James Meagher, fatally wounded. The others would doubtless recover.

At New Market, N. J., July 14th, by Eld. J. R. Irish, Mr. George S. Larkin, of Westerly, R. I., to Miss Anna S. Titsworth, daughter of Dea. I. D. Titsworth, of New Market, N. J.

In Alfred, N. Y., July 4th, by Eld. J. Kenyon, Mr. Michael Woolever, of South Dansville, N. Y., to Miss Electa A. Green, of Alfred, N. Y.

DIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 7th inst., Mrs. Wealthy Lewis, wife of Dea. Christopher C. Lewis, in the 62d year of her age. Her health had been declining since November last, and on the 1st of June she was taken suddenly worse, since which time she has been gradually sinking under the power of disease. Sister Lewis professed religion and united with the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church of Hopkinton, some twenty years since, and has ever manifested a firm Christian principle, attended by a strong love of the Saviour and her brethren. Her last sickness was of such a nature as to prevent her expressing herself at much length relative to the state of her mind. But what she did say, was decidedly indicative of strong confidence and hope, and firm reliance on Christ for salvation. To those who were acquainted with her life, the fullest satisfaction is felt, that she was one of the people of God, and that she has entered into that rest which remains for them.

In Andover, July 13th, of apoplexy, Mr. George R. Dunton, in the 28th year of his age. The death of this brother was without one moment's warning. He had only time, after being taken, to say, "I am faint—give me some drink;" but before the drink could be given him, he was no more. The immediate cause of his death, perhaps, was walking quickly up a long and rugged ascent, on his way to his field, where he was about to commence his haying. His fast walking occasioned a rush of blood to the head, which produced his death as above stated. It is cause of great joy to reflect that, though he has left a widow and orphan to mourn his loss, he had a few weeks before his death obtained hope of forgiveness of sins through the blood of atonement. In Scio, N. Y., May 27, Laura Ann Randolph, daughter of Albert F. Randolph, in the 16th year of her age.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Titsworths & Dunn, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH, Jr
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes, with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U. S. and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

Information.

The Trustees deem it justice to say, that, having adopted a radical change of policy, by which they relieve the Faculty from all pecuniary responsibility, they design to place the School upon a firm and permanent basis, and give it a character of respectability among the first grade of Academies in our country. Grateful for past favors, they are determined to extend their sphere of usefulness, and thus command a greater degree of respect, and a still more liberal patronage from the public.

Discipline.

It is the policy of our Board to teach young men and young women to govern themselves; while at the same time it is expected that our Faculty will aim, in the most prudent and efficient manner possible, to secure that systematic order in all their exercises, which shall prepare students for the responsible duties of active life. While we cultivate the intellect, it shall be our aim also to develop those nobler faculties of the soul, which shall prepare the young to become useful and influential members of society.

Tien-teh, the Chinese Rebel.

Among the interesting papers relating to the present Revolution in China, is one of more than ordinary ability and research by Dr. Macgowan. He has collected a mass of materials illustrating the history of the Revolution, and the leaders who now direct it, which throw so much light upon the subject, and withal are so entertaining, that our readers will not regret the space we devote to the matter. Tien-teh, who is the acknowledged head of the movement, and already exercises imperial powers over many millions of the Chinese, is a young man now in his 19th year, a pretended descendant of the Prince who overturned the Mongol rule and established the Ming dynasty. His family continued to govern China for upwards of two hundred and fifty years, and with such moderation and justice, as greatly to endear them to the people. They were finally overthrown by the irruption of the fierce Tartars of the North, and those of the Princes who survived the wars which followed, concealed themselves in the southwestern portion of the Empire. Tien-teh is descended from one of these, and appears therefore before the people, not as an unknown adventurer, but as the representative of a dynasty that is still remembered with a warm affection by the Chinese. The extortions of the Tartar Emperor and his swarm of corrupt officials, have prepared the people to welcome any change; but when that change involves the overthrow of a foreign dynasty and the restoration of their native Princes, a national feeling is begotten. Enthusiasm incites the rebel armies, and their treason to the powers that be, becomes patriotism and loyalty to their rightful rulers. Under such auspices Tien-teh has steadily progressed in his conquests, until he has now under his sway not less than 75,000,000 of his countrymen, whom he governs through the medium of a regular organized administration, assisted by Ministers and Generals of great sagacity and ability. Before commencing the last campaign, he issued a Proclamation, in which argument and passion are dexterously employed to bring the people to his support. The document is so excellent an index to his character and his policy, that we give it entire:—

"I hold," says the Prince, "that in exterminating tyrannical oppressors, and in tranquilizing the people, reliance should be placed on the popular will, and that he who can firmly establish the empire should become its prince. The abominable and thievish usurpation from which we suffer has continued upward of two hundred years; exacting the produce from the land, and absorbing the fat of the people, for stowing into that unfathomable ditch [Manchuria.] In sustaining from year to year the forty-eight banners, there is nothing left for ourselves. Moreover, the vices of their covetous officers and base underlings rise up like mountains; making light of the exhaustion and suffering of the people, they merely devise methods for fattening their vile carcases, which encompass us like swarms of locusts. Verily, verily, they would consume the hills and empty the sea; their voracity being like the gnawing of tigers and the gulping of whales. There was everywhere crying and lamentation, for the want of some one to accuse them before Heaven, when I emerged from private life; and having with my own eyes witnessed these base proceedings, I strove to remove these sources of discontent, and to effect a reform in order to comply with the desire of the empire.

"Now, having received the adorable commands of Heaven to expel these contemptible miscreants, I dare not sin by a tardy obedience to these behests. The majestic march of my righteous army is designed to deliver the people as from a flood. I am thankful to have before me the example of Ching-tang, (founder of the Shang dynasty, 1776 B. C.) to whom the Empire reverted; consequently the Empire's indignation is mine, and its hopes are also my hopes. The people have already enabled me to expel the murderous traitors from the whole region of Hupeh, Hunan and Sz-Chuen. These places, relying on the protection of Heaven, have reverted to me, and are in the enjoyment of tranquility. The other provinces of the Middle Land should with more readiness embrace the occasion of forwarding the expectations of the people.

"I hereby order Field-Marshal Su Chang-pang and Commissioner Ching Wan-yuen to proceed speedily on the 8th inst., [November 19, 1852,] with all their forces, against Chi-chau and Su-chan [in Gan-whni on the Yangtsz] and the adjacent cities. Let their prowess elevate the Hah [Chinese] and humble the Banners, [Manchus,] whereby peace will be given to the empire. As for you, who hold offices under the detestable usurpers, you are to understand, that we are firmly resolved to protect the people, and that you must not presume to rely on your authority and oppose me. Ever since we buckled on our armor, we have been scattering and killing all who resist; how, then, can you avoid being broken into splinters? My valorous generals and sagacious statesmen are as formidable as thunder and as rain; their streamers and their banners darken the sun, frighten gods and demons, and by their awe-inspiring deportment subdue all before them. With such merit and ability, what obstacle may not be overcome? You, whether among the civilians or the military, who are inclined to take advantage of this opportunity of complying with Heaven, are assured that the result of this undertaking is by no means uncertain, for the power of my troops is as great as the expansive heaven. China will revert to me as readily as dust driven by a puff of wind. It behooves you, therefore, promptly to discard the Tsing dynasty, seize the spear, and come and acknowledge that of the Han; you will not only thereby secure the safety of your families, but retain your rank. If you stay moping in the dark, disregarding the signs of the times, blushing, shame and remorse will be the consequence. Do not contemn my benevolent desires, nor say hereafter that early intimation was not given. I wish to employ the services of the competent, in accordance with the practice of the sages; those of you who wish to aid the native dynasty should report yourselves to my prefects, stating your capabilities, which shall be recorded, for my reference, as officers are required. Let no one injure or offend such worthies as thus present themselves. Let the whole empire be apprised thereof, that my benevolent intentions may be known. Respect this, and yield a reverential compliance."

The cities referred to in the above, fell an easy prey to the patriots, and thus closed their third campaign. At the close of the last Chinese year (February 7, 1853,) Tien-teh had under his sway not less than 75,000,000 of his countrymen, holding the seat of his government in the great city of Wu-chung fu, the capital of Hupeh; and, owing to the gradual manner in which these conquests were made, time was allowed for organizing an effective administration. Evidently they are not the banditti which the authorities represent them to be; it may, or it may not be true, that originally nothing more than robbery was contemplated by the first leaders, and it is possible that to some extent rapine and pillage attended their march, for these are inseparable from a state of warfare; yet such statements are to be received with allowance, coming as they do from their enemies. Whatever the party may have been is of little consequence; it comes before us now with a national character, and through a strong Provisional Government making reasonable demands.

The real difficulty of a native dynasty would commence with the expulsion of the Manchus, for its stability would be in perpetual jeopardy from the incursions of those hardy adventurers. To maintain themselves against such warlike neighbors, the Chinese would be compelled to court the alliance of Christian States, so called—independence is utterly out of the question—the choice being between, subjection to the Manchus, or a reliance on the power and friendship of the "barbarians from afar." Of these alternatives, the latter would be preferred by all who have at heart the present and future well-being of this large portion of the human family. It is by rendering obligations of this kind, that they are to be conciliated, and not by aiding their conquerors to retain the offensive yoke.

The Misery and Delusion of California.

(A Private Letter communicated for the N. Y. Tribune.)

San Francisco, May 26, 1853.

It has been a matter of great surprise to me, that some one has not, before this, given a true account of the condition of the people and the state of things in California.

I have been in this State twelve weeks, and during that time have seen more misery, more vice, more immorality, more blasted hopes, and withering disappointment, more utter wretchedness and impotent regrets, than I have ever witnessed before in my whole life; and it is astonishing—it is amazing—that some philanthropist has not taken upon himself the task, ere this, of exposing to the world the state of affairs here, and the almost universal fate of the great majority of California emigrants. All who leave home for this supposed land of gold, do so with high hopes and brilliant expectations; but did they know the almost certain destiny which awaits them here, they would sooner dig potatoes for fifty cents a day than undertake this expedition.

In this city of San Francisco there are, today, two thousand people, at least, seeking employment, but seeking it in vain. Occasionally an advertisement will appear in the papers, or a notice be posted up on the boards of some intelligence office, that a hotel waiter, an experienced farmer, or a few wood-choppers, are wanted, and immediately there will be a rush of eager applicants at the appointed place of interview, like a pack of famished wolves around a dead carcass.

I have seen young men who left good situations in stores and offices at home, piling up lumber here on the docks, washing dishes, and doing the most menial services in restaurants and hotels, and others who are unable to find any work which from their physical constitution or habits of life they are competent to perform; and I know of many, and have heard of many more, who are working for $20 and $30 a month, and hundreds who are working for their board and glad of the opportunity to do that. There are hundreds of strong and robust men sitting in the hotels, and standing upon the corners of streets, without a cent of money in their pockets, who have sought and striven for employment until their stout hearts become heavy with despair.

Those who have been accustomed to all the luxuries of life at home, and are unused to manual labor, find themselves here compelled to encounter difficulties and suffer privations they never dreamed of before. People are willing and anxious to work—to do any work—work which they would have scorned to have done before they saw California; but the work is not here to do, and the bitter exclamation goes out from a thousand hearts every day, "O God! what shall I do?" They are as powerless as infants, as helpless as babes, for they cannot make work, nor can they force a man to give them employment when he has none to give. The mental agony—the unspoken anguish of the soul, felt here every twenty-four hours, are almost equal to the tortures of hell. Who ever saw such a number of sad faces, such multitudes of miserable men, as one meets in this city every week? I am sick, I confess I am sick at heart, when I see the crowds of deluded mortals brought to these shores by every steamer that arrives. It is too bad—'tis wicked—'tis cruelly wrong. The great idea that seems to pervade the States from one end to the other in regard to California is a stupendous fraud—a gigantic humbug—a most inhuman scheme to cheat thousands out of their home, their happiness, their peace of mind, their property, and, in too many cases, of their lives. Nine-tenths of the people here, in addition to all other disappointments and privations, are deprived of all the advantages of social intercourse and civilized society, and in a few weeks their minds become rusty, and their moral feelings and sensibilities blunted.

Good carpenters, when they can obtain work, receive $6 a day, but not one out of twenty-five is able to accumulate anything. They may be employed one, two or three days, and perhaps a week, and then, the job completed upon which they have been at work, they are compelled to lie idle till they can find another job, and thus spend the money which they have earned. But if they should be fortunate enough to accumulate anything during the dry season, they are obliged to spend it all during the wet, for then little or no building can be done. The same is the case with Masons and Bricklayers. It is a fact, which cannot be denied, that not one mechanic out of fifty can save as much money here as he can at home; and laboring men, who have no trade, with the best of California fortune, are barely able to support a miserable existence. Board here, at the cheapest hotels, cannot be had for less than $10 per week, and washing $3 per dozen.

Hay-Making—Sweating, &c.

There is said to be philosophy in sucking eggs, and so there is in making hay—in the period of ripeness—protection against dews and rains—manner of curing—and in housing and stacking. Medicinal plants contain the greatest quantity, and in the greatest perfection, all of their peculiar qualities at the period of full blossom, and this we are disposed to believe the best period for cutting grass for hay; for the moment the blossom falls, the plant ceases to enlarge, and very soon passes into the "sere and yellow leaf"—the saccharine and mucilaginous portions decompose and evaporate, and soon become the mere woody fibre, like the straw of the cereal grains. Many persons say that timothy should not be cut till the seeds are fully ripe—that it goes further—spends better. It may be true; and the same may be said of bad bread and rancid butter, but it may be doubted whether there is the same quantity of available nutriment contained in any plant—its foliage and stems, after perfecting the seed, as if cut at its greatest vigor. This doctrine will not apply, at any rate, to clover and June grass, as both of these articles are nearly worthless, if left to stand till the seeds are ripe.

All the grasses, and clover most decidedly, make a better quality of hay if cured by the sweating process, rather than by entire sun and air drying. In good hay weather, when grass is not over stout, what is cut in the forenoon, by being spread out—and where it is light, by simply turning it over with the rake—will do to put in the sweating cocks, of about 85 or 100 lbs. size, the same day.

Rake it into winrows with the horse rake, or by hand, and make the cocks by flakes or fork fulls, and not by rolling, except in extreme cases of hurry to get it out of the way of showers or night exposure. If made up of small diameter, and as high as they will stand, they may be left for two, three, and even five days, without injury. On a fine sunny morning, as soon as the dew is off, open them freely to the sun, and by 10 o'clock they are ready for loading. Hay cured in this way is infinitely superior to the dried, sun burnt and discoloring process of sun and air drying. While one is the green Hyson, the other is Bohea or Souchong. The Robbers of Smyrna.

Mr. Bryant, in a letter to the Evening Post, dated at Constantinople, thus speaks of the banditti in and about Smyrna:—

While at Smyrna, the other day, I heard many accounts of robberies committed by banditti, who have their haunts in the neighboring mountains. The city is fairly infested by them; and no man whose life is worth the ransom of a thousand piasters, ventures to trust himself at any considerable distance from the city, or to inhabit any of the neighboring villages, except that of Boornabat, on the plains of Smyrna. Yet in these villages many merchants still possess country houses and gardens, grateful and pleasant retreats, where they once lived with their families a part of the year, when the heat made Smyrna, a closely-built city, with very narrow and very dirty streets, and not a single open square or public promenade, disagreeable, and unwholesome. At present they never visit them. Smyrna is now a sort of prison, watched by a guard of robbers. About two years ago they seized Mr. Van Lennup, a respectable merchant of Smyrna, who was walking out with two of his children. They demanded a hundred thousand piasters for his ransom; which was negotiated down to fifty thousand—about $20,000—on the payment of which he was allowed to return home. One of the most remarkable of their recent captures was that of a Frenchman, the proprietor of a silk factory, who a short time since was by some means decoyed to a village not far from the city, seized, and released on the payment of thirty thousand piasters—about $12,000. "He deserved his fate," said a Smyrnaite, who acted as our guide through the city. "He had seduced several young women employed in his factory, and the people of Smyrna all say that the robbers served him right."

A lady, a native of the east, who had lived many years in Smyrna, related to me an incident which shows how little regard this community of robbers have for human life. "A young man of Smyrna, a Christian, had fallen in love with a Turkish girl, and eloping with her, sought refuge with the banditti, among the mountains. They gave him shelter, and urged him to become one of them, but he declined, hoping yet to escape to Greece or some of its islands, where to have run away with a Moslem would not be punishable as a crime. One day the chief of the troop renewed his propositions, which were again firmly rejected. The chief drew one of his pistols, aimed it at the young woman, shot her dead on the spot, and turning again to her lover, said to him, 'Now you are ours.' Since that time the young man has been a robber. He knew that if he returned to society, the blood of the Turkish girl would be required at his hands."

The present chief of the banditti is one who, amid the atrocities he is committing, has shown himself capable of generous actions. On one occasion, hearing that a member of a family in which he had been a servant was in some pecuniary embarrassment, he made his appearance and offered him the means of extricating his affairs, which, however, were not accepted. He resolutely withheld his companions from committing any robbery or act of wrong on Franks or Christians. "The Turks," he said, "are our tyrants and oppressors, and in plundering the Turks, we perform an act of justice; but let us spare the Christians, who have never done us harm."

Some time since this man was taken and carried to Constantinople, where he was long detained a prisoner. During his absence, the troop broke through the rules he had laid down, and robbed Franks, Christians, and Turks indiscriminately. "He is now at large," said the person who gave me this account, "and I hear that in returning to his companions, he manifested great indignation at their conduct during his absence."

I expressed my astonishment that the Turkish Government, having had him once in their hands, should have allowed him to be again at liberty.

"He bribed high," was the reply; "that is the way we explain things in this country."

When I was waiting at Beyroot, about four weeks since, for the Austrian steamer to bring me to Smyrna, I heard that a Druse chief, a prisoner of the Government, had been exposed at the barracks, without the city, chained to a post, with his hands tied behind him. On inquiry, I learned it was Muhammed Daoud, a noted robber, who, for some time past, with a band of followers, has infested the road over Mount Lebanon, between Beyroot and Damascus, and committed many robberies and murders. They relate of him, that a man having a wife whom he coveted, he entered his house by night, slew the husband, and carried off the woman to his retreat in the mountains.

Muhammed Daoud was one of the boldest villains of his class. He wrote to the Turkish authorities, enumerating the robberies and assassinations of which he had been guilty, and added:—"You do not know by whom these things were done. I am the man—Muhammed Daoud; they were done by my hand or by my order. Take me if you can." The Government had made various attempts to seize his person, but without success, till at length a Druse family, named Joubelat, possessing high rank and great influence among their people, engaged to apprehend him, and deliver him up. They watched his movements, and finding him at a convent, entered the room where he was dining. He asked them if they came in peace, and being told that they did, allowed them to approach him, and found himself their prisoner. He now complains that he was taken by treachery. He is to be taken to Constantinople, and if he has the means of paying a heavy bribe, I shall not be surprised to hear that he, like the robber-chief from Smyrna, is again at liberty, hovering about the road from Beyroot to Damascus.

When should Grain be Cut?

A most important question, just at this time, for the Northern Farmer. Careful observations, and some little experience during twenty years residence in a great wheat-growing country, has convinced the writer that it is fully ten per cent. profit on the crop to the farmer, to cut his wheat before the grain is fully ripe. Our rule is to commence cutting as soon as the earliest part of the crop has passed from the milky into the dough state. There is no occasion to let it lay and cure, when cut while the straw is still partially green. Bind it up as fast as cut, and set the bundles in stooks, "Dutch fashion,"—that is, two and two leaning together, in dozens, or twenties, or any given number, so as to give an even count. Set in this way, the most unripe grain will cure and perfect itself.

The advantages are—the grain is heavier, sweeter, and whiter; there is less loss of shattered grain; the straw, where that is an object, is so much better feed as to make it worth while to cut early, even if there were a loss on the grain, which is not the case.

For seed, the best portion of the field should be set apart and left to mature until fully ripe, and then carefully cut by hand, and very carefully handled, because the very grains which should be saved for seed, are the ones most easily shattered. Give these bundles a slight threshing, and give the grain a thorough winnowing; screen out all but the most plump kernels, and sow those for your next crop, and you will succeed in improving both quality and product.

This question of "when should grain be cut," has been agitated for many years, both in this country and Europe, and no doubt many a reader will exclaim, "What is the use of writing anything more about that—don't everybody know all about it? No, sir. You know, perhaps, or, what is the same thing to you, you think you do, and won't learn any more, but somebody else will. You forget, or else, in your self-conceited folly, you don't think, that about ten per cent. of all the farmers who ever make any advances in the science of farming, are not to the manor born; do not possess a sort of intuitive knowledge how to do just "as father did," and never do or think of doing anything else.

There is at the present day a vast number of people in this country just beginning to learn farming. Such persons want a constant succession of lessons—even old ones repeated are fresh to them, though they may be stale to you.

This theory of cutting grain before it is fully ripe, is no new one.

In the 2d volume of British Husbandry, pp. 136, 137, it is said:

"The question has been for some time agitated regarding the state of ripeness on which grain should be reaped; and it has been recommended, as a general rule of practice, to cut down the crop before the uppermost grain can be shaken out. Taking all things into consideration, it seems to be the most prudent plan to have the grain cut before it is fully ripe; but in this a medium course should be adopted; for, although grain, if allowed to become too ripe, assumes a dull, husky hue in the sample, yet, if not ripened enough, it shrivels in the drying."

Cadet de Vaux asserts that "grain reaped eight days before the usual time, has the berries larger, fuller, and finer, and better calculated to resist the attacks of the weevil. An equal quantity of the corn thus reaped, with corn reaped at maturity, gave more bread and of a better quality. The proper time for reaping, is that when the grain, on being pressed between the fingers, has a doughy appearance, like a crumb of bread just hot from the oven."

Mr. B. Howard, in the Report on Select Farms, says: Wheat ought never to be allowed to remain uncut till it is fully ripe. Experiments, easily made, will prove to every cultivator of it, that by permitting it to stand until the straw has lost its succulency, he gains nothing in plumpness, or bulk of grain, but loses much in its color and fineness of skin; besides which, he incurs the risk of shelling, by the high wind, or by its being cut under the influence of a burning sun. "When fully ripened by standing in the shocks, no dry hour should be lost in getting it well secured.

Louden observes, that "in harvesting Wheat the best farmers, both in England and on the continent, agree that it ought to be cut before it becomes dead ripe. When this is the case, the loss is considerable, both in the field and in the stack-yard; and the grain, according to Von Thaer, produces an inferior flour."

An experienced Pennsylvania farmer of our acquaintance always cuts his oats while the straw is green. This he learned to do, contrary of all old practice of his father and all his neighbors, by accident. His hay crop was short one year, and he determined to cut his oats green; that is, five or six days too soon, as he thought, losing the grain for the sake of the straw. For seed, he left a strip through the middle of the field, where the oats were best. The grain of those cut was just in the dough and milling state, and he expected they would all shrivel up. What was his surprise, when he came to thrash, to find the early cut straw yielding as much and as plump grain as that which stood till it was dead ripe, while the straw was incomparably better—in fact, the stock ate it as rapidly as they would timothy hay.

Successful Domestic Search.

Mr. H. affronted his wife, who, to punish him, resolved to act dumb whenever he was present; and so well did she maintain her resolution, that nearly a week passed away, during which not a word did she utter in his presence. She performed her household duties as usual, but speak she would not. He tried to coax her out of her whim, but in vain. At last he tried the following plan to overcome her resolution, by working on her curiosity—the most ungovernable of female propensities. Returning one evening from his employment, his lady sat there as usual, mute. He immediately commenced a vigorous search throughout the room. The closet was examined, the bedroom, drawers, boxes, shelves; every thing that could possibly be thought of was overhauled.

His wife was struck with astonishment at his unaccountable behavior, and so he proceeds in his search. She became very nervously anxious to find out what he was looking for. What could it be? She looked in his face, to glean, if possible, from his expression, the object of his search; but no go—he was sober as a judge. He lifted the edge of the carpet, looked under the table cover, and finally approached her chair, looked under it, and even went so far as to brush her dress partially aside, as if what he sought might be hid there. She could stand it no longer. She burst out—"Bob, what are you looking for?" He smiled, and answered, "Your tongue—and I've found it."

Quantity of Butter given by Cows.—The largest quantity of butter from a given weight of the same food, and the richest milk, are yielded by the milk of the smaller races. The small Alderney, or Jersey, West Highland and Kerry cows, give a richer milk even than the small Ayrshire. But the small Shetlander is said to surpass them all. These are all hardy, and will pick up a subsistence from pastures on which other breeds would starve. The quantity of butter yielded by different cows in the same yard, and eating the same food, is sometimes very different. Some will yield only three or four pounds a week, while more will give eight or nine pounds, and a few fifteen pounds a week. As a rare instance, I may mention that a cow has been known in Lancashire to yield upwards of twenty-two pounds in seven days.

VARIETY.

Departed this life, in Union township, Muskingum Co., Ohio, June 11, 1853, John Kelly, aged 93 years. Mr. Kelly was born in North Carolina in 1755. At the age of 19 he joined the American army under Washington, and served with credit to himself and good to his country. On the 11th September, 1777, he was in the bloody battle on the Brandywine, in which he was dangerously wounded and carried from the field, where an American lady dressed his wounds and was instrumental in saving his life. On the 15th July, 1779, he was with Gen. Wayne in storming Stony Point, and stood his ground during one of the most heroic deeds that immortalized the Revolution. At the end of the war he was honorably discharged.

Thou mayest be sure (says Sir Walter Raleigh,) that he that will in private tell thee of thy faults is thy friend, for he adventures thy dislike, and doth hazard thy hatred; for there are few men that can endure it, every man for the most part delighting in self-praise, which is one of the most universal follies that bewitcheth mankind.

Things are pretty evenly divided after all. The poor man has no money, while the rich man has no appetite. The former lives in dread of the almshouse, and the latter of dyspepsia and white-wine pudding. Who's ahead?

"This little fellow," said Martin Luther of a bird going to roost, "has chosen his shelter, and is quietly rocking himself to sleep, without a care for to-morrow's lodging, calmly holding up his little twig, and leaving God alone to think for him."

One of the speakers in the Massachusetts Convention, having stated that some provision "would place a stain upon the commonwealth which no earthly power could erase," the phonographic report rendered it a stone which no power could raise!

The college at Benares, India, has been purchased for about three thousand dollars, for the British Baptist Missionary Society. The college is eligibly situated in the heart of Hindoo idolatry.

"My German friend, how long have you been married?" "Vell, dis a ting vat I seldom don't like to tauk about, but ven I does, it seems to be so long that it never vas."

The Maine Law Triumph in Michigan is already bearing fruit. Wisconsin, by her Legislature, has passed a similar act, by a decisive majority.

The Fourth in Wisconsin was celebrated at Kenosha, Elkhorn, Delavan, Oshkosh, Lancaster, Fox Lake, and at Menasha.

Gov. Wood, of Ohio, having received the appointment of Consul at Valparaiso, has resigned his office of Governor.

LOVE OF TRUTH A PRACTICAL PRINCIPLE.

Oration delivered by T. B. Williams, before the Allghanian Lyceum of Alfred Academy, July 5, 1853.

Every department of nature is characterized by some leading principle from which emanate the very laws of its existence and progressive development. Thus, gravitation is a fundamental principle of the physical universe. In this we behold the operations of a force which acts upon every thing that exists, in the heavens or on the earth. It pervades every atom, rules the motions of animate and inanimate bodies, and is alike present in the descent of a raindrop as in the falls of Niagara. It not only binds satelites to their panets, and planets to the sun, but it connects sun with sun throughout the wide extent of creation; thus comprehending the universe within its mighty influence. We might adduce many examples to illustrate the idea of a general principle, but this is sufficient.

Now the Creator has implanted a principle in human nature, which lies at the foundation of intellectual development and moral improvement. This may be designated, Love of Truth.

In considering the practical bearing of this principle, it is important in the outset to have a clear conception of what is meant by truth, for this often conveys an indefinite idea. Truth, as commonly understood, embraces every reality, whether of fact or existence. Thus, it is a truth that the lilly blooms, that the oak rears its majestic column, that the stars twinkle, and that the sun radiates its golden light. But all this is indefinite. Truth, in its literal sense, is the embodiment of God's will, and the development of his character. How perfectly is the external world conformed to the will and character of God. "There is truth in that beautiful flower smiling in the sunlight. There is truth in the music of that caroling bird, so full of life and joy. There is truth in the gentle murmur of the flowing stream, in the rustling of the forest leaf, and the roar of the rushing tide." Would that the human heart were as truthful and innocent as the external world. But, alas! it is not so. The hydra-headed monster, selfishness, has crawled out of his dark den upon the lovely face of the world, and has infused his poisonous breath into the very lungs of the whole human family. Thus has the spirit of sin entered the heart of man. Hence truthfulness and reason have lost their supremacy, and things are seen not in their true light. Many of the principles of humanity have been trampled under foot, while oppression and war are the constant scenes among men. Instead of the harmony of peace and good will, we hear the harsh threat of the capitalist, and the subdued plea of the laborer—the burning scorn of the libertine, and the writhing agony of polluted virtue—the whistling lash of the master, and the vain entreaty of the slave—the whole mantled by religious institutions.

It is a glorious thought, that the application of truth can harmonize all this discord. But how is truth to be reinscribed on the tablets of the human heart? This is a practical question, and demands our candid attention.

Christ, the perfect emblem of righteousness, has declared, in all his teachings and life, that love of truth is the motive power by which its character is inscribed upon the heart. This principle develops itself under three different forms, viz: Investigation, adoption, and dissemination of truth.

It is a fact, admitted by all, that whatever we regard as in any way valuable, gains our close attention, while that in which we have no interest, is passed by unheeded. Hence it is perfectly natural to investigate those subjects in which there may be anything of value or interest to us. Thus we find, now and then, a Christian philosopher who, having gained a conception of the great ocean of practical truths lying out before him, is putting forth every possible effort to fathom its depths and develop its treasures.

Love of truth bears the same relation to investigation, that love of gold does to mining. Mark the singleness of purpose with which the miner engages in his pursuit. Every other employment is laid aside for this. Then, sacrificing home and all its kindred pleasures, he embarks upon the dangerous voyage to the land of gold. Again we behold him there, scouring the very dirt, and crushing the flinty rock, that he may secure the last particle of the shining dust. Toil and hardships are his daily companions, and love of gold his chief stimulus. So it is with the truth-loving man. Every avocation of life is accommodated to the acquirement of knowledge, and the development of truth. Disregarding the pleasures of luxury and ease, he searches every dark corner of the universe, as with a lighted torch. We behold him at one time analyzing a pearly drop, ascertaining its elements and laws of construction—at another time, grasping a ray of light from the sun, he determines its characteristics and velocity. Again we behold him, with telescopic aid, sounding the depths of space, and describing the invisible worlds. To the power of this principle, urging man to investigation, do we owe all that we have of true science, government, and religion.

The presence and strength of this principle is most easily tested in the investigation of moral and religious subjects; for in this department of research there is a decided tendency to rest contented with paternal traditions. Hence the first and almost universal question has come to be, not what is right and truth, but what is the position of my father, my party, and my church, upon this subject? And this is still the more remarkable, when we consider that the Bible, the great vocabulary of moral and religious truths, is laid open before us, and we have only to look at its contents with an unprejudiced eye, to behold their unchangeable nature and universal application.

But, notwithstanding this unfavorable tendency, the spirit of thorough investigation is quietly warming up the moral world, and the love of truth is slowly germinating in the great heart of humanity. Sectarian creeds and party platforms, though long considered the emblems of purity and perfection, are now passing a rigid review. Constitutions, and covenants, which have for centuries stood as the bulwarks of justice, are now being carefully revised, and the constitutionality of every public question is the first thing in order. Indeed, this principle lies at the foundation of that restless agitation around the thrones of Europe and Asia. The wronged populace, inspired by a love of truth, are seeking for their natural and God-given rights. And well may those governments quake with fear, for the truth must and will prevail. Again, if we turn to our own country, we cannot fail to observe, that the adamantine chains of that cursed institution, slavery, are slowly giving away, as the American heart begins to beat with the spirit of universal brotherhood. We trust the day is not far distant, when the advocates of slavery and intemperance will gladly retreat from the light of truth and civilization. Indeed, it has already arrived, when earnest and thorough investigation is the first business of every honest man; for it is a glaring fact, that we are accountable to God for all that we might have known had we improved every possible opportunity to investigate and develop the truth. Hence it is no part of Christian character to refuse to investigate any subject, however minute or unpopular, in which there is a possibility of truth.

It is very common, we know, for those having adopted the "enlightened religious policy" of the present day, to wave the investigation of disputed points, and harmonize, as far as possible, truth and error. But you cannot fail to observe, that such men have murdered the untarnished love of truth in their hearts, and have adopted a base and selfish purpose as the motive of their lives. Yes, the spirit of investigation, inspired by a love of truth, is always foremost in moral improvement and religious reforms.

Love of truth is not only the secret spring of investigation, but the irresistible motive to the adoption of truth. Irresistible, did I say? Yes, verily, no man whose heart beats with the love of truth will hesitate a moment to embrace it when found, and adopt it as a part of himself. Indeed, it is the great object of his most ardent desires. Stand with me upon some lofty crag in the midst of ocean's surging billows. The night is drear—dark clouds mantle the heavens—the lightning skips across the gloomy vault, "rousing the growling thunders from their lairs," and the wild tempest is raging with unwonted fury. But look! do you not behold in the dim distance, as the lightning gleams through the air, that trembling bark, with its unfortunate crew, who have just escaped from a sinking wreck? They have no chart, no compass, and know not whither they go. Mark their desponding hopes, as one after another drops his oar. Tarry a moment. The heavy clouds have parted, are rolling away; now the clear light of the north star beams upon their sight. Think you they hesitate to embrace the silent counsels of that guiding star? Nay, verily; but, with hearts swelling with gratitude, they instantly turn their frail bark to the haven of secure repose. So it is with the mariner on life's stormy ocean. He is surrounded by the foaming waves of popular selfishness, which have swallowed up millions as food for bloodthirsty tyrants. Dark clouds of superstition and infidelity have been wrapped around the Bible, the pole-star of humanity, while the glistening sword and flaming fagot have, at times threatened the thunderbolts of destruction upon every opposing force. But whenever the pure light of truth has shone through these breaking clouds, revealing to mankind their relations to each other and to their God, think you the truth-loving man has closed his eyes in cool neglect? Ah! no; but with a heart as true as the needle to the pole, he has embraced it as the only guide of his life. Indeed, so strong is this principle, when properly developed, that an honest man would sooner yield his life than violate one iota of the truth. The glorious martyrs of religion and human liberty have long since established this fact.

Again, the love of truth is the grand idea which gives stability to our educational and benevolent institutions; and we may rest assured, that they will be supported so long as the people regard the truths which they cherish. Yes, popular sentiments uniformly meet with a hearty adoption; but when you press home an unpopular truth, then you test a man's moral courage and religious integrity—in short, his love of truth. For, in that case, you array his desire for emolument and public applause in opposition to his regard for truth, which you know right well is a fearful contest. It is comparatively an easy matter to unfold the truths of the Bible in a clear and unmistakable light; but when the price of their adoption is considered, then would the great majority hie away to the dark shades of ignorance, and fain believe that they never saw the truth, nor learned their duty.

Do you say, that we are uncharitable? Then look out upon the broad field of contest, and behold the undying struggle for human freedom and universal brotherhood, and tell me, where are the unyielded combatants for right? With a few noble exceptions, they have retired from the struggle, are inventing crafty compromises, by which to fetter the truth, and thus license iniquity.

It is very common to hear men acknowledge the truth of certain positions, yet refuse to adopt them on the ground of inconvenience. Such men would fain legislate in heaven, amend the laws of God, rather than restrain their selfish purposes. But, on the other hand, there are a noble few scattered over the world, who are ready to adopt the truth, and support it to their dying moment. Among such we recognize the apostles of temperance, the advocates of human liberty and equal rights, and the firm supporters of uncompromised religion. Upon them rest the hopes of the world. They revolve in their spheres as bright luminaries, reflecting the light of truth upon all their fellow-men.

But, in the third place, we remark, that love of truth gives a mighty impulse to the dissemination of light and knowledge. For, it is a fact long since established, that whenever we embrace any sentiment which we love, there is a spontaneous desire at once springing up in the heart to communicate the same. This principle is the highest motive which urges forward the educator and the reformer to their arduous labors. Truth cannot be concealed in the human heart; it will develop itself. Cast your eye to yon crystal fountain, welling up from the heart of the earth. It ceases not to roll out its liquid stream, giving life and beauty to every thing along its winding course. Here and there we behold the weary traveler resorting to it to slake his thirst and enjoy its refreshing shades. So we may observe in every firm advocate of the truth a fountain of life gushing up from his warm heart, and rolling out the rich fruits of philanthropy upon his fellow-men. To such men do we owe the very life of our free and benevolent institutions. The downtrodden and oppressed may ever turn with confidence to them, as the sure advocates of their heaven-born rights. These are the heralds of reform, and they are carrying their mission into every quarter of the globe.

And here it is interesting to observe, that their first work is to roll back the dark pall of ignorance and superstition, by means of education, and thus introduce the light of truth to the human mind. When this is done, the reformer is enabled to point out the stains and dark cancers on the human character, and prescribe a proper remedy. These two characteristics stand prominent in the great Reform established eighteen hundred years ago, which has continued to this day to enlarge its borders, wipe out the stains and heal the wounds of fallen humanity. Every successful means of spreading light and proclaiming the truth belongs to this great reform. Hence you perceive that the educator, as well as the herald of truth, occupies an indispensable position in the redemption of the world. And when we consider the sacrifices and never ceasing toil of the great mass of these reformers, we must acknowledge they are sustained by a love of truth.

Contemplate the powers of darkness which surrounded a Luther, a Paul, or our Saviour on the cross; then consider with what undying energy they proclaimed the truths of God; and tell me, is there no power in the love of truth? Ah, yes; as well might we attempt to choke a volcano as to silence a truth-loving people. Truth cannot be hid by prison walls, Catholic discipline, or slaveholding laws, but it will penetrate every dark corner of the globe.

But while we speak of the necessary spread of truth by those who love it, it might not be amiss to call your attention, briefly, to one or two gross mistakes which seem to have found a reception with modern reformers. We would first refer to a lack of concentration of effort and comprehensive view of the great work of reform. Thus we behold one man giving his whole attention to a single branch of the great tree of error; another man to another; and so on; and each supposing that when he has accomplished his particular object, the great work will be done. Observe that mouse beneath the tall oak; he grasps within his teeth a hairlike root; he tugs and pulls, and at last it gives way. Now, retiring a little distance, he watches with deep solicitude, expecting to see the stately oak tumble to the ground. That is a one-idea mouse, and he is doomed to diappointment. So it is with many of our so-called reformers; they are one-idea men, and will go down to their graves regretting that mankind cannot appreciate true moral worth, and yield to them as the saviours of the world.

Again, there is a strong tendency, at the present day, to make reform a mere external matter, not reaching the heart. Hence legislating and force is brought in to execute the work. This error is too barefaced to need an argument; for it is evident to every sane mind, that a reform which does not reach the heart, is no reform.

We affirm, without hesitation, that an ardent love of truth is the only possible power by which a real reform can be effected. Then let us cultivate, with the most incessant care, a burning love of truth, and thus make investigation our first and foremost business, the adoption of the whole truth the natural and necessary consequence, and the dissemination of truth the incessant labor of our lives. When we have thus accomplished the noble destiny for which we live, "our spirits may plume themselves for their lofty flight, and take their departure in the buoyancy of hope to the realms of eternal progression."

FRIVOLITY IN THE PULPIT.

Of all places, the pulpit is the last for the utterance of worthless commonplaces, or useless frivolities. The preacher should impress his mind, by reflection and by prayer, with the awful responsibilities of his calling, and the magnitude of the interests depending on his endeavors. Thus impressed, his thoughts will have affinity with eternal things, and his words will be mighty. He will be in no danger of imitating a certain divine, who is said to have preached a course of twelve sermons on Melchisidec. His first discourse was on the importance of his theme. His second was a laborious effort to prove that Melchisidec was not Christ. His third proved, with equal force, that he was not Abraham. Thus, he preached, showing who his subject was not, until he reached his twelfth sermon. In summing up his whole argument, he said: "I have now shown the importance of my subject. I have demonstrated that Melchisidec was not Christ, or Abraham, or David, &c., &c. Now, I suppose you would like to know who Melchisidec was. This, I confess, I cannot tell; neither can any one else. And, to tell the truth, it is no matter who he was!"

What a precious confession was this! Twelve sermons about an insolvable question, of no practicable importance whatever! With what contempt must an intelligent audience have viewed such abortive labors! And yet, we fear, that in this age of prurient curiosity and idle speculation, there are many sermons preached on equally frivolous topics. It should not be so. The pulpit should always be solemn, weighty, and dignified; never light, frivolous, or idly speculative.

BEAR ON, BEAR BRAVELY ON.

O, never from thy tempted heart,
Let thine integrity depart;
When disappointment fills thy cup,
Undaunted, nobly drink it up;
Truth will prevail, and Justice show
Her tardy honors, sure though slow.
Bear on, bear bravely on!

Bear on! our life is not a dream,
Though often such its mazes seem;
We were not born to lives of ease,
Ourselves alone to aid and please.
To each a daily task is given,
A labor which shall fit for heaven;
When duty calls, let love grow warm,
Amid the sunshine and the storm,
With Faith, life's trials boldly breast,
And come a conqueror to thy rest.
Bear on, bear bravely on!

UNION ACADEMY—ANNUAL ADDRESS.

In a notice of the Anniversary Exercises of the Union Academy at Shiloh, N. J., our readers were promised a more complete account of the Annual Address delivered by Rev. A. D. Gillette of New York. Through the West Jersey Pioneer, sent us by Eld. W. B. Gillette, we are placed in possession of the following synopsis of that address.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—Appearing, as I now have the honor of doing, before you, as one of your speakers on the occasion of the anniversary of your justly celebrated Literary Institution, and on the seventy-seventh anniversary of our American Independence, allow me to congratulate you and myself on the auspiciousness of the opportunity. During many years past political parties have prostituted to purposes so selfish and exclusive the honors of this day, that the quiet citizens, the literary circles, clergymen, and especially ladies, have been obliged to absent themselves from most of the celebrations of our good old glorious fourth of July seventeen hundred and seventy-six.

You will join me in declaring, that nothing could have been more foreign to the minds of those intrepid warriors and statesmen who planned and signed the Declaration of American Independence, than a mere party political spirit. On more occasions than one, and by more parties than one, but especially by John Adams, it was expressly declared to be forever and exclusively proper, that as fellow citizens of this great, growing, and glorious Republic, we should congregate in our respective vicinities, in mass meeting, regardless of party, sect or name, and by devout prayers, and inspiring praises, perpetuate to our children the esteem in which we hold the principles and pursuits of those mighty men of the Revolution, who signed at once and the same time the declaration of their rights, and what, but for an overruling Providence, would assuredly have been their death warrant.

To assemble in this cool shade of academic groves, in near view of your beautiful village of Shiloh, and keep this festive day, is peculiarly appropriate. Three heaven-born institutions here present themselves to view. The Home—free, unmolested by political, civil or ecclesiastical meddlers, standing in the imperishable security of its own sweet virtues, protected by Him who setteth the solitary in families, and maketh the barren wife the joyful mother of children. The Seminary—where the young offshoots of our virtuous homes, fair science enlightens, and true learning leads to usefulness, enjoyment, and renown. The Church of the living God—the pillar and the ground of truth. These form a three-fold cord in human society, that cannot easily be broken, and must and do bind our beloved country in bands indissoluble as the Cordillera rocks, whose flinty ribs hold its north and south, its east and west, inseparable forever.

In calling your attention to my theme, I would announce, the discovery, settlement, and progress of our country, an incentive to a proper preparation, on the part of the young, for their work and destiny.

Here the speaker gave a concise history of Christopher Columbus, and his hazardous, though successful voyage, in the discovery of this our prosperous and happy country. The age in which he lived was an age of inquiry and investigation in many of the sciences that had been but partially understood. The art of printing and other causes conspired to increase the general intelligence and inquisitiveness of the public mind. The intelligence of the age was clustered in Convents, Courts, and founded Universities, places never the first to advance upon distrustedre forms. One-idea men are sometimes scouted, and justly, when that idea becomes the rotten rampart behind which they skulk, and selfish men hide their selfishness under the shadow and guise of supreme benevolence. But the one idea of Columbus was broad enough to cover the globe, with all its inhabitants.

We pass over years of the history of this great benefactor of mankind, during which, heart-sick and helpless, he bows unsuccessfully at the feet of one despot after another, until, after repeated brutal repulses from crowned men, he meets the serene smile of woman's brow, and reposing in her compassion, his wild discovery scheme, was entertained in the generous bosom of Isabella, queen of Spain.

Lord High Admiral were titles conferred by parchment upon our adventurous discoverer and his heirs forever, second only to the monarchs themselves. Spain and Portugal added most of the territory to their domain, that lies between Patagonia on the South, and New Orleans on the North, and it is not known that in all that region one attempt was made to improve society politically, or religiously the people they had conquered, except to engraft upon them the intolerant superstitions and ignorance which, like an incubus, was pressing out the life-blood of their own deteriorating people at home, and which found a culminating point in the horrible inquisition.

In a few years an event transpired which, as it had no parallel, it roused the attention and startled into astonishment the civilized world, the resistance on the part of the colonies of British rule in seventeen hundred and seventy-five—the battles of Lexington, and Bunkerhill, the ever memorable Declaration of Independence on July fourth seventeen hundred and seventy-six, and its glorious revolution of eight long years, of wrong and outrage endured and repudiated, victories won on the plains of Monmouth, Princeton, Trenton, and Yorktown, besides hundreds of other fields, where blood was poured out like water. American valor championed and defied despotism to the teeth. These events were soon followed by the alliance with France, and American freedom confessed before the world by haughty but humbled England, in the treaty of seventeen hundred and eighty-three.

What a country is here spread out before the eye of the exiles from other shores! As they navigate our mighty rivers, and traverse our vast area, with almost every climate, they gaze with delighted astonishment, while over them spreads the arching elm, and the pyramidal pine

(Here the speaker traced the history of the different nations who settled this country from their origin and their wonderful prosperity since coming here.)

It is an interesting spectacle that I behold before me now—groups of forming minds arrayed here, with their intellectual and moral instructors, representatives of multiplying and marshaling hearts, consecrated to those improving pursuits, which in after life are to lead and govern. To you, my young friends, we all look in our hopes and enterprises, as the persons by whom our rising republic is to be made useful and honorably wonderful. Each one of you is an integral part, that must neither forget nor lose its own responsibility, nor its own personal heart-felt identity.

As I cast my eye over this vast assemblage of intelligence and worth, a thrill of delight goes through me, a spirit of enthusiasm of no common interest. In this Institution, under the tuition of its distinguished Principal and Faculty, are scores of young Ladies and Gentlemen, who for months and years past have been progressing in the knowledge of the liberal sciences, literature and the arts, with other ornamental and graceful accomplishments; and they will soon retire from Academic Halls, to take their position in social life and refined society, shedding a lustre around the domestic fire-side, multiplying the attractions and the joys of home, one by one going forth with fostering and maternal cares to become the teachers of others, the parents of children, the patriots of our country, and statesman of the world, constituting an enduring monument of cultivated virtue.

Female loveliness is here consecrating all its charms and influences to a world-wide usefulness. Woman's heart is mightier than eloquence articulated by the orator; you are the framers of man's character, and his naturally hard heart is made soft as wax in your genial embrace; you can mould him into love. Whatever the life-long fate of man may be, one stamp he always bears upon his rugged brow, that which his mother's hand impressed upon his childhood's bosom. Young ladies, whatever else you study, let me say, before I speak that sad farewell, study the Book of Books, "the Holy Scriptures."

Young gentlemen are before me. Caroline Gilman says, There is no object so beautiful as a conscientious young man. I watch him as I do a star in heaven; clouds may be before him, but we know that his light is behind them, and will beam forth again; the glare of others' popularity may outshine him, but we know that though unseen he illumines his own true sphere. He resists temptations not without a struggle, for that is not virtue, but he resists and conquers; he hears the sarcasm of the profligate, and it stings him, for that is a trait of virtue, but it heals with its own pure touch. Such a young man is sheltered by kind arms, loved by a true heart, and guided by loving council. Old age is protected and venerated, manhood respected, and he stands amidst the world's temptations like a well-balanced tower, and is more than a nation's monumental glory.

PRACTICAL ELOQUENCE.

The following very brief and decidedly pithy speech of Oliver Cromwell, will doubtless be new to many of our readers. It was delivered by the great Englishman on dissolving the long Parliament. It is a perfect specimen of the rude, vigorous and hardy style of that singular character :—

"It is high time for me to put an end to your sitting in this place, which ye have dishonored by your contempt of all virtue, and defiled by your practice of every vice. Ye are a factious crew, and enemies to all good government. Ye are a pack of mercenary wretches, and would, like Esau, sell your country for a mess of pottage, and like Judas, betray your God for a few pieces of silver. Is there a single virtue now remaining among you? Is there one vice you do not possess? You have no more religion than my horse. Gold is your God. Which of you has not bartered away your conscience for bribes?

"Is there a man among you that has the least care for the good of the commonwealth? You sordid prostitutes! Have you not defiled the sacred place, and turned the Lord's temple into a den of thieves? By your immoral principles and wicked practices, ye have grown intolerably odious to a whole nation. You who were deputed here by the people to get their grievances redressed, are yourselves become the greatest grievance. Your country, therefore, calls upon me to cleanse this augean stable, by putting a final period to your iniquitous proceedings in this house, and which, by God's help and the strength he has given me, I now intend to do. I command you, therefore, upon the peril of your lives, to depart immediately out of this place Go! Get you out! Make haste! Ye venal slaves, be gone! Take away that shining bauble there, the Speaker's mace, and lock up the doors!"

THREE YEARS LABOR ON THE BIBLE.

The following calculation of the number of books, verses, words, letters, &c., contained in the Old and New Testaments, are said to have cost the calculator three years' labor. They are, therefore, supposed to be worth reading, and perhaps preserving:

OLD TESTAMENT.

No. of Books,	39	No. of Words,	592,439
No. of Chapters,	929	No. of Letters,	2,728,100
No. of Verses,	23,214

The middle Book is Proverbs.

The middle Chapter is Job XXIX.

The middle Verse would be 2d Chronicles, xx. 17, if there were a verse more, and verse 18 if there were a verse less.

The word and occurs 35,543 times.

The word Jehovah occurs 6,855 times.

The shortest verse is 1 Chronicles, I, 25.

The 21st verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra contains all the letters of the alphabet.

The 19th of the 2d Kings, and the 37th chapter of Isaiah, are alike.

NEW TESTAMENT.

No. of Books	27	No. of Words,	118,258
No. of Chapters.	260	No. of Letters,	828,580
No. of Verses,	7,959

The middle Book is 2d Thessalonians.

The middle Chapter is Romans XIII, if there were a chapter less, and XIV, if there were a chapter more.

The middle Verse is Acts XVII, 17.

The shortest Verse is John XI, 35.

OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT.

No. of Books,	66	No. of Words,	773,697
No. of Chapters,	1,189	No. of Letters,	3,566,480
No. of Verses,	31,173

The middle Chapter, and least in the Bible, is Psalms CXVII.

The middle Verse is Psalm CXVIII, 8.

THE MINISTER HUNTING HIS SLAVE.

About fifteen years ago, there came to Indianapolis, Indiana, a colored man, named John Freeman. He brought with him some few hundred dollars, a part of which he invested in real estate. He was a painter, whitewasher, and man of all work. He married a young woman who was servant in our family. His deportment won for him general respect and confidence. He rapidly increased in property, and is now worth about six thousand dollars, which, in that community, is a very handsome property. No man's word was better than Freeman's. He was honest, punctual, and reliable. He became an active member of the colored Baptist Church, and conscientiously discharged his duties as a church member. He has a family of three children. On the 23d of June, a man named Pleasant Ellington, formerly of Kentucky, now of Missouri, who is, we understand, a Methodist preacher, appeared in Indianapolis, and found miscreants base enough to assist him in arresting Freeman, upon the claim that he was his slave. Freeman claims that he is a free man, and shows many papers recognizing that fact. The Judge has granted nine weeks for Freeman to procure further evidence of his freedom.

There are some facts that have come to our knowledge which it will be edifying to know.

When Freeman's arrest was known, the whole community was moved. One hundred men of all parties, and of the first standing in the place, such as Judge Blackford, Judge Wick, N. B. Palmer, Calvin Fletcher, Esq., and many other such, signed a bond for bail in the sum of $1,600. The amount in gold was brought into Court, to be deposited for the preacher Ellington, in case Freeman proved a slave, should not appear, or for his freedom in any event. The bail was refused. Rev. Mr. Ellington refused to agree to take any price should he get possession of him, but determined to take him to Missouri.

Under a pretense that he feared a rescue, the Marshal was about to remove Freeman to Madison jail on the Ohio River, but has consented to leave him in the jail at Indianapolis, on condition that Freeman pays $3 a day for a guard to watch over himself!

We have some good but dull men in New York, who have denied that Christian men and families were subject to separation and sale, under the system of Slavery. It is said that to represent such scenes as Uncle Tom's separation from his family, as per his wife, is a slander.

Yet here is a preacher of the Gospel, making a pilgrimage of more than half a thousand miles, to find and arrest a member of a Christian Church, in a Free State, and drag him into Slavery! He finds him settled down in a home which his own industry has secured, with a wife and three children, a useful and greatly respected citizen. One would think that a man with a particle of humanity, even if Freeman were his slave, upon seeing such a state of facts, would refuse to break up and desolate a family, and blight the prospects of a man and fellow Christian. But so deeply has this fellow drank of the spirit of patriotism, that he determines to make the mischief. Bonds and security were offered him the most ample, for any price that he might demand, in case Freeman should be proved his slave. He refused everything. He demanded the Man, and declared that he would remove him to a Slave State and to Slavery! [Independent.

Not afraid to be Poor.—After Dr. Gill had written against a gentleman whose publications he considered erroneous, he was waited on by some of his friends, who endeavored to dissuade him from persevering, and among other things, they intimated to him that he might lose the subscriptions of some wealthy persons. "Do not tell me of losing," said the doctor, "I value nothing in comparison to the gospel. I am not afraid to be poor."

REMEDY FOR SUNDAY WICKEDNESS.

Whoever is in the habit of reading the daily newspapers of our cities and large towns, cannot fail to be struck with the fact, that offenses against law and order are very numerous on Sunday compared with other days of the week. The arrests made by the Police on this day, and the doings of the Courts on Monday morning, tell the story in terms too plain to be overlooked. These arrests are not made, for the most part, for violations of the Sunday Statute, but for such offenses as are unlawful on any day of the week; for murders, drunkenness, street-fights, assault and battery, thefts, nuisances of every description. And we hazard nothing in saying, that the list of such offenses for Sunday is twice as large as for any other day of the week.

For such a state of things, what is the remedy? We are not weak enough to think, that the observance of Saturday, rather than Sunday, by the religious community, would correct the evil, though we have no doubt that it would lessen it to some extent; that is, so far as the corrupt passions of men are under the influence of moral suasion. The great trouble is that, back of all moral suasion, there lies on the Statute Book a law, compelling every body to suspend labor on the first day of the week. Were this law made to lie only against those whose virtuous principles are, to a considerable extent, matured, the evil would not be so great. But, as all laws must necessarily do, it lies against the most abandoned portion of community. So that, every seventh day, the great check which labor opposes to the corrupt passions of the wicked, is taken off, and a whole horde of semi-civilized men and women is let loose. What result could reasonably be expected but disturbance of the peace?

It were folly to suppose that corrupt men, set free from labor for a whole day, would place themselves within the pale of a religious assembly. It were still greater folly to suppose that entire idleness would be safe for them. Decidedly wicked people should never be left without employment. If they will not go to church on Sundays, (as the greater portion of them will not,) let them go to work; it will be better for themselves, and better for society. Left to idleness, they seek the ball-alley, the quoit-ground, the dram-shop. They cross one another's inclination, and hard names, bloody faces, and broken bones, are the result. They become heated with liquor, and their revelry is like the noise of pandemonium. Their gatherings for recreation are public nuisances, and when they return to their homes, their houses are hells to their families, and terror to their neighbors.

We give it as our deliberate conviction, that the Sunday statute is, in a great degree, responsible for such disorders. We will not say, that its entire abrogation would prove an effectual remedy, but we do believe that, in view of the corruption of human nature, it would go far toward neutralizing the evil. Next to religious principle, or in the absence of it, steady employment—downright hard work, every day, is the most effectual restraint upon the vices of the lower orders. Give them the opportunity to fill their pockets with the proceeds of their labor, and thousands of them will keep the peace without the coercives of law.

We will add that, in our opinion, not only would the peace of society be less likely to be disturbed, if labor were freely permitted on Sunday, but the cause of religion would be promoted. For, to whatever extent the occupancy of the day with labor would hinder the gospel from coming into contact with the people, it could not operate more unfavorably in this respect, than the recreations do, to which the unemployed will resort at any rate. As a general thing, the people could be as readily persuaded to forego their labor for the sake of attending public worship, as they could to forego pleasure; and that they would be in quite as good a mood for listening to, and being impressed by, divine truth, having just come from the work-shop, as they would on coming from some place of amusement, is too obvious for argument. And as the missionary, the colporter, or tract distributer goes forth to communicate the word of life, into which place would he venture with the least embarrassment, and with the most confident hope of success—into the dram-shop, or into the place filled with industrious workmen?—into the garden of pleasure, or into a circle of toiling laborers? Unquestionably the latter. We go, therefore, for the abrogation of the Sunday laws.

These views are not prompted by any sectarian prejudice. Were Saturday the established Sabbath of community, we would say the same. Let its observance rest upon the voluntary principle altogether, and where moral suasion fails to induce its observance, let there be some kind of honest employment, which may serve as a check upon the lawlessness of the human heart. T. B. B.

Support of Methodist Ministers.—The Congregational Journal has a carefully-prepared article on of Methodism in New Hampshire. The following paragraph in relation to the support awarded the ministry is of general interest:—

"The amount of pecuniary support accorded to the minister is different in different places, varying from $110, which is the lowest, to $600, which is the highest sum granted. Thus, for the minister of Concord $25 are allowed for traveling expenses, $84 for house rent, $272 for quarterage, which we suppose is intended for whatever expenses are not included under other heads, $30 for fuel, and $64 for table expenses. This last sum varies widely in different societies; ranging from $15 to $232. The principle on which this appropriation is made we do not understand; some of the preachers, it would seem, must eat no meat while the world standeth. One of the preachers receives $600; six between $500 and $600; seventeen between $400 and $500; forty-one between $300 and $400; and thirteen between $200 and $300. Of the 120 churches, only 30 had failed to raise the required sum. In some cases the deficiency is small, and again it is heavy, amounting in certain places to the following sums: $186, $85, $99, $75, and $120. On the whole, we are persuaded that the support of the Methodist ministers on the average is fully equal to that of Congregationalists. It is no more, certainly, than they deserve and need."

THE DENOMINATIONAL BUILDING.

The experience of every day deepens our conviction of the importance and feasibility of the proposition of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, to procure in the city of New York a building for the accommodation of its business, which shall also furnish rooms for our Missionary and Tract Societies, together with a Sabbatic Reading Room and Library. That such a building is needed, no one can question who considers the growing character of our Missionary and Publishing operations, and the advantages which would accrue by having a permanent place in which those operations may be carried on. That New York is the location for such a building, must be admitted by every one who will consider that it is the metropolis, morally and religiously, as well as commercially, of our vast country, and that the light which emanates therefrom shines throughout the world. That the Publishing Society is the proper organization to undertake the work, we argue from the consideration that it must always have active agencies in New York, and that its profits are all constitutionally pledged to objects of benevolence. If such a building were provided, there would always be a place in which to hold meetings of the Executive Boards of our benevolent Societies—a place where our already established and growing Sabbath Library could be kept and consulted—a place where all missionary curiosities could be arranged and visited—a place where inquirers after truth in relation to the Sabbath could always find it—a place, in short, consecrated to benevolent operations and the dissemination of truth, where Sabbath-keepers themselves might find pleasure in calling, or might direct their friends who wish to be enlightened in regard to our principles and movements. Such a building as has been proposed would perhaps furnish more room than our operations at present require; and if so, the surplus room might be rented, and the income therefrom would add to the means of enlargement. In whatever light we view the thing—whether as a means of insuring the permanence of our benevolent Societies, or as increasing the facilities to do the good work for which they were organized, or as being an investment from which steady aid to those societies may be derived—we come to the same conclusion, namely, that the building ought to be secured—must be secured.

And we can not think of a nobler object to which money can be appropriated. In contributing for it, we contribute to the cause of Missions, to the circulation of Sabbath Tracts, to the dissemination of truth on all subjects through our periodicals, and to the supply of what has long been demanded—a Sabbatarian Literature. There are some objects for which men are asked to give, about the feasibility of which they can not fail to have doubts, and which are almost certain in a few years to show few or no signs of what has been done. Not so here. The thing is feasible, as is proved by the experience of every religious society that has tried the experiment; and fifty years, or even five hundred years hence, our investment will probably be doing more for the dissemination of truth and the salvation of the world, than it was doing ten years after it was made. It is like building meeting-houses for the present accommodation of worshippers, and to insure the permanent ministrations of religion. What would be thought of a church which, after being properly organized, and continuing to grow for five or ten years, should still entertain no plan to secure for itself a place of worship, but should be content to borrow or hire rooms for that purpose from year to year? We should think its chances of permanence and extensive usefulness were comparatively small. So with the benevolent Societies of a religious denomination; when we see them conducted in such a hap-hazard way, with names perhaps, but with no local habitations, we consider their chances of permanence and extensive usefulness comparatively small. Slight changes, such as death or the revulsions of business are frequently making, might blast existing hopes and expectations, and leave things in chaotic confusion.

In conclusion we will say, that a subscription has been opened for a Seventh-day Baptist Building in New York. In two or three weeks we propose to print it, with the names attached, and to keep the same standing in the Recorder, adding from week to week new subscriptions, until enough is secured to warrant the Society in making a purchase. Meanwhile we invite any who have it in their hearts to help the object, to send their names, stating the amount they wish to subscribe, to the General Agent, Geo. B. Utter, 9 Spruce-st, New York.

After writing the above, our eye fell upon the following letter in the Oswego Palladium, which is worth printing for its own sake, and which we place in this connection to show how others view the matter of buildings for public institutions, and what individuals are occasionally found willing to do to secure them.

Peterboro, July 17, 1853.

Alvin Bronson, James Platt, George H. McWhorter, Henry Fitzburg, Edwin W. Clarke, John B. Edwards, James Brown, De-Witt C. Littlejohn.

Gentlemen: As some of you are aware, I have, for years, entertained the idea of founding a Public Library in the City of Oswego. The time has now arrived for me to act upon this idea.

I appropriate to this object the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000,) and I wish you to be at the pains of expending it. You can draw for it as follows:—

1st March, 1854, for	$5,000
1st June, 1854, for	5,000
1st August, 1854, for	5,000
1st October, 1854, for	5,000
1st December, 1854, for	5,000

It strikes me that it might be well for you to purchase a lot and erect upon it a building, which would serve for other purposes, as well as for the Library. The lot and building might cost, say $15,000 to $20,000. The balance of the $25,000 you could then expend in books; and the rents of that part of the building not devoted to the Library, would furnish means for adding books, from year to year. But all this I leave to your better judgment.

As I have always had more to do with property on the east than on the west side of the river; and as that part of the city has suffered exceedingly from the late fire; and, moreover, as much less has been done for the inhabitants of that part of the city than for the inhabitants of the other; I enjoin that the library be on the east side of the river. My only injunction is, that the privileges and benefits of the library shall always be accessible to the one sex as to the other; and that no person, on account of their race, or complexion, or condition, shall be shut out from these privileges and benefits, or in any degree curtailed of them.

As to the character of the library—I have only to say, that my warm wish is, that no books unfriendly to truth and purity may ever find a place in the library.

With great regard, your friend,
Gerrit Smith.

Baptism—Sunday Desecration—Episcopacy.

Glasgow, July 8th, 1853.

On Sunday evening last, I was privileged with the opportunity of professing my faith by baptism, administered by our Sabbath-keeping brother J. W. Morton, of Plainfield, New Jersey—any more particular account of which will not here be required, as I understand I would be forestalled by a statement from Mr. Gonsalves, now on its way across the Atlantic.

This day's Glasgow Herald contains an advertisement of the first regular Sunday sailing steamer on the Clyde. The steamer "Emperor" has been purchased by persons resolved on continuing to ply during the season to a number of our coast residences on Sunday morning, (returning in the evening,) unless they should be prevented, which they confidently expect they will not be. Decisions in our higher Courts certainly indicate that there is little disposition to put into force some of our old statutes against Sunday desecration. If the present attempt be successfully carried out, and if the boat be well patronized, which it is almost sure to be, not only will additional boats be hereafter put upon the station selected, and other stations taken in addition, but it will probably lead to various other forms of Sunday recreation being opened up, which have hitherto been kept in check by a fear of the laws being put in force. This has, indeed, as we had occasion to notice, been gradually taking place for a length of time; and I may here note, that steamers regularly ply between Dundee and Broughty Ferry—which, although only about two miles, is not "a ferry" in the proper sense of that word. They seem indeed extending Sunday desecration in that quarter; for the Town Council of Dundee have just resolved to open their public Bleaching Green on Sunday evenings in summer to the poorer classes. It is only two or three acres in extent; but as the lightest substance will show how the wind blows, even this indicates a spirit of relaxation. Their fathers would have refused to sanction even this departure from more strict observance. By those who assert that there is divine authority commanding the sanctification of Sunday, all these movements are, of course, viewed with great disapprobation,—not diminished by a sense of the helplessness of their cause. Last month, the Glasgow Examiner newspaper intimated that "a benevolent gentleman has called and stated, that he is taking statistics of cab and omnibus traveling on the Sabbath-day"—meaning the day following the Sabbath, however. His "statistics" may show the amount of such "cab and omnibus traveling," and may establish the fact, that it is largely on the increase; but it will not enable him to present a "Thus saith the Lord" in opposition to it. The London Sunday Observance Society held its annual meeting on Sabbath week, not to recommend its members to return to the Law of the Lord, but to tell how much money they had received, how much they had expended, and how many petitions their party had presented to Parliament against the Sunday opening of the Crytstal Palace as compared with those of their opponents. They have expended £1495, and have liabilities to the amount of £600.

The cause of Episcopacy has suffered through the repeated exposures of the covetousness and bad faith of several of the Bishops. The London Times had lately made the conduct of the Bishop of Salisbury, in these respects, the subject of pointed condemnation. Stung to the quick by the gall of "the Thunderer's" quill, the ecclesiastic dignitary ventured upon a pathetic appeal, in an attempted vindication in the House of Lords. Among sympathizing Bishops and friends, his assertions were received as proofs; but, alas for his fair fame, the Times readily found, in these very statements, the evidence clear and decisive of the charges it had preferred. The old thorn in the Bishops' sides is likely to prick even more severely than it was wont. Episcopal influence succeeded in preventing the return of Mr. Horseman to the House of Commons, in consequence of his frequent exhibition of ecclesiastical abuses; but he has again taken his seat in that House, having been returned recently for Stroud, and it may be presumed that he is not likely to feel more favor toward the objects of his former strictures. PERPETUAL PEACE WITH ENGLAND.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

It has hitherto been the practice of all nations, not excepting the most enlightened and christian, to rely on the sword for the final decision of their controversies; but this war-system, this unchristian, barbarous principle of might as the arbiter of right, the friends of peace would fain supersede by better means for accomplishing the great ends of international justice and security. We would have nations adjust their difficulties in essentially the same way that individuals do theirs—by amicable agreement between themselves, or by reference to a third party as umpire. We ask them to provide for this in their treaties, just as they do for anything else, and agree beforehand to have all future controversies, which they cannot satisfactorily adjust by negotiation, settled in the last resort by some form of arbitration.

This point we have long urged upon the public mind, until we begin at length to gain a favorable hearing from rulers themselves, the men who hold this whole question in their hands. In 1851, Hon. H. S. Foote, of Mississippi, as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations in the U. S. Senate, reported, as their unanimous recommendation, "that it would be proper and desirable for the government of these United States, whenever practicable, to secure, in its treaties with other nations, a provision for referring to the decision of umpires all future misunderstandings that cannot be satisfactorily adjusted by amicable negotiation." There was no time then for further action; and in February, 1853, Hon. J. R. Underwood, of Kentucky, from the same Committee, made a very long and able report, which closed with recommending, "that the Senate advise the President to secure, whenever it may be practicable, a stipulation in all treaties hereafter entered into with other nations, providing for the adjustment of any misunderstanding or controversy that may arise between the contracting parties, by referring the same to the decision of disinterested and impartial arbitrators, to be mutually chosen." Four or five of our State Legislatures—all before whom the subject was properly brought—have recently passed, with great unanimity, resolves strongly in favor of the same measure; and there is good reason to believe, that public opinion, both in England and the United States, would, if duly called forth, sanction and applaud such a precaution against future wars.

Indeed, the Executives of these great nations have both entertained this proposal with strong marks of favor. Our late President, and his accomplished Secretary of State, frankly declared their own readiness, after a careful examination of the subject, to insert such a provision in the treaty pending at the time, but not yet completed, between us and Great Britain. Several years ago, Lord John Russell, then Premier of England, said distinctly to a deputation that brought this measure to his special notice, "if the United States should think proper to make such a proposal, the British Government would take it into their most serious consideration." On receiving the Report of Judge Underwood to our Senate, and learning the favorable disposition of our Executive, the leading friends of peace in England had an interview with their Foreign Secretary, Lord Clarendon, as the result of which, we are assured by a most distinguished member of Parliament, as his 'confident belief, that, if our Government is prepared to insert an arbitration clause in the pending treaties, it will be accepted by theirs.'

Here the matter rests. The treaty, begun last winter at Washington, is ere long to be completed, we understand, in London; and the men now in power will be just as ready as were their predecessors, should the general voice of our people demand it, to insert a stipulation for the adjustment of all future difficulties in the last resort by arbitration instead of the sword. If our Cabinet will just propose such a provision, the British Government will doubtless accept it at once, our Senate will readily confirm it, and thus will be started, under the best possible auspices, a measure likely, if adopted in good faith, to insure perpetual amity between these two great countries, and eventually throughout Christendom and the world; for the vast advantages of such security against war would be sure in time to bring all civilized nations into the measure, as a simple yet effective league of general and permanent peace.

On this subject, as on most others of a like nature, the people of England are far in advance of their government. Few among us know or suspect, for the press does by no means disclose, the full warmth of their kindness towards ourselves; but we speak from personal observation on the spot, and from long correspondence with men who understand well the heart of the English people on this point, when we say, that nine-tenths of them, if not the entire mass, would hail with acclamation the measure we propose as a guaranty of perpetual peace between the two countries. We can hardly name a measure that would be more popular with the masses there, or more sure to be rigidly enforced by public opinion through all future ages.

The importance of such a consummation, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to exaggerate. Well did Mr. Everett lately say before the U. S. Senate, "I do beseech you to let us have twenty-five years at least of peace; and in these twenty-five years, we shall exhibit a spectacle of national prosperity such as the world has never seen on so large a scale." We would fain secure this great boon through all coming ages; and, if peace for only one quarter of a century can work such wonders, what glorious results might we expect from perpetual peace between these two nations?

Let us not forget the special bearings of this question on the spread of Christianity. When war, a few years ago, was seriously threatened between us and England, one of our leading religious newspapers proclaimed its belief, that such a war would probably put back the world's conversion a whole century; and it is certain, that our last war with Great Britain, and even our late war with Mexico, neither of them three years in duration, still sacrificed on both sides more property and more lives than the Church of Christ has in five centuries expended in spreading the gospel among the heathen! England and America, God's chosen pioneers in the world's freedom, improvement and salvation, must continue in peace with each other, or this great work, the crowning glory of our age, will inevitably be arrested in its progress.

What, then, shall be done? Disciples of the Prince of Peace, what will you do? You have told us, what we fully believe, that we must rely for peace on the gospel of peace; and the time has now come to try the safety of such reliance. Is there, in these two leading nations of Christendom, Christianity enough to secure the simple measure we urge as a guaranty, under God, of their perpetual peace? We believe there is, if it were properly called forth; and it would be easy for the pulpit and the press, in a single month, to call it forth in a way that would render the desired result morally certain. Shall it, then, be done? Let our 200 Christian presses, and our 20,000 Christian pulpits, answer this question under a due sense of their responsibility to the God of Peace, and in full view of the vast, incalculable interests for time and eternity suspended on the issue.

What steps we propose to be taken, and what resolutions several ecclesiastical bodies, with commendable alacrity, and entire unanimity, have recently passed on the subject, we will briefly state in another article.

In behalf of the American Peace Society,
Geo. C. Beckwith, Cor. Sec.

Boston, July, 1853.

GERRIT SMITH IN CONGRESS

The election of Gerrit Smith to a seat in the Congress of the United States must be regarded by reformers as a very hopeful sign of the times. That he will find his position there a pleasant one, is not to be expected; and we doubt not that he spoke the truth in saying, after his election, that nothing but a sense of duty would lead him to accept of the office. But having been nobly elected, he is not the man to decline the weighty responsibility thereby devolved upon him, or to modify his principles so as to make the responsibility less weighty. He will be, we doubt not, in Congress, the same uncompromising advocate of whatever he deems to be right, that he has always been in Anti-Slavery or Christian Conventions. Our readers will be glad to read the following account of him, from the pen of Frederick Douglass, who has recently visited him at Peterboro:—

"There is a peculiar charm about that Peterboro cottage. The smiles of Heaven are there. I expected to find Mr. Smith less vigorous in health than I found him, in view of his late indisposition. He is now able to be about, and this week attends at Fulton, the Christian Union meeting. I found him cheerful, but thoughtful, in view of the extraordinary circumstances and duties that await him at the National Capitol. An arduous task is before him. He goes to fill a post of difficulty and danger. He will be an apostle of liberty in the very stronghold of slavery, and almost single-handed, he will have to dispute the pass with the whole phalanx of slavery's chosen men. Paul at Athens, rebuking idolatry, did not stir up a more malignant feeling than will follow the preaching of the pure anti-slavery gospel at Washington. Most distinctly will Mr. Smith deny the legality of slavery. He will strip the vile thing of all gospel, constitution and legal countenance, and will treat it as it ought to be treated—a system of violence and blood, no better than piracy. Murder itself will get as much respect from him as slavery; for, to him, slavery is murder. But Mr. Smith is not only an Abolitionist. He is a land Reformer; and more still, he is now, as he ever has been, a believer in an 'every way righteous civil government,' and is, therefore, in conflict with this government at many other points than its slavery. He is at war with every species of class legislation, and will stand up for eternal justice, wherever and from whatever quarter it may be assailed. A mighty work is before him. He is a temperance man; he goes among wine-bibbers. He is a peace man; he goes to mingle with men of blood. He is a man of prayer; he goes among blasphemers. He is an abolitionist; he goes to meet the traffickers in human blood. He is a gentleman; he goes to confront ruffians. There will be few with whom he will have anything in common, and if, withal, he shall pass through this furnace, heated 'seven times hotter,' and shall come out without the smell of fire upon him, it will only be because the same God reigns now that cared for the Hebrews."

City and Country.—Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, who is now rusticating in the country, closes a letter to the Independent as follows: "When one is young, and not yet entered on life, the heart pants for new things and for excitements. But after one has taken the burden on his back, and lived amidst cares that never rest, but beat upon the shore like an unquiet surf, then nothing is so luxurious as the calm of a country neighborhood. Here he has space for retrospection, a mental state which is almost denied to public men in city life. No man in a city parish, driven by new demands each hour, has leisure to go a gleaning over harvested fields. He must plow again, sow again, reap again. But now, at this distance, and separated from all daily solicitation,s one can review the whole year; and if done with any worthy standard, it can not fail to furnish food for the most earnest reflection, and for the most solemn resolutions or the future."

The Crystal Palace.—Every day adds to the attractions of the Crystal Palace, by furnishing opportunity to unpack and arrange costly foreign wares. The exhibition is still far from being complete, and those who expect to visit it but once should be in no haste. September and October will be favorable months, both on the score of weather and the condition of the Palace.

Sunday in France.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Times, writing from France, thus describes the occupations of the inhabitants at Nismes on the Sunday previous to the date of his letter:—

"The bull-fight in the amphitheatre at Nismes took place last Sunday, according to the announcement. Twenty-five thousand persons witnessed the spectacle. The receipts were over 15,000 francs. The municipal authorities had published that no bull should be killed in the arena; but the Espada, who considered his honor impugned by the escape of an animal that he had wounded, insisted that he be brought back to receive his coup de grace. The audience supported his claim, and the immolation took place. Another bull, mortally wounded, but unable to die, dragged his lacerated body, for half an hour, over the arena, staining the sand with blood as he went. This horrible spectacle so painfully impressed the public, that they regretted having opposed the decision of the authorities. They now rose to request the Municitpality to execute in future its order, and to prohibit these sports from ending fatally. About a dozen women fainted, it is said. To-day, Sunday, another fight takes place, but without the tragic denouement."

Mr. Oncken, the German Baptist Apostle.—In the Christian Watchman and Reflector of last week we find a letter from Dr. Babcock, dated June 16, in which he says:—

"I spent several hours to-day with our dear afflicted brother Oncken, and bore to him the first letter he has received from his home since the tidings of his injury, and the merciful preservation of his life, had reached them. The warmth of pious gratitude evinced by his children and the church in Hamburg was most deeply affecting. 'From death comes life,' said brother Oncken, as, wiping his eyes, he looked up from the letter of his eldest son, who, by this providence, seems to have been constrained to give himself to the Lord forever! A happier man, even in his affliction, I have rarely seen than our esteemed brother. While deeply grieved at being unable, with safety, as his physicians have decided, to meet the successive appointments which had been made for him, he falls back with holy equanimity upon the Divine ordering, and says, 'The will of the Lord be done!' One month of entire repose has been deemed indispensable, after which experiment his future course will be decided on."

A Church Debt Paid.—The following speech of Rev. Mr. Hill, pastor of the First Baptist Church in Washington, preceded the sermon on a recent Sunday. No doubt it gave zest to all the other exercises:—

"I hold in my hand a note for fifteen hundred dollars, given by the trustees of this church, the payment of which was secured by a deed of trust on this church building and lot. I have the pleasure to inform you now, that on the first day of this month, this debt was paid, the note has been surrendered, the deed of release has been received and recorded, and you shall never again hear of this old debt."

He then tore up the note in the presence of the congregation, and thanked all those friends, at home and abroad, who had assisted in effecting this happy result, and congratulated the church on being able to stand erect in the presence of all men, owing no man a single cent. The occasion was improved by a faithful and affectionate discourse from the words "owe no man anything, but to love one another."

A Blackguard Rebuked.—During the recent debate on Slavery in the New School Presbyterian General Assembly, the learned, venerable, and highly esteemed Rev. John Monteith, of Michigan, took the floor, and, says The Religious Recorder,

"While the venerable gentleman was speaking, Rev. John C. Smith, of Washington, interrupted him by suggesting to the Moderator to appoint a committee to keep members awake, that they might not lose the benefit of the Rev. gentleman's argument. This was meant to raise a laugh, but the circumstances of the exceeding disparity of age between the gentlemen, the mild and emphatic frown of the Moderator, and the expressive disgust that pervaded the house, members and all, converted the anticipated merriment into a rebuke, which the 'young man' must have felt, we think, creeping along every fibre of his body."

"Whole World's Temperance Convention."—At a preliminary meeting of the friends of Temperance, held in New York last May, to make arrangements for a World's Temperance Convention, certain women, who thought themselves excluded, retired from the meeting, declaring it "false both to the letter and the spirit of the call." These women, with a large number of other men and women, have issued a call for what they denominate a "Whole World's Temperance Convention," to meet in New York on Thursday and Friday, September 1st and 2d, 1853, to consider the present needs of the Temperance Reform.

The Legislature of New York adjourned last week, after passing all of the Supply and Tax Bills required by the State Administration. The appropriations for Charitable Institutions were lost, and we believe the Railroad Accident Bill also was lost in the Senate. The Prohibitory Liquor Bill was voted down by 56 noes to 54 ayes. The impeachment of Canal Commissioner Mather was not completed, but a Committee was appointed to prosecute the case, the general stamp of which is regarded as nearly deciding the matter against the Commissioner.

Sunday Passenger Train Stopped.—The Sunday evening mail train between New York and Boston has up to the present time carried passengers as well as the mails. The New Haven Railroad, however, has recently given notice that henceforth it will take no passengers in that train.

The Wesleyans of Great Britain still report a decline of numbers. From the returns made at the recent district meetings of this body, it appears that it will be compelled to report a decrease at least 15,000 members.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A strong effort is now being made among the Presbyterians of Philadelphia to promote the cause of church-extension within the county limits. From a report in the Presbyterian of a meeting recently held on the subject, we gather that the county, having by the recent census a population of 406,000, the church accommodation of all kinds is 185-500 sittings, thus leaving a balance of 221,000 yet unprovided for, if every church in the city were crowded. Supposing 100,000 of these to be aged, invalids, infants, and others, who could not attend, there is a balance of 121,500 persons for whom no place of worship is provided. The Old School Presbyterians have now twenty-three church organizations, and propose to raise twenty thousand dollars during the current year for the purpose of adding to the number.

There are in the United States, it is said, 27 Baptist colleges and theological seminaries, the total value of property of which is estimated at $2,900,000. During the last five years, the sums subscribed on their behalf amounted to $1,515,000. The subscriptions to Columbian College, D. C., during that period, amount to $40,000, and the value of its property is set down as $80,000, and that of Richmond College, Va., at $120,000, of which $100,000 have been subscribed within five years.

The Haverhill Gazette says that the Congregational society in West Haverhill has contributed the present year, for purposes connected with the welfare of the society and the support of the gospel, a sum falling but a few dollars short of $5,000, and this from a property on the books of the assessors of less than $100,000, or more than five per cent. on the valuation.

The Rev. Dr. Achilli, so well known to fame, has arrived in New York from London. He is accompanied by his lady, child, and a servant.

The corner stone of the First Protestant church in New Mexico was laid at Santa Fe, with appropriate religious ceremonies, May 21.

Rev. Levi S. Jass, late Protestant Episcopal Bishop of North Carolina, is about to enter the Roman Catholic priesthood.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE AND ITS RESULTS.—One of our cotemporaries closes a notice of the inauguration of the Crystal Palace with the following glance at some of its probable results: "One result of this great show will be to make us better acquainted with other nations. We shall see them here in their works as in a glass. We shall be drawn towards them too with respect and sympathy. Finding that they have the same human feelings as ourselves, we shall feel anew the tie of brotherhood. Another result will be, we think, to take the edge off from our national self-esteem somewhat. No one can stand in the Crystal Palace, and pass from the American to the European quarters, without having the conviction forced upon him, that we are behind those over the water in many of the nicer and finer arts, in those especially which demand patience and taste. And then still another result of this exhibition will be to apply a new stimulant to the expensive fashionableness of our wealthier classes. A competition of purses for the richest plate and the most elaborate wares of European workshops will very likely be set on foot, and a new impulse given to the love of glitter and display."

THE HUDSON RIVER CATASTROPHE.—A verdict has been given by the Coroner's Jury in the case of the persons who died from injuries received by the collision of the Steamer Empire and the sloop Gen. Livingston. After recapitulating the facts, they say:—

"The Jury, after as full an investigation as time and circumstances would admit, believe that said collision was caused by gross carelessness in the management of the sloop, and the want, perhaps, of proper vigilance on the part of the pilots of the steamboat. The collision occurred on a night, or morning, not very dark, at a point in the River of over a mile in width, above Hampton Point; the steamboat going down, the sloop coming up—tide ebb, and a fresh breeze from the south, or west of south. And it seems extraordinary that vessels, both obedient to their rudders, should have come in contact. It was in evidence, that the men in charge of the sloop had little experience in the navigation of vessels. Yet it does not appear that they caused the collision through any design or ill-will toward the steamboat, nor does it appear that the pilots of the steamboat had any design, pique, or ill-will toward the sloop, but both seem to have been misled by misapprehension as to the course of the other, when too late to avert collision.

MICHIGAN UNIVERSITY.—The commencement of the State University at Ann Arbor, occurred on the 29th ult. Ten young men delivered orations. There are two distinct departments and two faculties organized, that of Science, Literature, and the Arts, and that of Medicine. Rev. Dr. Tappan, the Chancellor and Professor of Natural Philosophy and Mathematics, is now in Europe studying the plans of the highest Universities, and preparing himself to model the College, &c., at Ann Arbor accordingly. The design is eventually to open courses of lectures to accommodate those who have graduated there or elsewhere, and for the benefit of any others who have prepared themselves to reap the advantages of such a grade of instruction. Being on the plan of the educational system of Germany and some other European countries, these lectures will form a department distinct from the College. It will take years to mature such a system in Michigan.

GOODS FOR THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—Goods for exhibition at the Crystal Palace continue to arrive. The American schooner Moses Taylor, from Rotterdam, arrived July 19, brings three cases, of which there is one containing an interesting collection of Gold, Silver and Copper Coins, sent from the Hague. Steamer Franklin, from Havre, arrived July 19, brought eight cases, of which one contains a large Carpet, representing a forest, &c., worth upwards of 15,000 francs, from Paris. Austrian ship Argiro, Seculovich, from Trieste, arrived July 21, had on board 19 packages, of which 12 cases contain Marble work, one Marble Bust of Christ, some Arms, Oil Paintings, &c. Total value about 5,000 francs.

European News.

We have one week later news from Europe, but nothing of decisive importance.

The probability of war increases in Europe. The passage of the Moldavian frontier by Russian troops, has beyond doubt actually taken place, and the manifesto of the Czar to the Russian people, indicates a disposition on his part to commence a crusade against Turkey. On the other hand, there is no reason to suppose that the order given to the English and French fleets to pass the Dardanelles and go up the Bosphorus when ordered by the Ambassadors of those nations, have been rescinded. We may then conclude that these hostile steps have already been taken on both sides, and that so far war has begun. But it is by no means sure that it will go further at present. With the Russians in the Principalities and the Allies at Constantinople, negotiation is pretty certain to be resorted to again.

The Neapolitans are much afraid that war in the East will awaken a new revolution in Italy.

Constantinople letters state that riots had occurred at Smyrna, owing to the arrest of an emissary of Kossuth. In retaliation, Austrian officers were assassinated. The Austrian Consulate was protected by a volunteer corps of Austrians.

Mrs. Stowe has gone to Geneva, where she will reside some time.

The Royal Institution for the Preservation of Life from Shipwreck, have voted a premium to Robert Sands, (colored,) for his exertions at the wreck of the ship William and Mary.

The following is the Manifesto of Nicholas, referred to above, which was published in London papers of July 6:—

"By the grace of God;

"We, Nicholas I.,

"Emperor and Autocrat of all the Russias and Czar of Poland, &c., &c., &c.,

"Inform all people.

"Be it known to our beloved and faithful subjects,

"The defense of our faith has always been the sacred duty of our blessed ancestors.

"From the day it pleased the Almighty to place me on the throne of our fathers, the maintenance of the holy obligations with which it is inseparably connected, has been the object of our constant care and attention; these, acting on the groundwork of the famous treaty of Kainadjir, which subsequent solemn treaties with the Ottoman Porte have fully confirmed, have ever been directed toward upholding the rights of our Church.

"But to our extreme grief, in latter times, notwithstanding all our efforts to defend the inviolability of the rights and privileges of our orthodox church, numerous willful acts of the Ottoman Porte have infringed upon these rights, and threaten finally the entire overthrow of all that ancient discipline so precious to orthodoxy.

"All our efforts to restrain the Porte from such acts have proved in vain, and even the word of the Sultan, solemnly given us by himself, was soon faithlessly broken.

"Having exhausted all means of conviction, and having in vain tried all the means by which our just claims could be peaceably adjusted, we have deemed it indispensable to move our armies into the provinces on the Danube, in order that the Porte may see to what her stubborness may lead.

"But even now, we have no intention of commencing war; in occupying those provinces, we wish to hold a sufficient pledge to guarantee for ourselves the reëstablishment of our rights under any circumstances whatever.

"We do not seek for conquests: Russia does not require them. We seek to vindicate those rights which have been so openly violated.

"We are even yet ready to stop the movements of our armies, if the Ottoman Porte will bind itself solemnly to respect the inviolability of the Orthodox Church; but if obstinacy and blindness will it otherwise, then, calling God to our aid, we leave it to Him to decide our quarrel, and in full confidence in the right hand of the Almighty, we shall move forward on behalf of the orthodox faith.

"Given at Peterhoff on the 14th (26th) day of June, in the year of the birth of Christ 1853, and of our reign the 28th.

"Sealed at the Senate in St. Petersburg on the 14th (26th) June, 1853.

"To the original of this document the own hand of his Majesty is signed. "NIKOLAI."

Four Days Later.

Since the above was in type, we have received, by the steamer Arctic, four days later news, being to July 13th.

Of course the difficulty between Russia and Turkey is the prominent topic of discussion. Matters appear to be becoming more complicated. On the one hand, the Emperor of Russia expressly and formally disclaims all ideas of territorial aggrandizement in entering the Danubian principalities. On the other hand, France and England have offered their mediation to settle the difficulty. At the same time, Austria has demanded of Turkey five millions of piasters, or $200,000, by way of indemnity to sundry Austrian subjects who have been damaged by Turkish officials and mobs, and with this the cession of Kleck and Sattorina on the Adriatic.

The French are engaged in conspiracies for the destruction of their Emperor.

In Spain another change of Ministry is on foot.

Mr. Peabody, the philanthropic American banker, was dangerously ill some days ago with suppressed gout.

John Sinclair, Archdeacon of Middlesex, the metropolitan county of England, has been appointed by the English Bishops to return the recent visit of the American Episcopalian Clergymen to England.

The grandest new Church built in London is erecting by the Latter Day Saints, Lord Sidmouth, and Mr. Drummond, M. P., &c. &c. They so completely expect the world to end in 1864, that they only take a lease of the ground till then.

ABIJAH LARNED.—This somewhat noted burglar died on Monday, the 11th inst. His career had been an eventful one, and his biography would make a large and interesting volume. He was a daring thief, and always operated on a large scale. He seldom found any game worth his attention less than a Bank, and locks and bars were ineffectual preventatives against his admission to these institutions when he had resolved to force them. He often managed to compound his crimes with the Bank Managers, who always preferred to take back a share of the stolen treasure and let the thief go "unwhipt of justice." He was arrested in Rochester some three years or more ago, and taken to Vermont to stand trial for robbing a Bank. He managed, however, to escape conviction there, but was afterward brought to Cooperstown, in this State, and was there convicted of robbing the Otsego Bank, and sent to State Prison. Since his confinement he has failed rapidly of consumption, and died the day after he had been pardoned out of the Auburn Prison by the Governor. His age was 37 years. The Cooperstown Journal says a letter received at that place, states that he made a profession of religion before his death, and was received into the communion of the Episcopal Church. He denied any participation in the robbery of the Otsego County Bank.

Catastrophe at Niagara Falls.

On the 18th inst., three men, belonging to a scow which came down the river, got into a skiff alongside the scow, and it is supposed fell asleep, when the boat got separated from the scow, and was hurried by the current with fearful rapidity toward the Falls. Two of the men, one named Andrew Hannaman, the other a stranger, were hurled at once over the foaming sheet; the third, Joseph Able, caught hold of a stump in his fearful passage, and clung to it. What followed is thus described by a letter from Niagara Falls, dated Tuesday, July 19:—

So terrible a scene as we witnessed not an hour since, may we never be doomed to see again! All day, in the eager gaze of thousands lining the shore, every human means was used to rescue the poor young man, still clinging to his perch in the roaring waters. First the small boat was let down; it went to pieces immediately; then the life boat from Buffalo gallantly rode the waves, but became entangled and sank in the effort to extricate it. Another reached the log; a shout was raised—a young man sprang in and commenced bailing and loading her with ballast; this too stuck fast; and finally a raft was let down, for which he abandoned the log, and was slowly drawn upwards. The suspense became almost breathless, as all eyes were fixed on the poor youth, on his knees, bravely securing himself by lashing his legs to the raft, and waiting with upturned face the final efforts of his friends. Provisions were sent again and again, but failed to reach him. The raft was drawn some distance westward, but lodged against the rocks, soon defied further effort to bring it up; a ferry-boat was then launched and cautiously lowered. The interest was brought to its greatest intensity—for all perceived this was the crisis; and with some apprehension we saw that the youth had unlashed himself and stood on his feet ready to grapple with the approaching boat. Hope revived in his eager look—and the large characters written in German for his encouragement on one of the houses—"We will save you"—seemed to have new significance. Alas! for him—what seemed safety was destined to be his destruction! The boat struck the raft and loosened it; the shock knocked the poor fellow overboard; he snatched in vain at the ropes; the mighty torrent swept him like lightning past the island, which some hoped he might yet gain; he struggled, and sprang partly out of the water even at the verge of the Falls. A cry of horror rose from the multitude, and there was a general rush toward the spot where he was seeing going over. It was said that his mother was on shore, and his brother had just arrived in the evening train from Buffalo.

MEETING OF THE STATE TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.—The Annual Meeting of the New York State Teachers' Association will be held at Rochester on Tuesday, the 2d day of August, and will continue three days.

All the Teachers of the State, as well as the friends of Education and Teachers from other States, are respectfully invited to attend and to take part in the exercises.

Addresses will be delivered by distinguished Lecturers, and several subjects connected with the interests of Education will be discussed.

The Committee of Arrangements at Rochester have announced that the female Teachers will be received as guests.

We regret that we are not yet able to announce, that the Railroads have this year extended the usual courtesy of using excursion tickets for this Convention, but we hope that so deserved a compliment to those who are devoting themselves to the cause of Education, and at so low a remuneration, may yet be paid.

SUMMARY.

Capt. Amos Hopkins, of brig Florence, of Surry, Me., publishes a card in the Boston Post, to the effect that he sailed from Wilmington, N. C., June 22, for Boston; that at 4 o'clock A. M., July 10, off Nantucket, he discovered a negro on board, supposed to be a runaway slave, of whose presence on board neither he nor his mate had any previous knowledge; that he arrived in Boston Sunday, July 17, and anchored in the stream; that on Monday morning he came on shore, leaving instructions with the mate to keep the negro until he returned on board; but that while he was on shore telegraphing to Wilmington, N. C., and consulting the District Attorney, a "mob of men, some of them colored," came on board, and, against the protestations of the mate, took the negro away.

On the 15th inst., Mr. Jeremiah Butterfield, formerly of Cincinnati, died at his residence in Ross township, Butler County, Ohio. The deceased was in his seventy-eighth year. The streets of Cincinnati were surveyed and laid out by Israel Ludlow, Esq., in 1790, and Mr. Butterfield, then a mere youth, carried the chain. He had lived to see the city he helped to lay out become the habitation of 160,000 souls. The world may be defied to show such a parallel of city increase during the lifetime of one individual as this exhibits.

Samuel Brown, of Whitney Co., Ia., on the 19th ult., while working in a well, at the depth of twenty-four feet, struck through a rock which let out a stream of water and gas. The gas instantly commenced blowing off, much resembling the noise made by the letting off of steam. It continued for some minutes violently, then gradually abated. Shortly after it commenced, he called for the men at the windlas to draw him up, but before reaching the top he was suffocated, fell and expired.

The Cherokee Advocate, published at Tumequoh, Cherokee Nation, announces the death of Richard Taylor, Second Chief of the Cherokee Nation. He died on the 19th ult., after a long and painful illness. Mr. Taylor, as we learn from The Advocate, was the grandson of Capt. Taylor, of the British Army, and from his youth has been more or less engaged in public or official capacities—as United States Interpreter, Delegate in behalf of his Nation to the Federal Government on various occasions, a member of the National Committee, Executive Councillor, and two years since, by the voice of his countrymen, he was elected Second Chief of the Cherokee Nation. He was a Captain of a Company of Cherokees under Gen. Jackson in the Creek war. At the time of his death he was a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which he had been a worthy and exemplary member for many years.

It is said that the Hotels of New York far surpass anything in the form of public houses in the world in extent and luxury; and every year develops new improvements and witnesses new houses transcending all former efforts. The latest candidate for public favor is the Prescott House, corner of Broadway and Spring-st. The spectator, on entering this magnificent Hotel, experiences a pleasurable astonishment at the splendid mosaic pavement, forming the whole of the first floor. The walls are decorated in the most artistic style, by representations of the various costumes worn during the reign of Louis XIV. The effect of these is hightened by rich fresco paintings. As seen from the entrance, the magnificent ceiling may be regarded as a miracle of art.

The large steam-boiler in the extensive foundry of John R. Pratt, Esq., Nos. 60 and 62 Attorney-st., N. Y., collapsed a few minutes before 1 o'clock, July 19, just as the workmen were returning from dinner, blowing the rear building of the premises into Ridge-st., frightfully scalding the engineer and three workmen, and fracturing the skull of a grocer who was sitting upon his front stoop in Ridge-st. Upwards of seventy-five hands are constantly employed in the foundry, and had the occurrence taken place a few minutes later, the effects of the catastrophe would probably have been much greater.

A shocking accident occurred on board a canal boat at the Willow Spring, Saratoga Co., on the evening of 4th July inst., which resulted in the death of a woman named Catharine Olds and her infant child of about three months, the immediate cause of which was the explosion of a lamp and can of that murderous compound known as camphene or burning fluid, while she was in the act of pouring it into a lamp near a lighted match.

In the State Prison at Charleston, July 19, a convict named James Wilson attacked a fellow convict named William Adams, and with a case knife, evidently sharpened for the purpose, severed his jugular vein, causing instant death. Not a word passed between them, and no provocation was given by the murdered man. Wilson's sentence of four years imprisonment expired that morning, and he was about being discharged when he committed the murder.

On Monday, the 11th inst., at 8 o'clock, says the Westchester News, the tail of a kite became entangled in the telegraph wires of a line running through Main-st., Portchester. It took fire at its connection with both wires, and the piece between the wires, as well as the tail under the wires, fell to the ground, burned, and went out. This was witnessed by some of the most respectable persons in Portchester, who are willing to substantiate this statement.

The Louisville Courier of July 14, says the party who followed the negroes that escaped from Fleming county on Sunday, came up with them on Friday night, near Rainsboro, O., near fifty-five miles from the river. The negroes, in charge of a white man named Sumner, fired on their pursuers, and a bloody fight ensued, in which the negro man of Mr. McDowell, and a girl of Ed. Pearce, were shot and badly wounded, but succeeded in escaping. Sumner was shot and badly beaten.

A dispatch dated Philadelphia, July 19, 1853, says: A small boat containing three gentlemen and five ladies, bound on a pleasure excursion to Cooper's Creek, was run into and swamped this evening at the Camden Ferry slip by the steamboat Wm. Penn. Three of the ladies, to wit: Mary Gavinni, of Philadelphia; Mary McLaughlin and Margaret Price, of Camden, were drowned. The other ladies and gentlemen were rescued.

Julius A. Hayes, a compositor in the office of the Chicago Tribune, distributed, set up and corrected, in six consecutive days, ending on the 12th of March last, 85,000 ems, the amount of composition each day being as follows: 14,500, 16,250, 11,500, 15,500, 12,000, 15,250. He averaged 11½ hours daily, working time. In four hours and fifty minutes he composed 9,500 ems. His week's wages amounted to $25 50.

The Baltimore Argus states that the friends of the legal prohibition of the liquor traffic in that city are getting up a Convention of Delegates from the various wards, looking to the promotion of their views through the fall elections. The new Constitution of Maryland has greatly improved the number of officials eligible by the people, thus rendering this movement more needful there.

Riley L. Bartholemew, Sheriff of Ashtabula Co, Ohio, left home on the morning of the 3d inst., in a state of insanity, and had not returned at the last advices. He left all his accounts in good order and paid up all his debts. He had for some time labored under a monomaniac delusion that all his family and neighbors had conspired to ruin him.

A letter from Pernambuco, dated June 11, states that the whale ship Charles Mallory, of Mystic, Capt. Hull, homeward bound, with a full cargo of oil, went ashore previous to the 9th of June, a few miles south of St. Augustine, and bilged. The Captain and crew were saved, and the cargo would also be saved.

The St. Lawrence and Atlantic Railroad, from Montreal to the Vermont State Line, is now completed and in operation, and in connection with the Atlantic and St. Lawrence forms a continuous line of railway from Portland to Montreal via the foot of the celebrated White Mountains of New Hampshire.

The advices from Europe by the Franklin of a farther advance in Breadstuffs in England, has stimulated New York market. Flour has advanced again 18¾ and 25 cts. per. bbl., and Wheat 3 and 4 cts. per. bushel.

The Decatur (Marion County, Ill.) Gazette, of the 15th inst., has the following: Herr Alexander met with a most terrible check at Clinton, Dewitt County, last week. In the playing off the hocus-pocus of the magic pistol, it proved to be loaded with balls, and the young man, George Smith, who was to stand up and catch a fictitious ball in his mouth, received the contents of the loaded pistol in his left side, and from the character of the wound and season of the year the probability is that it will terminate his life, leaving a widowed mother, who was solely dependent on him, inconsolable.

Letters received from Singapore to the 15th May, afford shocking details of another of those serial murders on board ship, arising out of the odious Coolie trade. In the present instance, the vessel cut off was a foreign vessel, sailing under the Peruvian flag, but officered by Englishmen, who have fallen victims to the foul trade in human flesh, which has for some few years been carried on from China to South America and the Havanas.

The Batavia (N. Y.) Genesee Whig says that Deputy Sheriff Farnham, who shot two rioters at Pembroke, was arrested on the application of his own friends, and committed to jail, as a precautionary measure to allay the excitement of the other persons in the riot. It repels the idea that there are any circumstances unfavorable to the final acquittal of the officer who in self-defense took the lives of others.

The Anti-Slavery Standard announces that the New York (City) Anti-Slavery Society will celebrate the Anniversary of West India Emancipation, on the 4th of August next, by a steamboat excursion to Flushing and a public meeting in a grove. William Lloyd Garrison and others will address the assembly.

Miss Laura Shields, of Cincinnati, died very suddenly on the evening of July 4th, while dressing for a ball. Not coming down when the gentleman called who was to attend her, her mother went to the door of her room, found her lying upon the floor nearly dressed and dead.

The total number of deaths in New York during the past week was five hundred and twenty-one, which is a decrease of forty-three on the mortality of the previous week. There were two hundred and seventeen deaths among children under one year, and three hundred and fifty-seven among children under ten years. There were twenty-six still-born.

The dwelling house occupied by Rev. Dr. Hooker, in South Windsor, was struck with lightning during the heavy shower on the morning of the 20th inst., at 5 o'clock. Through the protection of a merciful Providence, none of the family were injured, though for the moment their lives were in peril.

The Christian Era very pertinently remarks: "Our young people will do well to remember, that it is no use to pray to God to save them from the cholera, while they swallow inordinate quantities of unripe cherries."

The Bridgeport Bank, of Bridgeport, Conn., was recently swindled out of $1,200 by a shrewd operation on the part of a returned Californian named Geo. H. Duncan, a resident of Waterbury, Vt.

The clipper ship Sovereign of the Seas, Capt. M'Kay, arrived in the Mersey, on Saturday evening, July 2, from New York, having made the run in a shorter time than was ever previously accomplished by a sailing vessel.

During the run of the Sovereign of the Seas from Honolulu to New York, she ran 3,144 miles in ten consecutive days. The highest distance logged in the 24 hours was 429 miles.

An alledged Fugitive Slave, named William Fisher, was given to his claimant in Philadelphia last Sabbath. Subsequent proceedings on a writ of habeas corpus delayed his departure for Maryland, but his fate is probably sealed.

The Beaver Island Mormons have recently had a fight with some of their Gentile neighbors, in which half a dozen persons, mostly Mormons were wounded by bullets.

Fifty thousand dollars worth of property was destroyed by fire in Cincinnati on the 21st inst.

R. TITSWORTH, M. D.,
HOMŒPATHIC PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of TITSWORTHS & DUNN, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH, Jr
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U. S. and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

Information.

The Trustees deem it justice to say, that, having adopted a radical change of policy, by which they relieve the Faculty from all pecuniary responsibility, they design to place the School upon a firm and permanent basis, and give it a character of respectability among the first grade of Academies in our country. Grateful for past favors, they are determined to extend their sphere of usefulness, and thus command a greater degree of respect, and a still more liberal patronage from the public.

Discipline,

It is the policy of our Board to teach young men and young women to govern themselves; while at the same time it is expected that our Faculty will aim, in the most prudent and efficient manner possible, to secure that systematic order in all their exercises, which shall prepare students for the responsible duties of active life. While we cultivate the intellect, it shall be our aim also to develop those nobler faculties of the soul, which shall prepare the young to become useful and influential members of society.

Terms.

Tuition, which must be settled strictly in advance, is as follows:—

Primary course, per term,	$3 00
Middle course,	4 00
Advanced course,	5 00
Incidentals,	50
Extras.
Chemical Experiments,	1 00
Penciling,	1 00
Monochromatic Painting,	3 00
Oil Painting,	5 00
Penmanship and Stationery,	50
Piano Music,	8 00
Use of Instrument,	2 00

Vocal Music as a regular study will be taught by Prof. Jones, to such as desire it. Tuition, $1 00.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the first term, and at the middle of the second, and will continue seven weeks. Tuition, $2 50.

Room rent per term, $1 75; Board in families, $1 25 and $1 50; in Clubs, 60 and 90 cents.

N. B.—Parents are cautioned against supplying children with too much pocket money. The Principal will act as fiscal guardian for such as desire it.

JAMES R. IRISH, President.
JASON B. WELLS, Secretary.

Miscellaneous.

From the Watertown (N. Y.) Journal.

A Peep into the Wilderness.

To gratify a long-standing desire to inspect the novelties of that large and almost unexplored region known as the New York Wilderness, which covers a very considerable portion of the State, almost at its center, we started on a tour, in company with two others. We traveled some sixty miles into the Forest, saw perhaps twenty beautiful Lakes and an innumerable number of Mountains, which present together some of the loveliest and grandest scenery in the world. These comprised the far-famed Raquette Lake and the noble Blue Mountain, next to the highest point of land in the State.

Leaving Watertown early in the morning, we reached Fenton's, on John Brown's Tract, forty-five miles distant, just at night fall. Fenton is an honest and vigorous old pioneer, whose hospitality and good cheer are ever proverbial with those who have had the pleasure of trying them. After luxuriating on the palatable things set before us by the good lady, and laying our plans for the morrow, we listened to the experience of the old gentleman in the forest, and learned many facts in relation to the "life and adventures" of that portion of country called John Brown's Tract, so widely known and so intimately associated with the marvelous.

"The Tract," as it is designated by the hunters and fishermen who frequent it, lies in Herkimer and Lewis Counties, about ten miles from the outside settlements of the latter, and in the direction we went, there is a good road to travel over. John Brown, a gentleman of Providence, was the original proprietor of this part of the New York Wilderness, for which he gave, it is said, a ship's cargo of tea. He purchased it some time near the year 1800, and since then he and others have made several unsuccessful efforts to establish settlements, but to this day there are probably less than a dozen families living there. One of these settlements was commenced on Beaver River, in 1827, with ten or twelve families, but finally all left except the Fentons. One effort at settlement was made in another place, by a Prussian named Harrissoff, a son-in-law of Brown's. It is said that he expressed a determination to establish a settlement or a grave. He was disappointed in his efforts to carry out the first object of his resolution, but established a grave by shooting himself to be placed therein.

John Brown's tract is not as large as is generally supposed. Most people imagine that it covers the greater portion of the New York Wilderness, but the idea is wrong. It covers only eight townships, nearly seven miles square, which contain about 230,000 acres. Beyond the Tract, towards Lake Champlain, lie full seventy miles of forest, that has scarce ever echoed even the sound of an axe; the whole Wilderness contains 4,500,000 acres. The eight townships were christened by their proprietor with names of very high moral signification; they were called Industry, Enterprise, Perseverance, Unanimity, Frugality, Sobriety, Economy, and Regularity. It seemed a desire to make the wild as attractive to honest men as possible. But it would not avail; civilization was averse to driving the wolves from this locality, and to this day they are "left alone in their glory." We can hardly understand the cause of this backwardness in the settlement of these lands. There is on the Tract much good soil, which would clear well and make a fine grazing country. The timber is often found in large bodies of the kinds denoting strength of land, and the best of water runs in the brooks that babble their unceasing songs. A man can go farther and find a worse country to settle in than John Brown's Tract.

After enjoying a good night's rest, we sailed out in the morning on a trouting excursion, desiring to give our horses a day's rest before performing the trip to Raquette Lake, the next point of our destination, a distance of thirty-five miles. The most of our trouting was done at Crooked Lake, a small body of water a mile and a half from "No. 4." The lake on Beaver River, near Fenton's, which takes its name from lying in township No. 4 of Brown's Tract No. 4, also affords some very good fishing for speckled trout. Our success was principally confined to one member of our party. His good luck had so winning an effect that it finally seduced him from the design of going further on, and he concluded to remain at No. 4, for the purpose, as he argued, of giving a fair exhibition of piscatorial plunder on our return home. And here we would remark, that those who wish to partake of an easy or modified form of a trip into the wilderness, and enjoy very good fishing sport, can gratify themselves by a visit to No. 4—stopping at Fenton's, and laying contributions on the lakes near by. Parties with ladies frequently visit this point, and we know of no place better calculated as a resort for parties of pleasure. You have the essentials of fine scenery, good fishing, and the best of fare.

Early on the morning of our third day out, having packed our wagon, we started, with one of our party, for Raquette Lake, thirty-five miles straight into the woods. George Fenton accompanied us as guide, and a better woodsman, or more faithful, reliable, and agreeable pilot, one cannot entrust himself with. His patience and endurance were often put to the test during our tramp, and he always acquitted himself in the most commendable manner. Thanks to him for our success in accomplishing a great deal in a short space of time.

There is a very tolerable wagon-road from No. 4 to Raquette Lake, and a good team, with a stout vehicle and careful driving, can pass over it in a day with little difficulty, carrying no load but necessary baggage and the man driving. This road runs through the entire wilderness to Lake Champlain. It was surveyed and cut out in accordance with an act of the Legislature, and the expense was defrayed by a tax on the lands for ten miles each side. The road was laid out by N. J. Beach and N. Ingerson, and is exceedingly well done—the most favorable localities having been selected. The soil along the route is not so good as that of John Brown's Tract, much of it being of a light hemlock muck. There are numerous plateaus, however, that contain very good lands—clay and sandy loam.

Two-thirds of the way from No. 4 to Raquette, we found two shanties built by the Messrs. Constables, of New York, who make a practice of visiting Raquette Lake with a party of ladies and gentlemen every season. These shanties are found serviceable by those who cannot make the journey through in one day. Six miles from Raquette, the road strikes through Beach's Lake, and runs along the shore for 2½ miles, presenting a romantic drive—the lake on one side and some very respectable mountains on the other. By the side of this lake Dr. Brandreth and another gentleman of New York, have erected a very comfortable log house, on a tract of land purchased by them. They are about building another, and design spending a portion of the summer there with a party of ladies. Beach's Lake we should judge to be between six and seven miles long, and from two to three wide. It takes its name from an old fisherman living on Raquette Lake. Salmon trout can be taken in large quantities from Beach's Lake. It is a very fine body of water, and affords a pleasant place of resort.

At six in the evening, after a long day's tramp, our eyes were gladdened by a sight of the noble Raquette Lake; the gentle ripple over her fair face seemed like a smile of coquettish innocence, as she tried to appear all unconscious of her own magnificence. We found on the shore a good shanty, occupied by two brothers, named Eldridge, who keep provisions, boats, and fishing tackle, for the accommodation of visitors. They are both very attentive and obliging men. After fixing a shade for our horses, and laying down a bed of boughs, we ate our supper, and found ourselves but little the worse for fatigue from our day's work. We still had music in our souls, and to gratify it we had some new and novel performances on an old bugle that we found stuck in one of the rafters. The echoes floated over the waters and danced among the hills; but it may be proper to state, that there was some question in regard to the quality of the music. Our companion suggested the singular idea, that it would probably sound best in a place where it couldn't be heard.

Next morning, a ride on the lake in going out after salmon trout gave us an opportunity to appreciate more fully its extent and glorious scenery. Lofty mountains all around covered with various-hued foliage, little green islands here and there, the blue sky above, and the clear water beneath—all combine to make up pictures the fairest and most pleasing the eye can rest on.

Raquette Lake lies in the northern part of Hamilton County. It is the king of the waters in the New York Wilderness. It is divided into three bodies, separated by "gaps," and as you row from one into the other, not knowing the peculiar conformation of the lake, there appears suddenly before you an unlooked-for sea. In its longest place, Raquette Lake is twelve miles, and its width, running through the gaps, must be quite seven miles. It is at so high an altitude that heavy storms often take place upon it, and although we saw it presenting a placid appearance, we were told that sometimes it wears a most furious aspect.

There are now four occupied habitations on the shores of the lake. Two of the residents, named Beach and Wood, have lived in this isolated place for 15 years. Beach bears the frost of some 70 winters on his head, and is still hale and vigorous. We saw him the morning we were fishing take in a trout which we were told weighed 12 pounds, and his arms flew up and down, hauling in his line, with a sprightliness that might belong to a youth of 20. Misfortunes and consequent misanthropy, it is said, induced him to seek a home in this wild region. He has opulent friends living near Albany, and intends making them a visit the coming autumn. Wood, who occupies a shanty near Beach's, is a man of fewer years but less capable of labor. A few years since he had the misfortune to freeze both feet, so that he was obliged to have them amputated. He now stumps about upon his knees, and in this way he will do a journey of 10 or 12 miles a day. Originally he and Beach bought 25 acres of land and lived together, but "domestic difficulties" induced them to dissolve; so they divided their acres, and now live separate. They have still one interest in common, however, and that is the protection of an old grey eagle, whose home in a lofty pine hard by their shanties, has been coëxistent with their own. We saw this venerable bird taking an airing high up in the heavens, but the act of pointing even an unloaded gun toward it would have been considered by our two veteran foresters as the crowning of crime.

We had allotted one-half day to fishing for the noble salmon trout that inhabit these waters. During that time we took from thirty to forty weight. The heaviest one caught weighed six pounds. They have been taken weighing as high as thirty. The manner of capturing them is peculiar. Buoys are first set in water, from thirty to fifty feet deep. Then a quantity of the small shore-fish are caught, cut up, and thrown around the buoys—half a bushel to a place. This induces the trout to gather at one spot. A while after this baiting process, a boat is fastened to the buoy, and the lines are thrown out, to each one of which are attached a hook baited with fish, and a heavy plummet. The line is sunk down until the lead strikes the bottom, and then it is pulled up a foot or so, and with the hand kept moving slowly up and down. You feel a nibble, and jerk upon the line, and keep pulling, being careful not to give the fish any "slack" until you get it into the boat. This is the process of catching. When the trout is properly cooked there will be no instructions needed in eating it, for it will be found one of the finest flavored fish in the world.

After dinner we prepared ourselves for our journey to the Blue Mountain. The distance from Eldridge's to the foot of the mountain is sixteen miles—the point we desired to make before night. Our route lay across Raquette Lake, and thence up the Eastern Inlet, or Marion River, generally pursuing a north-easterly course. Having a light boat, and George being equivalent to a small steam engine as a propelling power, we soon glided into the Marion River. This stream connects Raquette Lake with the one at the foot of the most tortuous, zigzag rivers we ever saw. Seen from a high ground it looks as though it were trying to tie itself up into "bowknots." The ground through which this stream runs for the first four miles is a wide marsh, and this accounts for its serpentile peculiarity. Two or three miles up the river we met a return party, with whom we exchanged salutations, more hearty than ceremonious. With them was Mitchell, a noted Indian guide, and probably better acquainted with New York wilderness than any other man.

Four miles up the river we found the Rapids, which makes the operation of "carrying" necessary, for a distance of a quarter of a mile. So we unloaded, and rigged up both boat and contents into a shape for shouldering. The boat constituted George's load. He puts a "neck-yoke" between the oar locks, ends the boat up against a tree, gets his stout shoulders under, and thus, with the boat turned over his head, marches off—looking like a huge porpoise sailing among the trees. At the head of the Rapids we soon got into boating, shape and in a short time emerged from the woods, and rowed out into a small lake of charming loveliness, which lay so quietly that it seemed to have gone to sleep here among the hills. We could now occasionally get glances at the Blue Mountain—its crest describing the exact shape of the back and head of a monster elephant. Two miles and a half took us across the lake and into the inlet. The stream here meanders for some fifty rods through a grove of alders which overarch the traveler from the green banks, making the little scene perfectly bewitching.

We soon entered and passed over the middle one of the Blue Mountain Lakes, as this chain is now called. It is a little smaller than the first, but the scenery about it is somewhat finer, as you get a nearer view of the mountain. Passing into the inlet again, we soon struck out upon the lake which heads the waters of the New York Wilderness. And now the old Blue Monntain loomed before us in all his towering glory, four thousand feet above the lake which laves its base. The last rays of the setting sun were resting on its brow, seeming to place there a golden and glorious crown. We approached the mountain across the lake, for two miles, with rapt silence. There was the beauty of one of the fairest lakes in the world, and the grandeur of the mountain, to enchant us. We finally struck the shore of the lake, just in time to find our shanty while daylight lasted. After preparing supper, arranging a couch, and smoking our cigars, we went to an early rest, to fit ourselves for the fatigues of the morrow.

The next morning we arose at day-break to get ready for ascending the mountain, as it was necessary for us to go up and come down in time to reach Eldridge's the coming evening. We started at 6, with four miles before us. The ascent, although fatiguing, is not difficult. You have blazed trees to follow, so that there is no trouble about finding the way, and there are no heavy pitches to climb over Good traveling for two hours and a half brought us to the top, but, much to our regret, we found it enveloped in clouds, and their moisture kept our clothes entirely soaked. We built a fire to dry them, and waited there till nine o'clock. This was the period to which we had limited our stay on the mountain, but we concluded then to wait an hour longer. We found plenty of snow to convert into water, and ate a hearty lunch. Ten o'clock came, and we almost despaired of seeing it clear off that day; but again extended our time of tarrying until eleven, but eleven o'clock came, and with it no prospect for the better. One of us went up the highest tree on the mountain, but saw no signs of clearing off. However, it was so hard to go down without accomplishing the object of our visit, that we finally concluded to wait till twelve. It seemed impossible that we were ordained to be disappointed, after the hard labor we had undergone. Twelve o'clock came, and there appeared to be more light among the trees. Clouds came over us less frequent and less dense. We swung our hats, and thought we could coax up the least sign of a shadow. The point of look-out was again sought. The winds were high, and the clouds were playing around like wild coursers. At length we caught view of a mountain not far distant, and we gave it our hearty cheers. The clouds closed up again, and again broke away, giving us a wider view than before. Our hope now rose to a pitch that foresaw success to our labors. There seemed to be a battle raging below us between the clouds and the winds—now charging, now gaining ground, and then retreating. Our prayers were for the success of the winds, although the fierce gusts shook our delicate resting place in the top of a tall cedar, like a reed. Sometimes the success of the winds would be in one direction, giving us at each time a sight of lakes and mountains beautiful and grand. The mountains were clothed in foliage of various hues. Some places would appear dark, some green, some golden; and as the sun shone through upon them, the shimmering effect was enchantingly beautiful. After being in the tree about twenty minutes, the winds seemed to make a fiercer struggle with the clouds; at all points of the heavens they were forced away, and the whole panorama of mountains, lakes, and rivers, for miles and miles around, appeared before us, bathed in the unobstructed light of the sun. The effect was the top pitch of sublimity, and our eyes feasted on the magnificent scene till the winds lulled and the clouds gathered again. Then we descended the tree, satisfied that we had witnessed one of the noblest views in the world, and probably the finest that had ever been seen from the top of the Blue Mountain.

The journey down the mountain we performed with light hearts and long strides, and reached our boat in less than an hour and a half. This mountain is not so well known as it deserves to be. Its summit, which commands a view of twenty lakes, several rivers, and many mountains, has been visited, probably, by less than twenty individuals. Among these were five heroic young ladies, who were then sojourning on Roquette Lake with the Constables. The rock that we saw of this mountain is composed of feldspar, quartz, and some mica. The lake at its base is the most beautiful one in the whole wilderness, although it is not very large. It has borne half a dozen names—Eckford, Clinch, Emmons, Tallo, Blue Mountain—but is generally known by the last one. Hunters call it Tallow Lake, from the fatness of the deer about it.

At three o'clock we started for Eldridge's, and thorough labor took us there by the time it was fairly dark. Leaving our guide here, "the two travelers" started alone for Fenton's early next morning. There was some breaking down and picking up that day, much ingenuity brought into play, and hard labor performed. However, we had the satisfaction just at dark of returning the swing of our companion's hat, whom we had left trouting at Fenton's, with as heartfelt cheers as ever went up from the throats of two very tired but very happy individuals.

BRONCHITIS.—A writer in The Baltimore Sun, who has been afflicted severely in his family by that appalling disease, bronchitis, has found relief from the following remedy: "Take honey in the comb, squeeze it out, and dilute with a little water, and wet the lips and mouth occasionally with it." It has never been known to fail in cases even where children had throats so swollen as to be unable to swallow. It is certainly a simple remedy, and may be a very efficacious one.

Unloading Hay, a Load at a Time.

This is easily done, and saves a world of hard work. On commencing the loading, a web, or piece of network, made of small rope, and resembling in appearance the cording of a bedstead, is spread over the bottom of the wagon, and the hay is loaded on it, until the load is about one half on, when another web, similar to the first, is spread over the top of that, and the remainder of the load is placed on it. On arriving at the barn, a rope, which passes through a pulley, suspended to the ridge, directly over the mow in which the hay is to be placed, and extends down to the windlass, is hitched to the outer edges of the uppermost web, and then, by means of the small windlass which is placed at the side of the floor, a man, the driver of the team, can elevate that half the load which is above the web, over the beam, and drop it into the mow, in the short space of two minutes.

The hay is dropped by unhitching one of the hooks that connects the rope with the web by means of a small cord which is attached to them, and runs down to the windlass, so that the man there can drop it whenever he pleases; the windlass, rope, &c., can be removed from one barn to another in a few moments, so that one set will answer for any number of barns. Only one man is required to go from the field to the barn, as the hay being dropped in various parts of the mow, needs no mowing away, except an occasional leveling, which may generally be done in wet weather. With its assistance, one man can unload a ton with more ease in five minutes, than two men could have done in forty-five with forks.

The whole apparatus may cost fifteen dollars.

British Commissioners to the World's Fair.

The Illustrated Weekly Record gives the following biographical sketch of the British Commissioners, which will be read with interest.

The Commission is composed as follows, viz.

The EARL OF ELLESMERE.

Sir CHARLES LYELL, F. R. S., F. G. S., &c.

Mr. CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE, London.

Mr. THOMAS WHITWORTH, of Manchester.

Mr. GEORGE WALLIS, of Birmingham.

Prof. JOHN WILSON, F. R. S. E., F. G. S., F. C. S.

The three first are Royal Commissioners, that is, they are members of a permanent Commission, emanating from the Queen, in 1851, for the London Exhibition, and continued as a permanent chartered board, charged with the custody and direction of the surplus fund accumulated on that occasion. Hence the propriety of naming these distinguished gentlemen upon the present Government Commission to the United States. The three last named gentlemen are simply Commissioners appointed for this special duty, and whose office will cease when they have rendered their report.

The Earl of Ellesmere (formerly Lord Francis Egerton,) is one of the wealthiest of the English Peers, and is distinguished for his devotion to literature and the fine arts. He came to America in the frigate Leander, accompanied by his family. The Earl was born in 1800, and is the second son of the late Duke of Sutherland. As an author the the Earl is respected for his excellent rendering of the poems of Schiller and Korner, for his spirited version of Goethe's Faust, and for his Guide to the study of Northern Antiquities, published by the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Copenhagen. His "Mediterranean Sketches" was the result of a pleasure jaunt in his own yacht in 1840, when he visited the shores of the Levant, to enjoy its classical and picturesque associations. His Lordship has also figured in political life. As Lord Francis Leveson Gower he was a member of Parliament in 1830. Under Lord Anglesey he was Secretary for Ireland and Secretary at War under Lord Wellington. His magnificent gallery of paintings, inherited from his grandfather, the Duke of Bridgewater, and greatly enriched by his own purchases, is one of the few private galleries in England which is kept open at all times for the public. Among other valuabe works of art contributed by the Earl to the American Exhibition, is the original Chandos portrait of Shakspeare. This unique memorial of the great dramatist is of itself attractive enough to draw throngs of visitors to the picture gallery. It is understood that the Earl of Ellesmere will devote himself particularly to the Fine Arts department of the Exhibition.

Sir Charles Lyell is quite too well known in America to need any introduction at our hands. This is his fourth visit to the United States, where he can probably count nearly as many personal friends as in England, and as many readers of his truly classical works on Geology. His two series of published travels in the United States are models of fairness in their views of society in America, and permanently valuable for the great stock of geological observations they embody. It is certainly not very creditable to us in America, that the Geological Map of the United States, appended to the first series of his travels, and at the date of its compilation a very creditable production, still remains the best, if not the only general map of the kind which we have.

Mr. Dilke was one of the three Executive Commissioners who had entire charge of the London Exhibition. His labors upon that occasion were constant, various, and most ably performed, and are the more honorably remembered inasmuch as he has steadily declined receiving any consideration or reward, either from his Government or from the Commissioners. He is known as a distinguished critic in literature and art, and has been long connected, as proprietor, with The London Athenæum, one of the ablest literary journals in our language,

Mr. Whitworth is what we in America understand by a practical man—he is England's great tool maker, and is known wherever in the wide world Manchester tools are used. His micrometic dividing engine, for measuring the millionth part of an inch, excited the greatest attention among the mechanical wonders at Hyde Park. This apparatus is among the other curious and valuable machines which Mr. Whitworth shows in New York.

His new method of obtaining perfectly plain surfaces in hard materials, was the subject of an able paper which was read by him some years since before the Mechanical Section of the British Association. Lately he has made important suggestions to the Government of Great Britain upon an improved method of fixing the length of the standard yard measure—suggestions which have received the support of Sir John Herschel, and other distinguished physicists in England. He has also an important plan respecting a uniform guage for ship's screw-bolts, which he is urging at present upon the attention of the English Admiralty, and also upon our authorities at Washington—the adoption of which will be a great blessing to all maritime nations.

The readers of The London Art Journal have not forgotten the admirable paper of Mr. Wallis on "Art, Science and Manufacture as a Unity," an essay in four chapters, which elicited from Mr. Hall, the distinguished Editor of The Art Journal, a complimentary prize of one hundred guineas. Mr. Wallis is Head Master of the Government School of Design at Birmingham, to which situation he was advanced by his merits from the same post in the Manchester School of Design, which he had formerly held. It is to be hoped, that one result following our American Exhibition will be the establishment of similar schools of design for the benefit of our manufacturing districts, in which all who choose may have an opportunity to study the principles and practice of Art.

The Agricultural interest of Great Britain could not have been confided to a better representative than Prof. John Wilson. His long experience as a writer and teacher, fit him peculiarly for this department. Formerly Principal of the Royal Agricultural College at Cirencester, and Chairman of the Commission on Juries at London Exhibition, he has enjoyed rare advantages for making himself thoroughly acquainted with all that relates to the Raw Materials generally. He will give his special attention to our resources in produce, and in agricultural tools and implements.

A Great Wheat Crop.

There is a plantation on James River, 70 miles by water, 45 by land, below Richmond, Va., and 65 by water and 55 by land, above Norfolk, and in sight of old Jamestown, known as Sandy Point, once the family residence of the Lightfoots of Va., but more recently owned by Robert B. Bolling, of Petersburg, and by him sold last year to Richard Baylor, of Essex County.

There are 2,700 acres of cultivated land upon this place, all in one field, and a few years ago it produced barely enough to support the slaves attached to the estate. So reduced had the soil become, by constant cropping for two hundred years, that Mr. Bolling's first wheat crop, in 1835, averaged only 3½ bushels per acre.

He then commenced what is termed the five field system, that is: 1st corn, 2d wheat, 3d clover, 4th wheat, 5th fallow or pasture; as clover is always sown with wheat, or if sown upon a clover lay, comes in as "volunteer clover." At the same time he commenced liming, giving as a first dressing, 50 bushels; 2d, 35 do.; 3d, the same, three years apart, making 120 bushels per acre over the whole farm, and a total of 324,000 bushels. With the wheat straw and corn-stalks, he pursued the "Gurney system," that is, spreading it dry upon the fields, to enrich them by shade and decay.

The usual breadth planted in corn was 400 to 500 acres; in wheat 1,000 acres; and the largest crop of wheat ever grown under the old system was 7,000 bushels. It has been gradually gaining ever since the liming was commenced. A few years ago, an average of 15 bushels to the acre astonished the natives. Improvement, however, is progressive. There is no telling the point at which increased production will cease upon highly improved land. We can tell, though, the point it has reached. Last year the bredth sown was 810 acres. The harvest of this is now complete; the quality of the grain is very excellent; and the quantity safely estimated at twenty thousand bushels of wheat. This is an average of nearly twenty-five bushels per acre, which, upon so large a field, is very extraordinary, particularly when we take into consideration that the land was almost worthless twenty years ago, being in the same condition of thousands of Virginia plantations, which the owners were abandoning to seek a richer soil in the West.

The Sandy Point Plantation is not what its name might imply. It is nearly a true loam, sometimes inclined to clayey loam, very friable, easily cultivated, and part of the system of improvement has been to plow with three stout mules—of which, for plowing, thirty-nine are kept. If any of our readers who are sometimes terribly bothered about threshing out their hundred bushel crop, are any way at a loss to know how 20,000 bushels are to be got through with, we can tell them.

At Sandy Point there is a large granery, upon the main floor of which stand, side by side, two large threshing machines. These are driven by a steam engine, which also drives a saw and corn mill, a bone-crusher and plaster-grinder. The wheat is housed from the field on a dozen wagons, which come in constant succession to the front door of the barn, and the sheaves are thrown upon the floor, whence they are picked up almost as fast as they fall, the bands cut, and thrown into the mouth of the machines. The straw passes through and along a shaker, which frees it of loose grains, and comes out back side of the building, falling some ten or fifteen feet. Here men take it away to the great stacks. The grain falls from the threshers down through the floor into winnowing machines, the chaff is blown out, and the clean wheat is carried off horizontally, by the screw grain mover, to the elevators, which lift it to the top of the building, whence it is conducted by spouts to bins on the second and third floors, and when ready for shipping, it falls again to the carts, which are guaged measures, and thence to the vessel lying at the wharf, a couple of hundred feet from the barn.

The corn is shelled in the same place, and handled in the same way, or rather, steam is made to do the work of handling.

If the corn crop of 600 acres produces a usual average this year of 35 bushels to the acre, it will make 21,000 bushels. Two-thirds of this may be sold, say 14,000 bushels, at 45 cents, which would give $6,300; 20,000 bushels of wheat, at $1, would give $20,000; which makes the whole $26,300. A very pretty income for one plantation; but not all of the same owner, for he has six or seven other plantations on the Rappahannock, which contain 9,972 acres of arable land, the crop upon which this year will probably be 12,000 bushels of wheat, and has been of corn for sale in previous years, 24,354 bushels, besides 15,000 bushels reserved for home consumption. The steam-engine which drives the farm machinery at Sandy Point is sixteen-horse power, costing $1,600, and together with the buildings and machines, $8,000. The barn is three stories high; the saw and grain mill stands at one end, and the engine-house beyond; the smoke is taken up a high chimney, which obviates all danger from sparks.

THE WORK TO BE DONE—NO. 2.

We believe that God will employ the gospel as the great and efficient means in preparing the way for the final reign of Jesus Christ. The gospel is just adapted to do this work. "It is the wisdom of God, and the power of God," and "mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds." This great and mighty lever has been put into the hands of the churches. We have it in trust, and to us the command is given, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," with the promise, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Feeling the force of this command, good men have been moved to inquire, What can we do? and, Who shall we send?—while a Carey, a Judson, a Carpenter, a Wardner, and others, have said, "Here am I, send me." This good work began in the land of Judea, in the days of the apostles; and though many seasons of apathy and spiritual decline have left their painful impress, still there always have been those who have fearlessly and faithfully braved and faced the tempest until the present time.

About fifty-six years ago, a few Baptist preachers assembled in a small parlor in the retired town of Kittering, England; and after spending a season in prayer for divine direction, they resolved to form an association for diffusing religious knowledge in the heathen world; and from their own scanty means they contributed thirteen pounds, as alms to accompany their devotions. This was the beginning of the great work of modern missions. That little germ has grown to be a mighty tree, overspreading the earth. There are now supposed to be about seventeen hundred missionaries in the gospel field, who are aided by more than five thousand native teachers; and they are laboring around twelve hundred central stations, aided by about sixty printing establishments. Nearly two hundred thousand have already professed conversion to the Christian faith, and two hundred thousand more are daily taught wisdom, human and divine, in the missionary schools.

William Carey, the cobbler, who for years worked on his shoe-bench with his book before him, was the man who struck the first blow, at home and abroad. He kindled up a light on the shores of the kingdom of darkness abroad. He rose to be the first scholar and the foremost philanthropist in India. "He emulated every excellence, and became the purest among the great, and the greatest among the pure," as says his biographer. The government, which first opposed him, came at length to acknowledge their obligations to him, and to the religion that he professed. On the tenth of August, 1842, a great concourse of statesmen and patriots in Calcutta, resolved to signify their gratitude and veneration for great services and exalted worth, by ordering the form of Dr. Carey cut in marble. But neither they nor the angels of God, can fully estimate the worth of that gospel which he preached. "It is the wisdom of God and the power of God." And the small beginning will continue its onward course, until tyranny, idolatry, heresy, and every species of opposition, will be overcome and destroyed.

One of the greatest helps for the furtherance of the gospel is the religious instruction given in the Sabbath School. Let the name of Robert Raikes be long remembered, who first gathered the religious children and the unfortunate together in a Sunday School. From a small beginning—from this little spark—a great light has started, by which vast multitudes, of all grades and conditions, have been taught the way of life.

By the faithful use of such means, obstacles will be removed. "He will overturn, overturn, overturn it, until He whose right it is shall come, and God will give it him." Already the gospel has been the means in the hands of God of overturning kingdoms and empires; and through that instrumentality kings have been made nursing fathers, and queens nursing mothers, and the wrath of man has been made to praise God. Then let our prayer be, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as in heaven."

The imparting of the Holy Spirit is not of the least importance among the instrumentalities of God's appointment. "Paul may plant, and Apollos water, but it is God alone who can give the increase." There is great danger of our relying too much upon human instrumentalities. We may be too well satisfied with liberal governments, with free toleration, the sending out of missionaries, the publication of tracts and Bibles. This must be done, but these are only so many human instrumentalities, and they are altogether unavailing, without the influence, and the quickening, and the life-giving energies of the Holy Spirit. This will be given in answer to prayer. Let the church be of one accord in asking God for the pouring out of the Holy Spirit. Not that we are to expect the working of miracles, but that the ordinary means appointed may be effectual in hastening, in the Lord's own time, the reign of the Prince of Peace.

We may inquire why we expect that God will accomplish this great work by the instrumentalities we have mentioned. We expect it, because these are the instrumentalities he has hitherto employed for accomplishing his purposes. For nearly six thousand years God has been overturning one nation and building up another, and when they had become corrupt with sin, and wanton in iniquity, nations have been permitted to war against them, and to destroy them. Though at times God did avert the common course of nature, as when he brought the flood upon the old world, and in the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, yet his ordinary way of working has been in destroying one nation to build up another. Where are those noble sons of the forest, who, unrestrained, roamed through this land, and were lords of all they surveyed? Alas! they have been removed to make room for us; and God may expect from us corresponding fruits. Upon that people has been sent the famine, the pestilence, and the sword, and they have fallen before it, as the tender grass before the scythe of the mower. Only one century has passed since a Braynard and an Elliott followed the Indian through the deserts of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, lived with them, and suffered with them, to teach them the gospel of Jesus Christ. Since that time the world has been in arms; nation has been contending with nation, and every conquest, and every revolution, has been the means of establishing more liberal governments, and opening the way for the gospel of Jesus Christ. Thus has it been in China, and we confidently expect that Japan will soon stretch out an inviting hand for us to come over and help them. "The world is the field, the seed is the word of God, the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels."

THE MINISTRY.

A good deal has been said of late about the inadequate support of the ministry, and the probability that herein is the secret of the inadequate supply of ministers. An Illinois correspondent of the Independent takes a view of the subject somewhat different from most writers upon it, as will be seen from the following extracts:—

I have nothing to say of the Nabalism of churches that unnecessarily allow their ministers to suffer; though I would ask whether such churches are to be forsaken by the ministry on account of the sins of its Demases. May there not be some poor child, may there not be some town pauper, to be saved in that congregation, whose songs in paradise will repay the Elisha who has preached and prayed in that ungrateful place?

But the question we discuss is, Can a man live on $450? Cannot a young man do better, i. e., get $455, or $460, by being a doctor or a lawyer? If the surplus $5 or $10 or more will procure more comforts, or even, as I acknowledge it can, in some circumstances, save life, then it is a grave question. But money is not quite all that a minister gets for his labor. Let me make a little brief catalogue of my profits in this line, and if every minister will do so, I think we may have some valuable data from which Mr. Somebody may make up his prize essay.

1. I have a hope of eternal life. When I was in agony about my soul, if I had made any condition about serving the Lord, as for instance, "I will not be a poor itinerant minister," I do not see how I could ever have obtained a good hope through grace. We must be willing to be any thing that God requires, if we would enter the Saviour's kingdom.

2. I hope an answer to prayer for others. I once told the Lord, if He would save L , I would be his bond servant forever, "go hedge or ditch." Now I hope He has saved a number by my poor instrumentality, and I do not know, perhaps never shall in this world, whether He has saved or intends to save L.; but as the Lord liveth, and as my soul liveth, I will not forget the prayers and the vows I made when I footed it over the mountains to go to a place where I might beg an education. Thus God has pleased to teach me the worth of one soul. It was all and more than my mind could hold then, or can now; and the young believer who can sit down, and in connection with such a subject make a calculation about the $450, had better ———, but I will not be severe.

3. I have been, as I have said, instrumentally helpful in leading some souls to the Saviour. True, I might (?) have assisted them even if I had "decided to read law," but now they love me as a pastor. Just run over the ferry, if you have time, and ask Bro. Beecher, or Bro. ——, what he will take for his pastoral office.

4. I have had a great many side joys—pleasant things, that have come in without stipulation or forethought of mine. Do the lawyers and doctors ever furnish a bit of religious poetry, or a scrap of something good (good, not best) for a religious paper? Do they have their minds whipped up to it by some pleasant or perchance ugly incident in their profession? If any one prizes mental locomotion, this is no small incidental profit. Dear editors, if you should even decide that this may see the light, how pleased I should be. I shall paste it into my fragment book, and think of it, all too proudly, perhaps, but still it will be a great gratification.

5. I have preached two thousand two hundred and forty-five sermons; two or three of them in your great New York. Now, if what Dr. Nelson once told me is true, that the privilege of preaching one sermon is worth more than a million of dollars, (and I ought to believe it,) then I am rich as any of the lawyers and doctors on the footstool. I am not such a dunce or a mastiff that I can despise or bark at either of those noble and useful professions; but I am not sorry that I was led into the ministry, rather than into medicine or the law.

6. The Lord has given me a good wife. Perhaps I should have had a good one if I had not been a preacher, perhaps not. The Sunny Sides and Peeps at No. Five are not all published yet. When we get over Jordan, and read some of the light literature of heaven, we shall know more than we do now; and I am not afraid to put ministers' families, with all their sorrows, against any equal number of families in the world—the Rothschilds and the Girards included.

True, my companion is a little too fond of nice chairs, and she has had some of them broken in our twenty removals (not all from town to town, but in parishes where there were no parsonages,) but she is somewhat accustomed to the yoke of poverty. With a woman of high notions, I should long ago have made shipwreck on my $450. But I must stop. Ministers are in some sense a suffering class, and the ministry is in part a dishonored profession; though I do not hold Congregationalism responsible for all the odium that has come upon us; but with all these infelicities, let me have the ministry. I am positively ashamed to discus the matter of dollars and cents.

A living we must have, and a living we shall have, and whoever wishes for more as a condition that he shall stand in a Levite's place, had better turn to some other business. But first, I am afraid, he had better turn to the Lord; and then, if he can, with requisite talents, keep out of the ministry in this present age, when religion calls for her conscripts, I shall have the uncharitableness to think that he has been fed too long with pap out of a golden spoon.

A REMEMBERED PSALM.

A minister was visiting a seamen's hospital in a large town on the sea-coast, when he came upon a sailor apparently dying from the effects of disease induced by his own profligacy. The minister addressed him on the interests of his soul, but was met with a rude repulse. He persevered with all kindness, and the hardened sinner told him with an oath not to disturb his dying thoughts with the name of religion. The minister, in spite of repeated refusals and counterfeits of sleep, urged the Gospel, but to an ear that was as deaf as the adder. A thought at length struck him. From an expression used by the seaman, he concluded that he was a native of Scotland, to which country he himself belonged. He began to sing to himself, to a well-known tune, the words—

"Such a pity as a Father hath
Unto his children dear;
Like pity shows the Lord to such
As worship him in fear."

The effect was remarkable. The sounds had touched the inmost chords of his heart. He started up. "Where did you learn that?" he asked. "From my mother," was the reply. "I learned it too at my mother's knee," he said; "and I never thought to hear it again." The fountain sealed was broken; tears began to flow down his weather-beaten cheeks. The truth was affectionately taught, eagerly listened to; and, after his recovery, he gave evidence that he had become a penitent child of God.

AN INGENIOUS REBUKE.

A general officer, who was in early life much addicted to profane oaths, dated his reformation from the memorable check he received from a Scotch clergyman. When he was lieutenant, and settled at Newcastle, he got involved in a brawl with some of the lowest class in the public street; and the altercation was carried on by both parties with abundance of impious language. The clergyman, passing by, was shocked with the profanity, and stepping into the crowd with his cane uplifted, thus addressed one of the leaders of the rabble: "O, John, John! what is this I hear? you only a poor collier boy, and swearing like any lord of the land? O, John! have you no fear of what will become of you! It may do very well for this gallant gentleman, (pointing to the lieutenant,) to bang and swear as he pleases; but you, you, John, it is not for you, or the like of you, to take in vain the name of Him in whom you live and have your being!" Then turning to the lieutenant—"You'll excuse the poor man, sir; for he is an ignorant body, and kens nae better." The young officer shrank away in confusion, unable to make any reply. Next day he waited on the minister, and thanked him sincerely for his well timed reproof, and was ever after an example of correctness of language.

[Youth's Cabinet.

AUTHORSHIP OF THE BIBLE.

There are in all sixty-six books which comprise the volume of Holy Writ, which are attributed to more than thirty different authors or writers of the whole. Half of the New Testament was composed by St. Paul, and the next largest writer is the gentle and beloved St. John. With the single exception of Paul, neither history nor tradition has testified that those powerful thinkers and writers ever enjoyed the benefits of education, or that they were trained to scholarship and learning; yet how ably have they written, what eminent characters have been chronicled by them, and what great events recorded, both for time and eternity!

Jeremiah is sorrowful; Isaiah sublime; David poetical; Daniel sagacious; Habakkuk and Haggai terrible and denunciatory; but they all seem to have exercised their natural gifts under the influence of Divine direction and inspiration. Moses, with his vast knowledge, and profound intelligence—the legislator, the reformer, the deliverer—commenced the work; and John, with his depth of feeling and exquisite tenderness and simplicity, completed it.

And what do we know of the lives of all these, or even of the two last mentioned? Nothing that human vanity might exult in. Moses was rescued from the oozy rushes of the Nile; and John died in his old age a lonely exile on the small island of Patmos.

THE USE OF THE FLOWERS.

BY MARY HOWITT.

God might have bade this earth bring forth
Enough for great and small,
The oak tree and the cedar tree,
Without a flower at all.
He might have made enough, enough
For every want of ours,
For luxury, medicine, and toil,
And yet have made no flowers.

The ore within the mountain mine
Requireth none to grow,
Nor doth it need the lotus-flower,
To make the river flow.
The clouds might give abundant rain,
The nightly dews might fall,
The herb that keepeth life in man
Might yet have drunk them all.

Then, wherefore, wherefore were they made,
And dyed with rainbow light,
All fashioned with supremest grace
Up springing day and night;
Springing in valleys green and low,
And on the mountain high,
And in that silent wilderness,
Where no man passeth by?

Our outward life requires them not,
Then wherefore had they birth?
To minister delight to man,
To beautify the earth;
To whisper hope—to comfort man,
Whene'er his faith is dim;
For whoso careth for the flowers
Will care much more for Him!

A DISCOURSE ON FLOWERS.

BY HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Happy is the man that loves flowers! Happy even if it be adulterated with vanity and strife. For human passions nestle in flowers too. Some have their zeal chiefly in horticultural competitions, or in the ambitions of floral shows; others love them as curiosities, and search for novelties, for "sports," and monstrosities. We have been led through costly collections by men whose chief pleasure seemed to be in the effect which their treasures produced on others, not on themselves. But there is a choice in vanities and ostentations. A contest of roses is better than of horses. We had rather take a premium for the best tulip, dahlia, or ranunculus, than for the best shot. Of all fools, a floral fool deserves the eminence.

But these aside, blessed be the man that really loves flowers!—loves them for their own sakes, for their beauty, for their associations, the joy they have given and always will give; so that, if there was not another creature on earth to admire or praise, he would just as much sit down among them as friends and companions! But such men need no blessing of mine. They are blessed of God! Did he not make the world for such men? Are they not clearly the owners of the world, and the richest of all men?

The end of art is to innoculate men with the love of nature. But those who have it in the natural way need no pictures or galleries. Spring is their designer, and the whole year their artist.

He who only does not appreciate floral beauty is to be pitied like any other man who is born imperfect. But men who contemptuously reject flowers as effeminate, and unworthy of manhood, reveal their coarseness. Were flowers fit to eat or drink, were they stimulative of passions, or could they be gambled with, like stocks and public consciences, they would take them up just where finer minds would drop them—who love them as revelations of God's sense of beauty, as addressed to the taste, and to something finer and deeper than taste, that power within us which spiritualizes matter, and communes with God through his works.

Many persons lose much of the enjoyment by indulging false associations. The term weed ends the glory of some flowers. But all flowers are weeds; and somewhere our rarest flowers are somebody's commonest. Flowers growing in noisome places, in desolate corners, upon rubbish, or rank desolation, become disagreeable. Roadside flowers, irradicable, and hardy beyond all discouragement, loose themselves from our sense of delicacy and protection. And, generally, there is a disposition to undervalue common flowers. If a plant be uncouth, it has no attractions to us simply because it has been brought from the end of the earth, and is a "great rarity;" and if it has beauty, it is none the less but a great deal more attractive to us, because it is common. It adds generosity to beauty. It gives joy to the poor, the rude, and to the multitudes who could have none were nature to charge a price for her blossoms. Is a cloud less beautiful, or a sea, or a mountain prospect, because often seen, or seen by millions?

At any rate, while we lose no fondness for eminent and accomplished flowers, we are conscious of a growing respect for the democratic crowds. There is, for instance, the mullen, of but little beauty in each floweret, but a brave plant growing cheerfully and heartily out of abandoned soils, ruffling its root with broad-palmed, generous, velvet leaves, and erecting there from a spire that always inclines us to stop for a kindly look. This fine plant is left, like a decayed old gentleman with us, to a good-natured pity. But in other countries it is a flower, and called the "American velvet plant."

We confess to a homely enthusiasm for clover—not the white clover, beloved of honey-bees, but the red clover. It holds up its round, honest head, with such rustic innocence! Do you ever see it without thinking of a sound, sensible country lass, sun browned and fearless, as innocence always should be? We go past a field of red clover, like Solomon in a garden of spices. There is the burdock, too, with its prickly rosettes, that has little beauty or value, except (like some kind, brown, good-natured nurses) as an amusement to children, who manufacture baskets, and what not, of its burs. But the thistle is a prince. Let any man that has an eye for beauty take a view of the whole plant, and see where is more expressive grace and symmetry, and where is there a more kingly flower? To be sure, there are sharp objections to it in a bouquet; yet most gardeners feel toward a thistle as boys toward a snake—and farmers, with more reason, dread it like a plague. But it is just as beautiful as though it was a universal favorite. What shall we say of mayweed, irreverently called dog-fennel by some? Its acrid juice, its heavy pungent odor, make it disagreeable—and being disagreeable, its enormous Malthusian increase renders it hateful to damsels of white stockings, compelled to walk through it on dewy mornings. Arise, O scythe, and devour it?

The first thing that defies the frost in spring, is the chickweed. It will open its floral eye and look the thermometer in the face at 32 degrees; it leads out the snowdrop and crocus. As a harbinger and herald, let it not be forgotten.

You cannot forget, if you would, those golden kisses all over the cheeks of the meadow, queerly called dandelions. There are many green-house blossoms less pleasing to us than these. Moreover, their passing away is more spiritual than their bloom. Nothing can be more airy and beautiful than the transparent seed globe; a fairy dome of splendid architecture.

As for marygolds, poppies, hollyhocks, we shall never have a garden without them, both for their own sake, and for the sake of old-fashioned folks, who used to love them. Morning glories need no praising. The vine, the leaf, the exquisite vase formed flower, the delicate and various colors, will secure it from neglect while taste remains. Grape blossoms and mignonette do not appeal to the eye, and if they were selfish, no man would care for them. Yet, because they pour their life out in fragrance, they are always loved, and, like homely people with noble hearts, they come to look beautiful by association. Nothing that produces constant pleasure in us can fail to seem beautiful. We do not need to speak for that universal favorite—the rose? As the flower is the finest stroke of creation, so the rose is the happiest hit among flowers!

But we must not neglect the blossoms of fruit trees. What a great heart an apple tree must have! What a generous work it makes of blossoming! Not a single blossom for each apple that is to be; but a profusion, a prodigality of them. The tree is but a large bouquet; it gives you twenty times as much as there is need for, evidently because it loves to blossom. We will praise this virtuous tree. Not beautiful in form, clumpy, cragged, and rude; but glorious in beauty when efflorescent. Nor is it a beauty only at a distance. Pluck down a twig and examine as closely as you will; it will bear the nearest looking. The simplicity and purity of the white expanded flower, the half-open buds slightly blushed, the little pink tipped buds unopened, crowding up like rosy children around an elder brother or sister! Why here is a cluster more beautiful than any you can make up artificially, and you may pick from the whole garden. Wear this family of buds for my sake; it is all the better for being common. I love a flower that all may have; that belongs to the whole, and not to a select and exclusive few. Common, forsooth! a flower cannot be worn out by much looking at, as a road is by much travel.

How one exhales, and feels his childhood coming back to him, when, emerging from the hard and hateful city streets, he sees orchards and gardens in sheeted bloom, plumb, cherry, pear, peach and apple, waves and billows of blossoms rolling over hills and down through the levels. My heart runs riot. This is a kingdom of glory. The bees know it. The very flies, that never seem to be thinking of any thing, are rather sober and solemn here. Such a sight is equal to a sunset; a sunset is but a blossoming of the clouds.

We love to fancy that a flower is the point of transition at which a material thing touches the immaterial; it is the sentient vegetable soul. We ascribe dispositions to it; we treat it as we would an innocent child. A stem or root has no suggestion of life. A leaf advances toward it; and some leaves are as fine as flowers, and have a grace of motion seldom had by flowers. But flowers seem to smile; some have a sad expression; some are pensive and diffident; others again plain, honest and upright, like the broad-faced sunflowers and the hollyhock. We speak of them as laughing, as gay and coquettish, as nodding and dancing. But no man of sensibility ever spoke of a flower as he would of a fungus, a pebble, or a sponge. They are more life like than many animals. We commune with flowers, we go to them if we are glad or sad; but a toad, a worm, an insect, we repel as if real life was not half so real as imaginary life. What a pity they can utter no sound. A singing rose, a whispering violet, a murmuring honey suckle! Oh, what a rare and exquisite miracle would these be.

When we hear melodious sounds—the wind among trees, the noise of a brook falling down deep into a leaf-covered cavity—birds' notes, especially at night; children's voices as you ride into a village at dusk, far from your home, and long absent, and quite home sick; or a flute heard from out of the wood, a silver sound rising up among silver-lit leaves, into the moon-lighted air; or the low conversation of persons whom you love, that sit at the fire in the room when you are convalescent; when we think of these things, we are apt to imagine nothing perfect that has not the gift of sound. But you change your mind when you dwell lovingly among flowers; they are always silent. Sound is never associated with them. They speak to you, but it is as the eye speaks, by vibrations of light, and not of air.

It is with flowers as with friends. Many may be loved, but few much loved. Wild honey-suckles in the wood; laurel bushes in the very regality of bloom, are very beautiful to you. But they are color and form only. They seem strangers to you. You have no memories reposed in them. They bring back nothing from Time. They point to nothing to come. But a wild brier awakes a deeper feeling. It is the country cousin of the rose, and that has been your pet. You have nursed it, and defended it; you have had it for companionship as you wrote; it has brought remembrance to you, and conveyed your kindest feelings to others; you remember it as a mother's favorite; it speaks to you of your own childhood—that white rose bush that snowed in the corner by the door, or that generous bush that blushed red in the garden with a thousand flowers, whose gorgeousness was among the first things that drew your childish eye, and which always comes up before you when you speak of childhood. You remember, too, that your mother loved them. As you walked to church she plucked off a bud and gave you, which you carried, because you were proud to do as she did; and you remember how, in the listening hour of sermon, her roses fell neglected on her lap—and how you slyly drew one and another of them; and how, when she came to, she looked for them under her handkerchief, and on the floor, and then, spying the ill-repressed glee of your face, smiled such a look of love upon you, as made a rose forever after seem to you as if it smiled a mother's smile. And so a dog rose, or the sweet-brier, that at evening fills the air with odor, (a floral nightingale, whose song is perfume,) greets you as dear and intimate friends. You almost wish to get out, as you travel, and inquire after their health, and ask if they would send any message to their town friends.

But no flower can be so strange, or so new, that a friendliness does not spring up at once between you. You gather them up along your rambles; and sit down to make their acquaintance on some shaded bank, with your feet over the brook, where your shoes feed their vanity as in a mirror; you sort them; you question their graces; you enjoy their odor; you range them in the grass in a row, and look from one to another; you gather them up, and study a fit graduation of colors, and search for new specimens to fill the degrees between two violet extremes. All the while, and it is a long while if the day be gracious and leisure is ample, you are having various suggestions and analogies of life darting in and out of your mind. This flower is just like a friend; that one makes you think of mignonette, and mignonette always makes you think of such a garden and mansion where it enacted a memorable part; and that flower conveys some strange and unexpected resemblance to certain events of society; and so your pleased attention strays through a thousand varieties of fancy, or memory, or vaticinating hope.

Yet, these are not home flowers. You did not plant them. You have not screened them. You have not watched their growth, plucked away voracious worms, or nibbling bugs, and seen them in the same places year after year, children of your care and love. Around such there is an artificial life, an associational beauty, a fragrance and grace for the affections, that no wild flowers can have.

It is a matter of often gratitude that this finest gift of Providence was the most profusely given. Flowers can not be monopolized. The poor can have them as well as the rich. It does not require such an education to love and appreciate them, as it would to admire a picture of Turner's or a statue of Thorwaldsen's. And as they are messengers of affection, tokens of remembrance, and presents of beauty, of universal acceptance, it is pleasant to think that, in them, all men recognize a brief brotherhood. It is not impertinent to offer flowers to a stranger. The poorest child can proffer them to the richest.

A hundred persons turned together into a meadow of flowers, would be drawn together in a transient brotherhood. It is often affecting to see how serviceable are flowers to the necessities of the poor. If they bring their little floral gift to you, it cannot but teach you to think that their grateful affection longed to express itself as much as yours. You have books, or gems, or services, that you can render as you will. The poor can give but little, and do but little; let them give those tokens of affection, flowers! And then, when death enters a poor man's house! It may be the child was the only creature that loved the unbefriended father—really loved him; loved him utterly; or it may be it is an only son, and his mother a widow, who, in all sickness, felt the limitation of poverty, and did what she could, but not what she would, had there been wealth. The coffin is pine. The undertaker sold it with a jerk of indifference and haste, lest he should lose the selling of a rosewood coffin, trimmed with splendid silver screws. The room is small. The attendant neighbors are few. The shroud is coarse. Oh! the darling child was fit for whatever was excellent, and the heart aches to do for him whatever could be done to speak love. But it takes money for fine linen; money for costly sepulture. But flowers, thank God, the poorest may have. So, put white buds in the hair, and honey-dew, and mignonette, and half-brown roses, on the breast; if it be in the spring, a few white violets will do; and there is not a month till November, that will not give you something. But if it is winter, and you have no single pot of roses, then I fear your darling must be buried without a flower, for flowers cost money in the winter!

And then, if you cannot give a stone to mark his burial place, a rose may stand there; and from it you may, every Spring, pluck a bud for your bosom, as the child was broken off from you. And if it brings fear for the past, you will not see the flowers fade and come again, and fade and come again, year by year, and not learn a lesson of resurrection—when that which perished here shall revive again, never again to droop or die.

BAD BARGAINS.—A teacher in a Sunday-School once remarked that he who buys the truth makes a good bargain; and inquired if any scholar recollected an instance in Scripture of a bad bargain.

"I do," replied a boy. "Esau made a bad bargain when he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage."

A second said, "Judas made a bad bargain, when he sold his Lord for thirty pieces of silver."

A third boy observed, "Our Lord tells us that he makes a bad bargain, who, to gain the whole world, loses his own soul." A bad bargain, indeed!

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, August 4, 1853.

THE SUNDAY STATUTE.

We took occasion, last week, to find fault with the law which compels everybody to suspend labor on the first day of the week, giving it as our opinion, that it is unsafe to leave corrupt men without employment one entire day in every seven. Men of corrupt passions are best held in check by having their time wholly occupied in some useful employment. The moment they are idle, Satan finds mischief for them.

Should it be replied, that He who said of the Sabbath-day, (granting, for argument's sake, that Sunday is the divinely appointed Sabbath,) "In it thou shalt not do any work," knew whether it would be safe to give such an institution to a corrupt world; our answer is, that the expediency of rendering obedience to what God has commanded is not at all questioned. Those who receive the Sabbath as a God-given institution, and observe it as such, are perfectly safe in doing so. But corrupt men do not so receive it, and in the suspension of their labors they are moved only by the fear of man. They see nothing but the authority of the State. God is not in all their thoughts. If they had some sort of regard to Divine Authority in quitting their work, and would prove that they had, by making a moral and religious use of the day, the case would be different. It would then be infinitely better, that labor should cease.

Arch-Deacon Paley made the quaint but sagacious remark, that the laziness of some people was their best property. Governed by propensities of the worst kind, they would prove most intolerable pests to society, were it not that their constitutional sluggishness forbids their being very active in carrying out their wickedness. But, unfortunately, viciously disposed people are not always lazy, and were it not that necessity obliges them to work at some useful calling, the stability of society could not long be maintained. Nevertheless, once in every seven days, the stability of society is periled, and the Police returns of each Monday morning are a standing proof, that the law of the Sabbath fails to accomplish its civilizing and refining effects, where it does not rest upon voluntary observance.

"The world is governed too much," was the remark of a sagacious civilian; and certainly the remark was a profound one. Too much government breeds rebellion. In attempting to extend authority over men, they must be taken as they are, not as they ought to be. Did not Moses act on this principle? On what other was it, that he allowed the Hebrews to divorce their wives? The thing was not right in the abstract. It was not so from the beginning. He who made the progenitors of mankind, made one male and one female, and made it their duty to cleave together through life. But Moses found a 'hardness of heart' in the people whom he had to govern, and therefore permitted them to put away their wives. He never inculcated the abstract principle, that divorce was right, any more than Christ himself did. But because of that strength of corruption in the hearts of the Israelites, which led them often to treat their wives with cruelty, and otherwise to defeat the very end of the marriage relation, he permitted the thing. He saw that any attempt to govern such corrupt people according to the most rigid principles of righteousness, would only work disastrously, and he therefore wisely regulated, and modified, what he could not absolutely control.

We think the same principle should be observed with regard to the Sabbath. We go for giving corrupt men employment on the Sabbath-day in some kind of labor, or at least for permitting them to be so employed, if they choose. We go for it, not because we suppose it to be right in itself, but because it is the least of two evils—because of the hardness of their hearts. We know that they ought, not only to cease from work, but to count the Sabbath a delight. They ought to be assembled in holy convocation before the Lord. They ought to read the Bible, and to inquire earnestly the way to heaven. They ought to use every divinely appointed means of moral and religious improvement. And one day in seven, separated from the common business of life, is little enough for such purposes. But what they ought to do is one thing; what they will do is quite another. They will not keep the Sabbath in any religious or moral way; and if they will not, why compel them to that suspension of labor, which is of no value except as a means to the higher and more important end?

We have heard a great deal about the confessions of criminals, who have dated their careers in wickedness from the time when they began to break the Sabbath. Statistics on this point have been compiled, till the most incredulous have been staggered. The design was to create the impression, that Heaven itself frowned upon every one who did not look upon Sunday as a sacred day. But the logical and truly rational view of the case is this: that, when these criminals began to spend their Sundays in idleness, they were already viciously disposed. The law of the land compelled them to desist from work, and thus the daily restraint which labor imposed upon them was removed. They could not sink into sluggishness; it was contrary to their nature. The leisure of Sunday, therefore, gave them opportunity to act out the wickedness of their hearts, which they did not fail to do. And as the corruption of the heart gathers fresh strength by every indulgence, so they continued to wax worse and worse, till society was startled by their deeds of daring. It was not because Sunday's sacredness had been violated, that they became so wicked, but because the viciousness of their nature was stimulated afresh every week by a day of idleness.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday in Scotland—The Tests Bill—Tractarianism.

GLASGOW, July 15th, 1853.

Our anticipations regarding the breaking down of the fences which human law had thrown around the Scottish Sunday, are being steadily realized—and weak faith will yet, we trust, be further helped by the removal of obstacles to the keeping of the Lord's own day. Next in importance to the running of Sunday trains on Scottish railways, do we regard, in this respect, the Sunday sailing of pleasure steamboats on the river Clyde; and of these a commencement has actually been effected. The "Emperor," purchased for this very purpose, sailed on Sunday last, from the Glasgow harbor to Greenock, Gourock, Dunoon, and Kilmur; and, although double the usual fares were charged, she carried a company of from 300 to 400. As she sails on abstinence principles, one class of the community will the more readily show her favor; while another class are thereby, in part, deprived of one of their objections. It is not a hasty movement, but a skillfully planned and prudently conducted enterprise, fitted to replace the first day of the week among "the six working days." It was not to be expected that this should be accomplished without an effort to prevent it; but the only hindrance yet thrown in the way is not likely greatly to retard the result. The vessel sailed without impediment from the Glasgow quay, and touched at those of Greenock and Gourock, landing the passengers designing to stop there; but on reaching the piers of Dunoon and Kilmur, their egress was prevented by locked gates. The piers are, I believe, private property, and the tacksmen had previously, publicly and privately, intimated that they would not allow the passengers to disembark thereon. A formal demand having been made and refused, the boats were used to put passengers ashore, and the legality of the tacksmen's opposition, even, it is said, is to be tested. In some of the churches in these coast places, discourses on Sunday sanctification were delivered; and the newspapers in the same interest manifest their fears and displeasure. But no competent authority has interfered to arrest the movement—although it is asserted that our River Bailie Court interdicted a boat from plying eleven or twelve years ago. The "Emperor" is again advertised for Sunday first; ~~and at the places whose~~ piers were closed against them, the landing, it is announced, will "meanwhile" be by boats. There seems little reason to doubt at present, that the attempt will be successful, and if so, that it will also be imitated. Even the Scottish Guardian, (the Glasgow Free Church organ,) only counsels that if there be no law to prevent this boat from sailing on Sunday, its readers should not patronize it on other days. Yet it would not be easy for the Church to justify her wrath in the matter. Her advocates, on the platform, in the pulpit, and through the press, when plied with the authority of God's commandment requiring men to sanctify the seventh day as the only Sabbath, have been ready with the subterfuge that "a seventh part of time" is the spirit of the law. But, as we have repeatedly replied, if this be satisfactory as a vindication of the Church's unauthorized practice in substituting the first day for the seventh, it would be equally satisfactory as applicable to any other day. Now, in the present case, the proprietors of the Sunday boats simply avail themselves of the Church's plea; and, disregarding the day of the Church's adoption, they have set apart Tuesday as a day of rest for those employed—not sailing at all upon it. Consistently, "seventh part of time" reasoners can scarcely object, while practically it furnishes additional illustration of the evil of tampering with the law of the Lord.

The New Universities Tests Bill yesterday passed the second reading in the House of Commons, by 106 votes against 17, and is likely to become the law of the land. Under it, Professors, instead of becoming bound to maintain the Church of Scotland, will bind themselves not to teach any thing opposed to Scripture, to the established Church, and her authorized creed. It has been well objected, that if the Confession of Faith be in accordance with the Scriptures, to protect the student from whatever is opposed to the latter would include the former; but there seems a want of confidence that this would result. It is indeed maintained by opponents, that in regard to the statement of the Confession, about God's having created "out of nothing," in six days, the visible creation, sound philosophy is belied; and that, as Buckland and other Christian geologists believe, Moses, while he gives account of the daily work by which order was brought out of confusion, refers to the long antecedent production of the material elements as having been "in the beginning." The argument was, I believe, first used against stereotyped human creeds, about a dozen years ago, by Dr. Carlyle, Presbyterian minister in Dublin; and the fact on which the argument is based is admitted even by Dr. Candlish, in his work on Genesis—although it is understood that the Doctor has used his influence in obtaining for the Confession the place which it holds in the New Bill.

Tractarianism continues to hold its place in the Church of England, and in some cases to make nearer approaches to Popery. The revival of auricular confession, by many of her ministry, has occasioned serious apprehensions on the part of some of the best of her people. Different opinions in regard to the practice are entertained by different prelates. The Archbishop of Canterbury, when memorialized upon the point, said he considered the practice "to be equally unscriptural in principle, and mischievous in effect." Dr. Bayford, however, who was counsel for Mr. Gorham in the case which has given celebrity to his name, is said to have given it as his opinion, that the law cannot reach a clergyman for introducing it among his people. When the Bishop of Exeter threw his mantle of protection over those in his diocese who had been most forward in the innovation, he was so hissed and hooted, and groaned at, by well-dressed people, in a church at Plymouth, as to have been actually alarmed for his personal safety; and a memorial was presented to the Queen from a meeting of the County of Devon, including a large number of the magistrates, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry upon the subject. Practically, also, the evil to which it is believed to lead so frequently in the Church of Rome, was exhibited in the Church of England, when, a few months ago, a rector in the diocese of Worcester, the father of six children, debauched a woman while at confession in his vestry, who, in consequence, became a mother, and occasioned his being removed from his living. Yet, notwithstanding of all this opposition, and these results, the practice is secretly maintained, and is probably being extended rather than diminished. The Protestant Defense Committee of Brighton have just made it known, that the younger members of the Shoreham and Hurst College systematically practice confession. The Bishop of Chichester has, indeed, expressed his decided disapprobation; but he further informs us, that even prayers for the dead have been said there—although without the knowledge of the Provost of the College. Alas for the flock, for whom such shepherds are being prepared.

J. A. BEGG.

LETTER FROM MR. GONSALVES.

J. W. Morton—Baptism of Mr. Begg and others—Intemperance in Scotland—Madeira.

GLASGOW, Scotland, July 3, 1853.

I arrived here in June, in company with our excellent brother, Professor Morton, late missionary of the United Presbyterian Church at the island of Hayti. Professor Morton has visited Paris on business, and is ready to retrace his steps toward beloved America. I wish my mission was accomplished, so that I might return with him. He is an excellent companion and friend, always ready to do a kindness, even to a stranger. And he is doubtless one of the successors of the apostles, for in ~~a very eminent degree he~~ follows the injunction, "as ye go preach." While on board of the steamer, brother Morton preached several times, on deck and in the second cabin, by invitation.

This evening, at 6 o'clock, Prof. M. preached in the Baptist Church, called Blackfriars-street Chapel. After giving the people an excellent sermon from the words, "He that will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me"—(the theme was, entire consecration to Christ, or entire devotion to the will of Christ)—he baptized three noble-looking Scotchmen, disciples of Christ, who keep the seventh day holy as the only true Sabbath. One of the men is Mr. Begg, a very respectable bookseller in Argyle Arcade, Glasgow. The church was well filled, galleries and all, with a solemn and deeply interested congregation.

Glasgow is a large city of 400,000 inhabitants. Many of the houses and public buildings are truly splendid, but many of the buildings have a very dark and smoky appearance, owing to the immense quantities of Scotch coals burnt in the city. Two-thirds of the people labor in the factories, who, when their day's work is accomplished, go forth into the streets, or to a park called the Green. Being confined all day in apartments badly ventilated, they seem to enjoy the fresh air exceedingly. The Green is a very large park ~~near the river~~ Clyde—larger than the famous Boston Common. There are found a great variety of amusements, from a penny monkey-show to a large circus.

The people here enjoy the largest liberty. But the great curse of Scotland is intoxication. It is still quite fashionable to offer something to drink to visitors. Even some evangelical ministers are in the habit of offering their friends Madeira, or Sherry, or Port, by way of hospitality; so that, if a man has many calls to make amongst even ministers and religious people, if he don't take especial care of himself, he will find it necessary to get a cab to carry him home, provided he is sober enough to tell the driver where he lives.

I expect to leave here day after to-morrow for Madeira, via London. Madeira still suffers by the famine, and the prospect is, that the blight on the vines will be as bad this year as the last. I hope the people will soon substitute something else for the vine—coffee, or the sugar-cane. I am going there in hope to bring my aged mother and friends, who long to come to a land of liberty and plenty.

M. J. GONSALVES.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The number of visitors to the Crystal Palace during the week ending July 30, was, on season tickets 6816, transient 16,851; during the previous week, on season tickets 9,506, transient 16,608. The total number of visitors during two weeks, was about 50,000; the receipts at the door were $16,567 25. The price of season tickets is $10; single admission 50 cents. This week five-dollar tickets are to be issued, which will admit the holder till the 1st of October.

HELP, CASSIUS, HELP, OR I SINK!

This afternoon I received, per mail, the enclosed morceau, from a good friend, to whom I sent the Recorder containing my remarks on "The Mine Explored," and which, doubtless, was forwarded to me as a perfect extinguisher of the last hope for keepers of the original Sabbath. But hear! hear!

"The late learned Dr. Lee, Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Cambridge, England, published an elaborate sermon on 'The Duty of Observing the Christian Sabbath.' It was preached before the University, and includes, according to a statement of the North British Review, the following propositions: 'First, that the primitive Sabbath of those patriarchal epochs, which went before the exodus of the arising Hebrew people from Egypt, was in reality put back a day by Moses, after and in commemoration of that outcoming; secondly, that this was intended to be a temporary and purely Jewish change, or a mere deciduous graft, foreordained to fall off when the fullness of time should come for making the whole world kin by and in Jesus Christ; and, thirdly, that the Sunday of Christendom is actually the Sabbath-day of Abraham.'"

This slippery scrap of wiseacre erudition, snatched from cobbler Lee's pile of offal, is too smeary for use. The same greasy chip has been tried to be put on a hundred times before, but it won't stick, no how. It has been soaked so often, that if a single peg could be found, in Scripture or History, to tack it fast for a moment, the patch has become so rotten, that it has not consistence to hold it long enough to get a single stitch into it. It is a nasty bit of cast-away Puritan tradition—the flimsiest of all traditions, because so unbecoming. Old Moses must have been a tricky fellow, not to let that piece of jugglery slip out, when he was blabbing and writing every thing else for the whole world to see and hear all their doings; or the author of the above lucubration must regard himself as the very prince of humbug.

The "Christian Sabbath" has ever been maintained on the sole ground of it being the "first day of the week"—the assumed "resurrection day"—and their logic has always been, "Redemption is a greater work than that of Creation." The seventh-day Sabbath has always been repudiated on the specific ground of it being the veritable original Sabbath, nick-named "Jewish Sabbath." Our first day neighbors are getting into tight corners, and are witnessing hard, trying times. Truly, they strain at a gate and swallow a sawmill (camel.) Help! Cassius! help, or I sink!

STREET PREACHING IN BALTIMORE.

The matter of street preaching seems to be quite troublesome in these days. Not long ~~ago it was~~ agitated in Cincinnati, and the Mayor gave a decision that street preaching was illegal; but after a stern mandate of public indignation, he found out his error, and the preacher was allowed to proceed in his out-door harangues. At Louisville, also, the subject has been agitated, and the Roman Catholic Bishop published an advertisement warning his flock, one and all, not to take notice of a certain street apostle. Baltimore has just been, and is now, the scene of a similar difficulty.

From the daily papers, it appears that on Sunday, July 24, a preacher, named John Mitchell, was engaged in preaching at one of the market places, when a number of the police interfered and pronounced the assembly illegal. One of them, seizing the offender by the arm, threatened to take him to the station-house if he did not desist. Some of the auditors here interfered, stating that Mr. Mitchell, who is an old man and deprived of sight, had preached for several years from the same place, and that his right to do so was unquestionable. One of the officers hereupon drew a revolver, and threatened to fire on any one who resisted, when some gentlemen known ~~as permanent friends of the temperance cause~~ led the blind speaker to the steps of the Methodist Episcopal Church hard by, where he concluded his discourse. A large number of persons who witnessed this, went to the Mayor, Mr. Hollins, and obtained an investigation and hearing of the matter on the following morning. A committee was present, who informed the Mayor that the same preacher had been stopped a year since, but that the then Mayor had decided in his favor. The present dignitary, however, considered the preacher's remarks inflammatory, with a tendency to create riot, and accordingly he had authorized the police to stop such proceedings. At this intimation, a meeting was called in the neighborhood, and a committee appointed to interrogate the Mayor more particularly as to his legal interpretations in such matters, the result of which was, that in answer to specific questions, he decided as follows:—

"1st. Should a portion of the citizens of this city hold a public temperance meeting in any of the market places, and the speaker were to use language in the discussion of his subject, which should conflict with the interests of a certain class, the liquor-dealers, and a riot should ensue, who would you hold responsible for the riot? and who would be arrested? His Honor answered promptly, the speaker would be held responsible, and he be arrested.

"2d. Should a minister of the gospel preach in his own church, and utter sentences distasteful to persons outside, and they, the outsiders, create a riot in consequence, who would be held responsible for the riot? His Honor answered, the minister, and he would be taken out of his pulpit if he used language that should give offense to any.

"3d. Should a minister of the gospel, in the discharge of his ministerial functions in preaching what he believed to be the truth, use language which should give offense, though not intended, and persons, taking exception thereto, should create a riot, who would you hold responsible for the riot? His Honor again answered, the minister.

"4th. Will your Honor please inform us who is to be the judge of the import of the language used? His Honor answered, the minister, of course; and added, If, however, the language used by the minister should create a riot, then he would be held responsible for it."

At a subsequent meeting of the friends of free speech, the doctrines of the Mayor were pronounced untenable, (as of course they are,) and he was requested to resign. But that he very promptly and respectfully declined to do. Hence other meetings were held, and the matter is not yet fully disposed of. The Mayor has, however, issued an address to the citizens of Baltimore, in which he assures them that he will never, in his official capacity, infringe on the civil or religious sentiments of the community, and that if any deductions to the contrary have been made from his past conduct, he has been misunderstood.

PERPETUAL PEACE WITH ENGLAND.

What shall be done to secure it?

It clearly rests with the people of this country to say whether there shall be incorporated in the treaty now pending between us and England, a provision for the adjustment of all their future difficulties by arbitration instead of the sword. The British Government, though not disposed to take the initiative, is ready to accept such a proposal from us; and our Executive, if fully persuaded that the mass of our people desire it, will not hesitate long, if at all, to propose the measure.

On this point, we are bound to give our rulers the most ample assurance. The President, as the people's chief servant, can be expected to move in such a matter only in accordance with their known or supposed wishes; and hence, if they really desire him to take this important step, they ought as a body to say so in ways that shall leave no possible doubt. The whole people, without distinction of party or section, should lift their voice to him in earnest entreaty for this great measure of peace. It is an object clearly common to them all; a movement that knows no North or South, no East or West; a question on which no issues of party, sect or section can possibly be made. It is a measure strictly national in every one of its aspects and bearings. All parts of the country need it; and we ought to satisfy our rulers that the people as a body desire it, and will heartily applaud the men who shall secure for them so rich and lasting a boon.

For this purpose, then, we want a general expression of the popular will, not only through our leading papers, but especially in the form of petitions to the President from all parts of the land, a large State Memorial from every State in the Union. How shall this be done? We can ourselves send forth few, if any, agents for the work; and hence ~~it must be~~ done, if at all, by the spontaneous efforts of the friends of peace. We shall send printed forms of petitions to ministers of the gospel, with the request that every one of them will first preach a sermon on Peace, to awaken the requisite interest, then appoint suitable persons to procure signatures in his own congregation, if not throughout the place, and, when all are obtained, forward them to the person designated in each State to receive the names, and unite them in one grand State Memorial.

Seldom, if ever, has there been an opportunity to accomplish so much for the cause of Peace by a single vigorous effort; and, wherever proposed, it has thus far been received by the wise and good with every mark of special favor. All the ecclesiastical bodies, before which it could be brought on so short notice, have promptly passed, with entire unanimity in every case, resolutions warmly commended the movement to the Christian community. Of these we can give only a part of one or two specimens. The General Association of Congregational Ministers in Connecticut recently adopted the following resolution, among others:

Resolved, That we fully approve, and commend to the favor and support of the ministers and churches within our limits, the special efforts now proposed by the friends of Peace to procure the speedy adoption, by our own and the British Government, of a provision for the settlement of all future misunderstandings by arbitration as the last resort, instead of the sword."

The Convention of Congregational and Presbyterian ministers in Vermont, as a part of their recent action on the subject, say:—

"Whereas, the effort contemplates the removal of the terrible scourge of War, is demanded by the cause of humanity, and is vitally connected with the interests of freedom, and the extension of the gospel among the nations, therefore,

Resolved unanimously, That by our sermons, by our prayers, and by all reasonable efforts, we will, as clergymen and laymen, contribute our influence to give effect to the noble enterprise contemplated.

Whereas, this subject vitally interests all the inhabitants of our country, even to its utmost borders,

Resolved, That we respectfully request each of the ecclesiastical bodies with which we hold correspondence, to act on this vastly important subject."

Now, is there any need of further argument from us to enforce the claims of such an object upon any friend of God or man? It will indeed require a special effort; but, if successful, its results will reward us, even in this life, ten thousand times over. For a similar movement, our co-workers in England have lately raised $50,000, six men subscribing each $2,500. We send forth this appeal, not to ask for contributions, though we deeply need them, and should very thankfully receive them, but just to solicit in all earnestness your prompt, spontaneous coöperation in this labor of peace and love—articles from the pen of writers for the press, sermons from ministers of the gospel, and personal efforts from laymen in procuring signatures to petitions. Millions should unite in these petitions to our Chief Magistrate, asking him to do a deed that will endear his name to all future generations. We cannot well express our own conceptions of the importance of this measure; but we verily believe its full success would draw after it, in the long train of coming ages, results more important to our country, to Christendom and the world, than the whole amount of good that has yet been accomplished by all the united enterprises of Christian benevolence and reform during the last fifty years.

PASTORAL DESTITUTION IN VIRGINIA.—A writer in the Richmond Herald complains that "a bad state of things" exists in the Baptist denomination in Virginia, in the matter of churches and pastors. Destitution of ministers, he says, is on the increase, without, as he thinks, no doubt justly, a sufficient cause. The editor of the Herald, in the course of his comments on the communication of his correspondent, has the following, which, as coming from a layman, is worthy of notice:—

"Our churches must exercise greater liberality, ere they can withdraw unemployed ministers from secular pursuits, or induce qualified young men, who might otherwise be disposed to enter on the ministry. We have tried the starving system too long for our own good; and it is high time that we should begin to devise more liberal things, if we would prosper as we ought. Should we enter on the work in good earnest, and fully test our ability, we think that the day would not be far distant when that consummation so earnestly to be desired, that every church should have its own pastor, would be realized. There need be no fear that the ministry will be too well recompensed, or become too rich. No avocation in life, requiring the same ability, is so poorly remunerated as preaching the gospel. We speak the more freely, as we occupy the position of a lay member of the church."

IMPORTANT MISSION RENEWED.—The London Missionary Society is about to resume its evangelical labors in Madagascar, from which its missionaries were driven, a few years since, by the furious persecution of her Christian subjects, carried on by the authority of the Queen. Since the death of the persecuting Queen, the island is again open to the gospel, and the Society just named is about to occupy it with an efficient band of missionaries. The Rev. William Ellis, a veteran in the service, well known by his Polynesian Researches, again buckles on the armor, and goes forth as the leader of the holy enterprise. Mrs. Ellis, the celebrated author, whose works, entitled, "Women of England," the "Poetry of Life," and other and earlier works, published under her maiden name Sarah Stickney, are extensively known, will accompany the venerable missionary, her husband, to aid in the work of re-establishing the gospel standard in Madagascar.

DEATH OF DR. EDWARDS.—A telegraphic dispatch last week announced the death, at the Virginia Springs, of Rev. Dr. Justin Edwards, of Andover, Mass., aged about 66. He had filled many responsible stations, and was widely known as the author of the Documents and Manuals on Temperance and The Sabbath, and the Comment on the New Testament. He has carried the Comment on the Old Testament to the Nineteenth Psalm, on which the last words he wrote were: "Men must die and leave many things unfinished; but God lives. His cause will extend, and by such instrumentalities as he shall raise up, will ultimately triumph." Dr. Edwards was a graduate of Williams College—for many years was the Pastor of a Congregational Church in Andover—at a subsequent period was President of the Theological Institution in that place, and of late had retired from public official functions.

THE JANESVILLE SEMINARY.—We have received a circular of the Janesville (Wis.) Wesleyan Seminary, instituted July 4, 1853, Prof. A. C. Spicer, Principal. The Fall Term opens Fourth day, August 24; the Winter Term, Fourth-day, Dec. 7, 1853.

BOOK NOTICES.

ILLUSTRATED BIOGRAPHY, or Memoirs of the Great and Good of all Nations and all Times. By Charles C. Savage.

This volume, as its title indicates, contains the 'memoirs of the great and good of all nations and all times;' and from the celebrated Homer, to the present chief magistrate of our nation, the leading events in the history of every eventful man have been brought together and chronicled in this volume. The author has happily selected that easy, familiar style, which renders these biographies life-like, forming a work which cannot fail to interest the farmer and the mechanic, as well as the orator and statesman. No one can spend an hour in reading this book, without feeling that he has been made familiarly acquainted with some of the 'great or good;' and such are its captivating qualities, that when once commenced, its entire perusal cannot well be dispensed with. This work of merit should have its place in every library. Published by Blanchard.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS; the text divided into chapters, with an introduction, notes chiefly selected from Bunyan's own writings, and a sketch of the author's life, by Stephen B. Wickens.

THE SUCCESSFUL MERCHANT: Sketches of the Life of Mr. Samuel Budgett, late of Kingwood Hill. By William Arthur, A. M.

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH; or, Piety and Usefulness exemplified in a Memoir of the Life of Samuel Hick, late of Micklefield, Yorkshire. By James Everett.

For copies of the above, we are indebted to Carlton & Phillips, of the Methodist Episcopal Press, 200 Mulberry-street, New York. The works are characterized by a truly pious and catholic spirit, and are issued in a neat and creditable style. The world at large, as well as members the Methodist Episcopal Church, ought to welcome such books.

General Intelligence.

European News.

The steamer Asia, with European dates to July 16th, arrived at New York July 28th.

The question of peace or war in Europe remained undecided on the sailing of the Asia. Nothing new had been disclosed with regard to the subject, except a certainty of what was before merely reported, though on good authority. England and France have offered to mediate, and if their offer is refused, we may expect they will seek for some other middle term to offer to the Czar. Bent on maintaining peace they are at any cost, and that the Czar is bent on war is not so clear. His later manifestos have carefully left the door open for compromise, and there is little doubt something can be devised on which all parties will agree. The probability of war is not increased by this intelligence.

The dinner at the Annual Meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society, came off at Gloucester, on the 14th, when over 1,000 farmers and others sat down together. Lord Ashburton occupied the Chair, supported by three or four Lords, a dozen Members of Parliament, and other local notables. Hon. Jos. Ingersoll, ex-President Arista, and Judge Haliburton, were present. Mr. Ingersoll's health was drank. In reply he alluded to the relative positions of England and America, in a commercial point of view. Agriculture, he said, was in many of its products an especial bond of union between Britain and America. A portion of the agricultural productions of the United States was the daily bread of the manufacturers of Britain, and business, certainly, in their manufacturing cities, was to a great extent influenced by the operations of the United States. Judge Haliburton also made a speech.

The Parliamentary Committee had concluded the examination of witnesses on the subject of a decimal currency, and it was believed the result will be an unanimous report in favor of a decimal system, making the pound sterling the integer, and dividing it into 1,000 mills or farthings.

By this arrival we have full accounts of the trouble at Smyrna. A Hungarian, named Costa, naturalized in this country, had been kidnapped by Austrian sailors and secreted on board an Austrian brig named the Hussar. It was believed that he held an American passport and had the papers of a naturalized citizen of this country. Commodore Stringham demanded to see him; the Austrian officers denied he was on their vessel but were finally obliged to allow the American officer to see him. Costa, instead of declaring himself an American citizen, in which case he would have been instantly removed to safety, in a fit of exaltation fell back on his Hungari*an birth*, and protested he would live and die a Maygar. This rendered it impossible for Commodore Stringham to carry him off on board his own ship, but yet he did not abandon the case. Ascertaining that the man certainly had an American passport, he still forbade his removal from the harbor till instructions could be received from Constantinople, threatening to fire on the Austrian if he sailed with the kidnapped prisoner on board. An immense excitement followed the affair, both at Smyrna and Constantinople. At the former place, an Austrian officer was killed by a mob of Italian refugees, and the pusillanimous authorities at Constantinople turned out the Governor of Smyrna for not having allowed the kidnapping to be consummated in peace. But the boldness of Capt. Stringham has not been without its fruit. The British Minister has also interceded for the release of Costa, and at the last advices he had been transferred from the Hussar to the Austrian Consulate on shore, to await the result of an investigation.

Negotiations with Ava had been terminated by the Burmese Envoys refusing to sign the treaty proposed to them by the British, and declaring that they would not sign away any part whatever of the Burmese dominions. They were ordered to reconsider their answer, or to leave the new British territory within twenty-four hours. They left in ten hours. It was said that the Governor-General, Lord Dalhousie, does not intend taking any other steps beyond extending the frontiers and appropriating the country seized. Should an attack be made on the outer territory, an immediate advance will be made on Ava, and the King dethroned.

No news had been received from China, the steamer from Hong Kong not having arrived at Galle in time for the Calcutta mail.

Fight with Runaway Negroes.—We noticed in our last (says a Marysville, Ky., paper) the flight of slaves belonging to Dr. Dowell, E. Pierce, and L. Dobyns. Pursuit was made by Dr. L. McDowell, E. Pierce, Mr. Lanham of Kentucky, and Messrs. Taylor and Dummins of Ohio. McDowell, Lanham and Taylor came upon the negroes at the bridge over Rattlesnake Creek, on the Petersburg and Greenfield Road, about 10 o'clock at night, accompanied by a white man. The negro men—two in number—were each armed with a rifle, and run some thirty paces, wheeled and fired. The pursuing party returned the fire, and at the second fire, Pierce's negro girl cried out that she was shot, but continued to run, and upon the fourth, McDowell's boy was wounded. Dobyns's boy was caught, and after an obstinate fight was secured. The white man was also caught and beaten in a very severe manner, with a club. It being dark, pursuit was given until morning, when the fugitive negroes were tracked a mile and a half by the blood. The white man had not reached home when the party returned, and strong hopes are entertained that he will die. The wounded negroes were not secured, but Dobyns' boy was brought back in triumph to this place, and lodged in jail, much bruised and cut in the affray.

A Missouri Drunkery.—One of the editors of the Louisville Western Recorder, who has been journeying in Missouri, writes thus of a drunkery which he met by the way:—

"Our road was through extensive and beautiful prairies. There was only one spot which was a dark and dreary picture on the loveliness of nature. This was a drunkery. Far in the midst of a prairie, our coach drew up at a miserable log hut; and our coachman alighted, and for a time was mysteriously hid in its filthy and disgusting recesses. Poverty and squalid wretchedness were around. A bloated and dropsical specimen of the genus homo seemed to be the presiding spirit of the spigot; and some half dozen debased and degraded drunkards, his victims and devotees. At a short distance, in a small and weedy garden, we saw a delicate young girl laboring with a hoe. She was no doubt the daughter of the bloated wretch before us. His wife, care-worn and miserable in appearance, sat disconsolate in the door of a hovel hard by. A beast himself, hogs and dogs seemed to dispute with him the occupancy of the drunkery, and the surrounding enclosure."

A Voice "from the Diggings."—A gold digger, writing from Bendinge Creek, Australia, to a friend in England, concludes his letter with the following unique and earnest appeal:

"Now pray write once a month at least, and number your letters, that I may see whether I receive all. And above all things, vote for Ocean Penny Postage. Go ahead with that. A penny is enough for a letter. Our shippers only pay three farthings a pound for freight of wool, and less for tallow. I only paid £15 for my passage out, which is 3,600 pence, and I believe I weigh 3,600 half ounces. Besides, our shippers nearly kept me in food for 100 days, and 22 days more. Just try to remember that, and that a letter does not eat anything. If the Ocean Penny Postage were established, Government would reap the advantage in paper duties, for the stationers would sell a ream where they now sell a quire."

A Pilgrim Celebration.—On the 1st of August, the anniversary of the departure of the Pilgrims from Delft Haven, in 1620, was celebrated with great eclat at Plymouth, Mass. The anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, on the 22d of December, is at too inclement a season of the year for large numbers to attend. Hence the anniversary of their departure from Delft Haven was hit upon as a more favorable season to secure a large attendance, and lay the cornerstone of a monument in commemoration of the landing of the Pilgrims. The occasion was deeply interesting, and was attended by some of the most distinguished descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers.

SUMMARY.

A company of Philadelphia Firemen visited New York last week to bring their Hose Carriage for exhibition in the Crystal Palace. It is a splendid affair, and is said to have cost $5,400. The plates attached to the ends of the hose reel are composed of solid silver, most elaborately chased; the back plates are finely painted in emblematics. The boxes of the wheels are also of burnished silver. On the front of the carriage is a fine silver-gilt scroll, and springing from the body of the carriage, which is also of finely chased silver, is a beautiful representation, in gold, of Neptune in his shell car drawn by two sea-horses.

At Cleveland, Ohio, a few days since, a German entered Esquire Hessenmueller's office, and after sitting some ten minutes, drew a double barrel pistol and said, "Now I will shoot you," and fired, the ball passing through Mr. H.'s vest and coat, directly opposite the heart. Mr. H. sprang up before he discharged the second barrel, and threw his chair at the assassin, hitting him in the face and knocking him down. In the act of falling, the second shot was fired, with no other effect than severely scorching the face of Mr. H., who immediately seized and disarmed his assailant.

The 23d of March, the French imperial theatre, at Moscow, one of the most beautiful in Europe, was completely destroyed, and nothing remained of it but a few tottering walls. Sixty pupils of the Conservatoire, who were at the moment in the dancing classes, saved themselves with more or less of wounds and contusions. Many children were thrown out of the windows and caught in sheets. An inquiry which has been made states the deaths at eleven; loss estimated at 12,000,000 francs, nearly £480,000.

Hon. Hezekiah C. Seymour, formerly State Engineer, and Surveyor of the State of New York, and more recently connected with the Railroad interests of the West, died at his residence in Piermont, on Sunday, July 24, aged 42 years. Mr. Seymour had large experience in Railroad making and management. In 1835 he was appointed Engineer on the New York and Erie Railroad, which place he filled with ability and energy. Shortly afterward he was chosen Superintendent of that great work. In 1839 he left that post, and was elected State Engineer and Surveyor.

The Lumber trade of Detroit forms a heavy item of business. The Tribune has been looking into the lumber statistics, and finds that the lumber sawed in the city amounts to over 35,000,000 feet, besides the immense quantity of laths manufactured, worth, at a low valuation, $500,000. One establishment sells annually half a million dollars worth of lumber, shingles, laths, &c., and the firm of Messrs. Smith, Dwight & Smith, at one of their Detroit mills, cut over 3,000,000 feet of lumber, and 1,800,000 laths, annually.

The experiments with coke, as a fuel for the passenger engines of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, continue highly successful. The Cumberland Miners' Journal says: "It is now demonstrated that coke is not only far superior to wood as a fuel for locomotives, but that it can be used at one half the cost. Such is the conclusion at which the Railroad Company have arrived, and accordingly have ordered the employment of coke on all their passenger locomotives as soon as the necessary alterations in the grate, bars, &c., can be effected."

The New York Herald estimates the number of barbers in this city at 1,500; including apprentices, 2,000. Average wages $8 a week. The yearly amount paid to the 1,500 journeymen exceeds half a million of dollars—40,000 persons are shaved daily. The Germans form about two-thirds of the barbers in New York. Very few, indeed, are natives of the United States.

The London Morning Chronicle, of 11th ult., has an editorial stating that Russian emissaries are spread throughout the Northern dependencies of China, endeavoring to convert the allegiance of the Bhuddists to the sovereignty of Nicholas. The information is derived through French missionaries.

Patrick O'Donaghue, whose trial was to have taken place this week in Cortland county, N. Y., for the murder of Mrs. Kinney and daughter, attempted to commit suicide a few days ago. His throat is severely though not dangerously cut. His trial will be postponed.

A dispatch dated Cincinnati, Wednesday, July 27, 1853, says six counterfeiters were arrested last night, three miles below this city. In their house were found $40,000 in counterfeit money, all on the State Bank of Ohio, except some fives on the Fairfield County Bank of Connecticut. Bogus dies and implements were found, but the plates have not been discovered. Three of the parties were penitentiary birds, and another named Quincy Hurschey was a large sub-contractor on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad. The whole party have been committed to jail. The gang is supposed to be the most daring and extensive in the country.

There is now a surplus of within a fraction of $22,000,000 in the United States Treasury, notwithstanding the Secretary is redeeming United States stocks and otherwise paying the public debt as fast as the law to that end will allow him. Thus it appears that the Government's revenues are increasing so rapidly as that the public debt is being fast extinguished without materially decreasing the amount of cash on hand.

In the case of Orrin S. Bonsteel against Cornelius Vanderbilt and Daniel Drew, recently tried at Kingston, Ulster county, the Jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for the sum of $10,000. The action was for cruel and improper treatment of a passenger, who took passage by the Vanderbilt new line of steamers between New York and San Francisco, and for delay of 56 days on the route.

The new railroad from Hoboken to Albany has been surveyed, and its total rise and fall on the survey from Hoboken to the valley of Wallkill is rather less than 1,000 feet, and thence to Albany, it rather exceeds 1,200 feet. The survey commenced at Ferry Gate, in Hoboken, and continued 66.77 miles to the line of a survey made for a railroad from Goshen to Albany, a distance of 75.43 miles, thus making the whole length 141½ miles.

The Danish man-of-war Saga, Commander Bochee, arrived at Boston on Tuesday, direct from Reikjavik, Iceland. The customary salutes were fired and answered as the vessel entered the harbor. So far as we now recollect, this is the first arrival of a stranger direct from the Northern Islands, since the days of Erik Rauda and Thorfinn Karlsefne, eight hundred years ago.

A letter dated Philadelphia, July 31, 1853, says George F. Alberti, the renowned and infamous negro catcher, is again in trouble. There seems to be a disposition to trap him in the meshes of the law, and some of George's friends would, no doubt, gladly put him in so tight a place that he would be kept secure for a time. Whether they will succeed in the present instance is for the future to develop.

William W. Farwell, of Madison County, has been nominated by the Independent Democrats of Oswego and Madison Counties, in convention for State Senator from the 20th District. The Maine Law Convention made the same nomination. The Independent Democracy and Temperance men have strong hopes of Mr. Farwell's election.

Judge Kane, in Philadelphia, last week gave his opinion in the case of the absconding apprentice from Delaware, who was arrested in that city recently under the Fugitive Law. The Court decided that the law applied to all fugitives from labor, whether white or black, and the runaway apprentice was accordingly ordered into the custody of his master.

Hon. Wm. B. Banister, of Newburyport, Mass., who died a short time ago, left the bulk of his property, about $40,000, to be divided equally between the American Bible Society, the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the American Education Society, the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, and the American Colonization Society.

John C. Mather, merchant of Troy, one of the Canal Commissioners of this State, has been impeached for grave misdemeanors in office by the House of Assembly, and is to be tried on that impeachment by a Court composed of the Judges of Appeals and Senate of the State, presided over by the Lieut. Governor. The trial takes place at Albany.

The Oregonian of June 11 says: We have reliable information from the Upper Willamette Valley, that the inhabitants have been recently taken with a perfect stampede, and are leaving night and day for the new placers. It is said that men are making from $15 to $100 per day. The mines are said to be within 40 miles of Salem, on the head waters of the Santiam.

Mr. Patrick O'Donohue, who was one of the leaders in the attempt at Ireland's liberation in 1848, and with O'Brien, Meagher, McManus, and others, was condemned to death, which sentence was subsequently commuted to transportation, has escaped from his prison-house in Van Dieman's land, and arrived at New York July 25, by the Northern Light, via California.

At a meeting of the owners and managers of mills in various parts of the State of Rhode Island, held at Providence on Monday, June 11th, it was unanimously agreed to run the mills sixty-nine hours per week, or equal to an average of eleven hours and a half per day, throughout the year.

An arrival at Gloucester, Mass., from the fishing grounds, reports mackerel rather scarce, and the vessels not doing much. The British armed vessels were plenty in the waters, and were keeping a strict watch, but behaving with more civility than last year.

A late Parliamentary return gives the following consumption of Tobacco in the United Kingdom for three years:

Year.	Pounds.	Duty paid.
1850	27,734,785	£4,430,131 4 3
1851	28,062,941	4,485,787 18 8
1852	28,558,753	4,560,741 9 6

Mr. F. Hannaford, says the Portland Advertiser, is now building a schooner of 125 tons burden, on his farm at Cape Elizabeth, more than a mile from the shore. She is set on shoes, and, when finished, which will not be till next winter, is to be hauled by oxen to the shore. Mr. H. has built two or three vessels in this way.

The Legislature of New York passed a law at its recent session exempting the property of the husband from the debts of the wife which may have been contracted before marriage. The same body passed a law in 1848 exempting the property of the wife from being taken for her husband's debts contracted before marriage.

On Tuesday night, near Roxbury, on the Vermont Central Railroad, the locomotive of a passenger train came in collision with a wagon, the horse attached to which was endeavoring to back upon the track in spite of the efforts of the driver. The train struck the hind part of the wagon, and was stopped as soon as possible. Upon going back, the wreck of the wagon was found, and also a broken rum jug, the contents of which had been suddenly confiscated by the accident, but the horse and man had disappeared.

A new invention in the form of a life and fire bucket for steamers, is rather larger than an ordinary water bucket, but holds no more water, the bottom and sides being filled with cork, enough to support two persons each in the sea. It is intended to take the place of the common buckets kept standing with water on the decks of steamboats, and in case of need to serve as a life-preserver.

At the recent lettings in Ohio, the contract for constructing the broad guage railroad from the Pennsylvania line in Trumbull County, to Dayton, Ohio, was awarded to Henry Doolittle, Esq. The contract is for $7,000,000, the heaviest, it is supposed, ever taken by one person in this country.

The Syracuse papers publish a call for a "Delegated Convention of the Independent Democracy of the State of New York," to be held in that City on the 31st of August. The Independent Democracy of each county are requested to send Delegates equal in number to their representation in the Assembly.

A Coroner's Inquest, in London, upon the bodies of persons killed by the explosion of the boiler of a steamboat plying on the Thames, has resulted in a verdict of manslaughter against the Government Surveyor or Inspector, for not having made a proper inspection of the boat.

The Sub-Treasury in New York, the Express says, is now fuller than it ever was before, running up to eight millions. Unless the Government makes a great sacrifice in buying up the national debt, the surplus revenue will overrun $20,000,000 when Congress re-assembles.

A slave belonging to H. France, of Pettis Co., Missouri, was publicly burnt on the 13th ult., for murdering the wife of John Rains, under the most aggravated circumstances; and his master was ordered out of the State for conniving at the crime.

Hon. Neil S. Brown, late U. S. Minister to Russia, has arrived in Washington. He is firm in the opinion that there will be no actual hostilities between Russia and Turkey. He also says that the occupation of Wallachia, by the Russian forces, was anticipated by the Turkish Government.

It is suggested that the charge of $300 per annum for tuition and board by the Trustees of the Agricultural College, chartered at the last session of the Legislature, will exclude all but the sons of the rich, and that a cheaper plan is needed.

Rev. C. W. Ruter, Presiding Elder of the Madison (Ind.) district, is to be tried at the next term of court, for employing a colored preacher to preach in Madison, which is a violation of the recent law of that State.

In a temperance speech at Cincinnati, a few nights since, Williams, the popular lecturer, said there was more talent and ability in the Ohio Penitentiary last winter than in the Ohio Legislature.

At the recent Medical Convention at Dayton, (O.,) a prize of one hundred and twenty dollars was offered for the best medical essay, Dr. S. G. Armor, of Cleveland, has been awarded the prize by the committee.

The Michigan Central Railroad Company have paid $3,000 to the widow of Stephen D. Gray, of Wheelock, Vermont, who was killed by a collision on that road a few months ago.

Considerable excitement was created in Philadelphia, last week, by the occurrence of several sudden deaths. It was decided that they were occasioned by bilge water in a vessel lying at one of the docks. With her removal the excitement abated.

Freeman, the alleged fugitive, is still in jail at Indianapolis—has to pay $3 a day "for a guard" at that. This is a little the coolest outrage we have lately heard of. Send a man to jail, and then compel him to pay for being kept there!

The colored man Charles Trainer has received a letter from his wife's master, stating that he is to leave Mobile in a few days, and requires Trainer to send him the $700 for his wife in a few days, or it will be too late to obtain her.

A man who calls himself Horatio W. Southwick, and a woman, were recently arrested as counterfeiters, at Buffalo. The notorious Burt Macky, the Cincinnati pickpocket, was also arrested on board of a Buffalo steamboat, for robbing a passenger of $300.

We learn by a letter from Athens, that the affair of Dr. King is on the point of being arranged. He will be indemnified for his property, and the remainder of his sentence will be remitted by the King.

The ship National Eagle, of Boston, from New Orleans for Liverpool, was off the Capes of Delaware on Wednesday, with her colors set for a pilot, having the Yellow Fever on board. The Captain was sick, and the Mate, Captain's wife, and several of the crew, had died.

The harvest, says The Rochester Advertiser, has been gathered in in a remarkably fine condition, and we believe it is generally conceded that the depredations of the weevil have been much less extensive than was reported and believed.

A horrible transaction occurred at Waterbury, Connecticut, July 27th. A young man named Miller, of New York, was disembowelled by three Irishmen. Two of them were arrested and committed to prison.

A small defalcation has been discovered in the State Department at Washington; it is only $10,000, not enough to create much excitement. W. C. Zatzninger is the alleged defaulter.

DIED,

In Lincklaen, June 25, 1853, Mr. Samuel Stillman, aged 75 years. Bro. S. had been a subject of affliction for a number of years, a cancer having entirely eaten out one of his eyes. He died in the faith, having a strong hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave.

In Lincklaen, July 1st, of dropsy, Miss Lydia M. Burdick, daughter of R. G. Burdick, in the twenty-fifth year of her age. She bore her last sickness, which was very distressing, with Christian fortitude, and talked of dying as one would talk of taking a pleasant journey. In conversation with her father, about the place where she was to be buried, she was asked if the grave had any gloom to her. She replied, "No, the Saviour has taken it away." "Oh, pa," said she on another occasion, "why don't he come and take me? Do you think he will?" She was answered, Yes. "Are you confident of it?" was pronounced with a good deal of earnestness. Again she was answered, Yes. She was then asked if she was not confident of that fact. She replied, "Yes, I am confident." R. G. B.

In Almond, July 16, after a distressing and lingering illness, Thomas Menza, son of Thomas Lewis, in the 21st year of his age. N. V. H.

In Shiloh, N. J., July 5th, Warren M., son of George W. and Susan D. Ayars, aged five months.

In Shiloh, July 20th, Susan D. Ayars, mother of Warren M. and wife of George W. Ayars, aged twenty-four years. She was a member of the church at Shiloh.

Near Shiloh, N. J., July 13, an infant son of Charles Dickinson, aged two months.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Titsworths & Dunn, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U. S. and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

C. ROLLIN BURDICK, A. B., Graduate of Rochester University, Principal.
Mrs. H. A. BURDICK, Preceptress.

This institution, located at Shiloh, Cumberland Co., N. J., three and a half miles from Bridgeton, the county seat, and thirty-eight miles south from Philadelphia, will open its first term for the year 1853-4, on Wednesday, Aug. 23, continuing 14 weeks.

The officers, feeling grateful for past favors, and confident of giving satisfaction, solicit a large attendance for the coming year. The teachers flatter themselves that they can give satisfactory instruction in all the branches usually taught in Academies. Young gentlemen and ladies preparing for College, can here fit themselves for an advanced standing, and thus save considerable expense. A competent Pianist will be secured.

Good Board can be had at the Boarding Hall, or in private families, on reasonable terms.

Terms.—Tuition, settled in advance, from $3 50 to $5 00. Incidentals, 25 cents. Piano music, $10 00. Drawing, crayoning, landscape painting, and painting in water colors, $2 00 each.

This Seminary is confidently commended to the public as a first-class Institution, supplied in an eminent degree with all the facilities of education usually found in the Colleges and Universities of this country. It is provided with ten departments of Instruction, having an able and experienced Instructor at the head of each, thus giving such a division of labor as can alone secure the highest ability in conducting each department. Students can here complete an entire course of collegiate education, or be prepared for usefulness in mechanical, agricultural, or commercial pursuits, or for entering immediately upon professional studies. The Teachers' Department supplies the public with at least one hundred and fifty experienced teachers of common schools annually, and the Department of [illegible] and Agricultural Chemistry affords the young farmer all the facilities desirable in the best agricultural schools. Having recently completed another spacious and elegant edifice for a chapel and recitation rooms, and being now engaged in extensive enlargements and alterations for the accommodation of a much larger number of students than hitherto, the Trustees express their intention that the high character which this Institution has acquired, for thorough instruction, for strict moral and social training, and the best of educational advantages at a very moderate expense, shall be fully maintained. The location, on the N. Y. and Erie Railroad, two miles from the Alfred depot, is romantic, retired, and one of the healthiest in the world. Circulars, &c., gratuitous, on application to Prof. W. C. Kenyon, or Rev. N. V. Hull, Pres. of Trustees, Alfred [illegible], Allegany Co., N. Y.

New York School Law.

Circular from the Superintendent of Common Schools.

STATE OF NEW YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, DEPARTMENT OF COMMON SCHOOLS,
ALBANY, July 22, 1853.

To answer a great number of inquiries daily received at this office, and to guard against the consequences of a misapprehension which many school officers have fallen into, in regard to a recent decision of the Court of Appeals, the undersigned would state:

The Court of Appeals has recently decided the Free School law of 1849 to be unconstitutional. But this decision in no respect affects the act for establishing Free Schools throughout the State, passed April 12, 1851. Trustees of School Districts may safely proceed to make out rate bills for the payment of Teachers' wages under the last named act. They may also safely levy and collect taxes voted under, or authorized by, the School Law of 1847, as amended by chapter 382 of the Laws of 1849.

To protect Trustees from the liabilities incurred under the act of 1849, which is now declared unconstitutional, the Legislature, on the 30th day of June last, passed the following law, to which the undersigned would call the attention of all parties interested:

AN ACT in relation to recoveries against School officers.
Passed June 30, 1853.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION. 1. Whenever a recovery has been or shall hereafter be had against the trustees or collector of a school district for the collection of any tax, levied in the district by reason of any tax or any part thereof having been imposed pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act establishing free schools throughout the State, passed March twenty-ninth, eighteen hundred and forty-nine," it shall be the duty of the trustees of the district for the time being, to ascertain the amount so recovered, together with the expense of execution thereon, the interest thereon, and all costs, charges and expenses to which the trustees or collectors have been subjected in the defense of the action or actions, and to impose and collect in the manner school taxes are levied and collected, a tax sufficient to discharge the amount so ascertained, and in addition thereto such further sum as shall be sufficient to repay all to the tax-payers who shall have paid the first mentioned tax, and who shall not have brought actions therefor, the amount of them respectively paid, with interest thereon to the time the tax to be imposed is collected.

SEC. 2. From the moneys collected by virtue of the preceding section, there shall be paid to the persons against whom such recovery shall have been had, the moneys by them paid therefor, with interest and the costs, charges and expenses incurred by them, and so ascertained as aforesaid, and to each tax payer who shall have paid any portion of the first mentioned tax, and who has not brought an action therefor, the amount paid by him, with interest to the time the tax to be levied by virtue of this act is collected.

SEC. 3. Where the Trustees of School Districts shall have paid the amount of any such recovery, or any part thereof, from moneys belonging to the Districts, the amount of moneys so paid, with interest thereon, shall be replaced from the moneys to be raised under this act, instead of being paid over as in the second section provided, and the remainder of the moneys shall be applied as heretofore provided.

The Palmer Worm.

The following article, furnished to the New England Farmer by one of the first entomologists in this or any other country, will be read with interest by all farmers and nursery-men.

An insect, formerly known by this name, has appeared in great numbers upon fruit and forest trees, during the past month. Apple, cherry, and plum trees, and, among forest trees, the white oak, have suffered more or less from its depredations in all parts of New England, and in the State of New York. Communications concerning it, accompanied by specimens, have been sent to me from Bradford, Andover, and Westboro, Massachusetts; from New Haven and Salisbury, Connecticut; and from Keene and New Boston, New Hampshire. About the 10th of June, the same insects were first observed on fruit trees in my own garden, where, however, they have not been numerous, and have not done much injury. In other places their ravages have been deplorable, and have been compared to those of canker worms; the leaves of trees attacked by them looking as though they had been scorched by fire. In some orchards, they have not spared even the fruit, which has been attacked and mostly destroyed by them. They have now come to their growth, and have finished the course, in their present form, for this season.

These insects agree, in all respects, with the accounts given of the palmer worms that prevailed in many parts of New England in June, 1791. It was remarked, after this great visitation, that they did not return the next year in the same places. Whether, until the present season, they have ever again been observed, in the like profusion, is unknown to me. Probably some of these insects might have been found almost every year by diligent search. Perhaps they are the same as those heretofore called fire-worm, of whose history I cannot find anything in print.

A particular description of the palmer worm may be thought unnecessary and superfluous, since the insect has been so recently and so widely observed, and has been pretty well described in the newspapers. But, as I have little more to add concerning it, and have been applied to publicly and privately for information on the subject, it may be proper to put on record an account of it as it has passed under my own observation. In its early stages, this worm, or caterpillar, though varying somewhat in color, is mostly pale green, with two slender brown lines along the top of the back, and a pale brown head. It has sixteen feet, six of which, near the head, are jointed, and end with a single claw; the others are merely fleshy protuberances without joints, the terminal pair being the longest. When fully grown, the insect measures half an inch, or rather more, in length, and then bears a striking resemblance to the common bud-worm of the apple-tree; the back assuming generally a darker color, and the sides of the body being marked with black points, arranged three together, on each side of every ring. Two blackish semi-circular spots or marks, may also generally be observed at this period, on the top of the first ring. A few short hairs may be seen on the body by means of a magnifying glass. On my own trees, these insects have confined themselves mostly to the terminal leaves and buds; on others, in places where they have been numerous, they have spread over all the leaves, and have devoured the whole green substance, leaving only the network of veins untouched. They are exceedingly active in their motions, moving either forward or backward at pleasure, with a kind of impatient jerking motion, which renders it difficult to hold them. When the trees are shaken, these worms drop and hang suspended by threads, like canker worms. Whether they leave the trees in the same way when they have finished their course—if indeed they do leave them at this time—and where they undergo their final transformations, I have not ascertained, being prevented by other engagements from watching their further progress. One of my correspondents has informed me that these worms mostly disappeared after a late hail storm; and another one states that they all took leave during a heavy shower on Monday last. A few, that were kept for observation in a glass jar, have covered themselves with a thin web of silk, and some of these have already taken the chrysalis from within their webs. More than half of my specimens have been stung by ichneumon flies, which have deposited a single egg in each one of their victims. The maggots bred from these eggs are now leaving the lifeless worms, and are spinning themselves up in white, oblong, oval silken pods or cocoons. If the palmer worms elsewhere have suffered the same fate in like proportions, we have little cause to fear for their ravages next year.

The chrysalis is about one quarter of an inch long, of a pale yellowish brown color, and differs from that of the bud worm in not having transverse rows of teeth, or little notches, around its body. The final transformation remains to be observed; and, until the insect is obtained in the winged or moth state, its scientific name cannot be determined.

On the morning of the 28th of May I saw, in the cemetery at Worcester, immense numbers of gray or whitish moths, about twice ths size of the common clothes' moth, flying about almost in swarms, being disturbed from the grass and trees by my passing. Two days afterward a few of the same little moths were seen in my garden; and Dr. Sanborn informed me that his garden was alive with them on the 23d of May. They were also very numerous, about the same time, at New Haven, and in other place since visited by the palmer worms. But whether the latter were or were not the descendants of these little moths it woutld not be safe now to say. The moths, though not wholly unknown to me by sight before this spring, have heretofore been so rare that my collection contained only a single specimen, and that in too poor a condition to enable me satisfactorily to investigate its scientific character and ascertain to what modern genius it belonged.

As attention has been generally directed to the habits of the palmer worm during the present season, other persons, more favorably situated than I am, may be expected to pursue and make known the further history and transformations of this destuctive insect. I regret not being able to give a better account of it at this time, and still more that the pressure of my official duties necessarily interfere with the continued and further investigation it would otherwise please me to make upon it.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., July 6, 1853.

Going Home.

Mr. J. B. Thompson, a fugitive from Slavery, who was compelled to flee from Philadelphia, after the passage of the "Fugitive Slave Act," and who sought a refuge in Canada, has succeeded in procuring the sum of $800, with which to purchase his freedom. The whole of this sum has been raised since the 1st of March; and the zeal, energy, affection, and talents of Thompson's wife have contributed greatly to the success of her husband's own untiring exertions. Mr. Thompson called on us on his way to Canada when the human bloodhounds were baying on his track; his good wife informed us, on Friday, 8th inst, that Lyman Jones, Esq., of Montreal, had negotiated with the manstealer in Virginia, who claimed her husband, and who has consented to release all claim on him for $800; and that as they had the money they were now returning home!

The simple story of Mrs. Thompson, commencing with the visit of her husband's "master" to her home in Philadelphia, and ending at the collection of the last $2 50 of the needed sum, was as graphic as a chapter of "Uncle Tom." Her husband, who is a smart, good-looking, energetic mulatto, left Virginia eight years ago, and settled in Philadelphia, where, at the time of his flight, he had two shaving and hair-dressing establishments, besides owning, in his wife's right, a homestead.

One morning in September, 1852, the master entered Thompson's house with a familiar, free-and-easy swagger, threw himself into a chair, placed his heels upon the table, and slowly chewing, spitting and squinting around the ceiling, suddenly brought his eye to bear on Mrs. Thompson, and asked her where her "boss" was.

"He is at the shop, sir."

"He'll be along soon, won't he?"

"Yes, sir."

"You have things pooty nice here—seem to live pooty well for niggers."

"Are you from the South, sir?" said Mrs. Thompson to her impudent visitor; at the same time her flashing eye, curling lip, and heaving breast indicated the scorn she could scarcely suppress, in obedience to the fears which had suggested her question

"What makes you think me from the South?" said the bully, with a sneer.

"Because Northern men know better than to enter people's houses merely for the purpose of insulting them."

"Well, I am from the South," replied the master, "and I am come for your old man; and if I had you in Old Virginia, I'd give you 39 on your bare back every morning, and then rub you down with salt and water; and, I bet, your tongue would not wag so glib."

"But you will never have either me or my husband in Old Virginia."

By the address and coolness of Mrs. Thompson her husband was informed of this visitor, and escaped among the "Quakers." In a few days she converted what property she could quietly dispose of into money, locked up her house, and, joining her husband, started with him for Canada. Since that period she has accompanied him, with her little daughter, through Vermont and other parts of New England, giving concerts, where they sang the touchingly-plaintive songs of the slaves, and earning in this way the price of Mr. Thompson's freedom.

We never saw anything more touching than the joy expressed in the face of Mrs. Thompson, as she recited to us the incidents of her life, during the last few months, among the generous farmers of Vermont, and dwelt upon the fact that her husband could now go home.

New Way to make Butter.

"Miss Emily," a rustic lass of the Hoosier State, who has had for several years past the entire control of the milk department in her father's family, confesses in the Western Cultivator that she was indebted to it for the following process of making butter surely and speedily, said to be the Russian method, and a most excellent one, too, as her experience proves. She says:

"Before I go to milk, I put a kettle, say one-third full of water, and large enough to let the milk pail into it, on the stove, where it will get boiling hot by the time I come in with the milk. I then strain the milk into another vessel, and wash the pail (which should always be of tin,) then pour the milk back into the pail, and set it into the kettle of boiling water, till the milk becomes scalding hot, taking care not to let it boil; then pour it into crocks or pans, and set it away in the cellar for the cream to rise in the usual way. Cream produced in this way will seldom require twenty minutes to churn, while by the common practice the poor dairy maid may often churn for hours, and then perhaps have to throw all away, as I did on two occasions, before I became acquainted with the Russian plan, the essential features of which I have adopted in my present mode, as given above, and for which valuable information I am indebted to your excellent agricultural paper. This method is applicable to all seasons, and will answer in summer as well as in winter.

The Crystal Palace.

This edifice starts in its delicate beauty from the earth like the imagining of a happy vision. Viewed at a distance, its burnished dome resembles a half disclosed balloon, as large as a cathedral, but light, brilliant, and seemingly ready to burst its bands and soar aloft. In every sense the Crystal Palace is admirable. To us on this side of the water it is original. Nothing like it in shape, material, or effect, has been presented to us. If it were to contain nothing, it would alone be an absorbing attraction, and be beyond all else in New York, an architectural curiosity.

The building is two stories high. The first is in the form of an octagon, the second of a Greek cross. The centre of this is a dome, 148 feet high. The four corners of the octagon are furnished each with two towers, seventy feet high. These towers support flag-staffs, adding to the lightness of their appearance. The construction of the building is similar to that of the original in London, as far as the connection of iron columns, girders, &c., go; but the principal parts of the rest, the dome included, is fashioned by the architects, Messrs. Carstensen and Gildermeister, who devised the plan of the whole structure as well as the details. The main building covers 173,000 square feet, galleries included; and the additional building 33,000, being 206,000 in all. The additional building is composed of a first and a second story gallery, 21 feet broad and 450 feet long, lit from above, the sides being quite closed up, so as to form a suitable place to exhibit pictures and statues. This additional building is connected with the main building by two one-story wings, which contain the refreshment rooms, and the mineralogical department under the charge of Prof. Silliman, Jr.

There are twelve stairways, the balustrades of which are light iron tracery in accordance with the general spirit of the designs. The stairways are at each point of the compass, on the sides and under the dome. The great circular windows, facing at four points, add much to the charm of the effect.

Walls, properly speaking, the building has not, being enclosed with glass sustained by iron pillars. This vast mass of crystal occupies 45,000 square feet.

The cast-iron weighs 1,200 tuns, the wrought 300. Each pane of glass is 16 by 38 inches. The prevailing style of the architecture is Moorish and Byzantine in its decorations. The ceilings are painted in octagons, in blue, white, red, and cream-color. A portion of the ceiling will not be finished and will reveal the rafter and girders, which is a drawback on the general effect.

The decorative artist is Mr. Greenough. The offices of the directors and artists are in imitation of satin-wood, their appearance being very neat.

The entrances of the Palace are three, all alike, one on the Sixth-av., one on Fortieth and one on Forty-second-st. Each entrance is forty-seven feet wide, the central nave is forty-one feet wide, and the aisles fifty-four feet. Within, at the entrance, the visitor sees an arched nave forty-one feet wide, sixty-seven feet high, and three hundred feet long. The dome is one hundred feet across. The building, though not near so large as that of London, is superior in architectural beauty. It is a magnificent ornament to the city.

AN EXTRAORDINARY CABIN-BOY.—The Newcastle Chronicle has a notice of an extraordinary youth who fell recently into the hands of the River Tyne police. His name is Alex. Hallonbury aged twelve years, the cabin-boy of the "Helios," a Russian vessel then waiting in the Tyne for America. The lad had run off from the vessel, and was captured by the police, who overtook him at Middlesborough. This extraordinary child is a native of Wiburg, and has been at the sea since he was nine years of age. His father died when the boy was ten weeks old. In his short life the boy has visited Seville, Cadiz, London, Leghorn, Falmouth and the Tyne, and made a long trading voyage in a schooner to the sea of Azov. He was never at school in his life, notwithstanding which he can talk five languages—English fluently, and writes a good steady hand. His mother is a Fin, and can talk six languages; he learnt four from her, but the English he picked up in London, while his vessel was in a graving dock repairing. The captain of the vessel, a kind-hearted man apparently, has no fault to find with the boy, except, as North-country mothers would say, that "he is hempy and mischievous," and defies the cook and steward, his chief, who is no linguist. The little fellow has gone off with the vessel to America.

The Farmer's Pest.

Weeds, it should be recollected, are always more exhausting to the soil than either roots or grain crops. They are indigenous, consequently gross feeders, and abstract from the soil only those elements of fertility which are indispensably requisite to sustain the more valuable and cultivated crops. It should ever be a rule with the farmer to allow no plant to perfect its seed on his premises, that will, in any way, diminish the productiveness of his soil. There are many weeds which, if cut close to the soil, while in inflorescence, inevitably die; and others, if so treated, will not start again till the following year; or, if they do, it will be very feebly, and with so little vigor, that they will affect but little injury, comparatively speaking, and without any possibility of producing seed. Mullen, thistles, burdocks, and many other noxious productions of a similar class, may be eradicated by placing a tablespoonful of salt upon the stump of each plant after cutting it. When these weeds are "in force," we have frequently found it profitable to sow salt freely after moving, as the exuding fluids of the roots dissolve it, and of course take a portion of it into their vessels, where it acts as a most efficient destroyer. If a field infested with thistles be mowed when the thistles are in full bloom, and salt, say two bushels to the acre, be sown upon the stumps, and sheep permitted to graze upon the enclosure, it is said that the thistles will be at once destroyed. This is, perhaps, a more economical method of eradication than removing the plants by the roots, which is tedious, expensive, and but seldom effectual.

William Tell Out-Telled.

A Rhine paper relates the following circumstances as having lately occurred at the town of Speyer. It appears that a weaver, known as the best rifle shot of the district, bethought him of affording a crowning proof of his unerring aim. He therefore took his rifle in one hand, and his son, twelve years old, in the other, and then, posting his boy at the end of an alley in his garden, placed an ordinary-sized potato on his head, raised his weapon, aimed, fired, and cut the potato in two, leaving the child neither scathed nor frightened, so confident was the latter in his father being possessed of a charmed ball. Having talked of this fact to his neighbors, and they doubting the truth of the assertion, the weaver offered to renew the exploit forthwith in their presence, although evening had set in. Thereupon the bystanders, in lieu of dissuading the man from the attempt, played the part of Gesler, and taunted him to the proof. The son was therefore recalled, and placed as before, with a potato on his cap, at fifteen yards, while, it being dark, he steadily held a lantern in his raised hand. The rifle was again loaded, raised, carefully aimed—fired; and again the unerring bullet cleft the lower part of the potato, slightly grazing the cap. The neighbors, who probably never read the heart-rending words which the illustrious Schiller placed in the mouth of Tell when he was compelled to strike the apple from his dear child's head, applauded loudly. Not so the magistrates. They ordered the Speyer Freischutz before them, and after declaring that he must be mad, or a heartless brute, ordered him to be fined and imprisoned for five days, with the assurance that, if he ever renewed his perilous essays, he should be shut up in a mad house, if he escaped the scaffold for murder.

Salting Hay.

Judging from what I have seen within my own sphere of observation, I should say that the business of salting hay, where it is done at all, is done in a rather slovenly and injudicious method. The common practice seems to be, to unload a whole wagon full of hay at once, without the sprinkling on of any salt, and then throw on in handfuls, a peck or so, when the unloading is completed. This will necessarily make some of the hay excessively salt, while a part will receive no benefit from it at all. Some assert, in defense of this slovenly and wholesale mode of salting hay, that the salt will rise through the whole load, from what was put on before each load; and some again speak of the salt being sure to soak down from above. Neither supposition has any plausibility to support it. I am satisfied, both from experience and the nature of things, that the better way of applying salt is to sprinkle a little, say from a teaspoonful to a table-spoonful, upon each forkful as it is unloaded. Any boy could attend to this. Even little girls have sometimes turned out and done this, in the midst of the hurry of hay harvest. But where neither little boys nor girls can be had to attend to the regular sprinkling of salt upon every forkful of hay, I think it a matter of so much importance, that I take a man from his work in the field to attend to it.

When salt is thus evenly sprinkled over your hay as it is stowed away in the barn, you need give yourself no concern about salting those creatures that partake of it during the winter. They will get a little every day, every meal, with their hay. This certainly seems more natural and healthy than getting a whole lot at once, at intervals of a week or so. The quantity at which I aim to have used, is as near as may be to a peck to each ton of hay.

Postal Anomalies.

The postage on a letter exceeding an ounce in weight by the smallest scruple, transmitted to India via Marseilles, is 7s. 9d! This is probably the most expensive route in the world. Still it is not the weight or bulk of the mails conveyed in this direction that makes this exorbiant charge for letter postage necessary. For a copy of the London Times, weighing three ounces, is transmitted to India via Marseilles for 3d., or for only 1d. per ounce. Thus manuscript mail matter is charged at the rate of more than £12,000 per ton in this direction, whilst printed matter pays only at the rate of £400 per ton. The postal anomalies in other directions are more striking still. From the Channel Islands to the remotest of the Shetland group, changing from steamer to railway and from railway to steamer, for nearly 1,000 miles, the charge on a single letter weighing half an ounce is 1d; from Dover to Calais—two ports almost within sight of each other—the charge on a letter of the same weight is 1s. 3d! From the western boundary of Texas to the north-eastern boundary of the American Union, a distance of 3,000 miles 1s. ½d. From Dover to San Francisco in California, via the United States, involving three Ocean transits, each averaging 2,000 miles, besides three inland services, 1s. 2d.; from Dover to Calais, a distance of less than 30 miles, one shilling and three pence for a letter weighing half an ounce! The charge on a single letter from London to New York is 1s. 0d.; but from London to San Francisco, via New York, 1s. 2d., leaving only 2d. for the cost of its transmission from New York to Chagres, thence across the Isthmus to Panama, thence by Ocean steamer to San Francisco, a voyage of about fifteen days! These are some of the postal anomalies which would be removed by the establishment of a Universal Ocean Penny Postage.

ELIHU BURRITT.

LONDON, June 24, 1853.

IMPORTED STOCK.—A letter from Philadelphia, dated July 21, says:—

"Quite a sensation was created yesterday, at Shippen st. wharf, by the arrival of the British ship Crown, Capt. Duncan, from Liverpool, having on board fifty head of Durham cattle, thirty-two sheep, one celebrated Cleveland Bay Horse, and a Neapolitan Sow, with a fine litter of pigs. The cattle alluded to were selected with the greatest care, from the most celebrated herds in England, and a number of them are from the collection of Lord Feversham, one of the most noted agriculturists in that country. A portion of this fine stock is the property of R. Atchison Alexander, one of the most wealthy young men in Kentucky, and the remainder belong to a company of farmers in the counties of Fayette, Bourbon and Woodford, in that State. The expense of introducing this fine breed of cattle will be over fifty thousand dollars, as they have been purchased without regard to expense, as may be inferred from the fact of a bull and heifer having cost five hundred and twenty-five guineas, or twenty-six hundred and twenty-five dollars."

VARIETY.

In Coleridge's time, school discipline was very severe, and it was insisted that all domestic ties should be forgotten so long as a boy was at school. On the first day of the attendance of Coleridge, after the holidays, he was observed to be crying—probably feeling a little homesick. The master said sharply to him, "Boy! The school is your father! Boy! The school is your mother! Boy! The school is your brother! Boy! The school is your sister! Boy! The school is your first cousin, and your second cousin, and all the rest of your relations! Let us have no more crying!"

When I gaze into the stars, (says Carlyle) they look down upon me with pity from their serene and silent spaces, like eyes glistening with tears over the little lot of man. Thousands of generations, all as noisy as our own, have been swallowed up by Time, and there remains no record of them any more. Yet, Arcturus and Orion, Sirius and Pleides, are still shining in their courses—clear and young as when the shepherd first noted them in the plain of Shinar! "What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue!"

"It may be observed, (says Dr. Lamb,) that when, by habit, we have conquered any dislike, or formed any appetite for any substance, however unnatural, the dislike does not appear to return by relinquishing the habit. Tobacco is at first abominable; but let a man once become fond of it, the relish will continue for life. He may cease to smoke or to take snuff, because he thinks it wrong or hurtful—but the original disgust never returns. So it is of olives, fermented liquors, and other things. This shows the impropriety of giving children wine, or anything else, which it would be better they should never like."

Give us the open, frank, full, and vividly marked countenance, which bespeaks a cheerful, ingenuous, and manly soul within, that despises selfishness, ingratitude, and meanness; a soul that loves its kind, and sympathises with its joys and sorrows; a soul ever assiduous for human attainment; a soul full of lofty genius, and a noble moral energy, ready for every good word and work. In fine a cheerful and enterprising spirit, solicitous to advance mankind in all that ennobles human character, and fits man for peace in life and calmness in death.

The best way of making coffee is to put the ground coffee into a wide-mouthed bottle over night, and pour rather more than half a pint of water upon each ounce and a half, to cork the bottle, in the morning to loosen the cork, put the bottle into a pan of water, and bring the water to a boiling heat; the coffee is then to be poured off clear, and the latter portion strained, that which is not drank immediately is kept closely stoppered, and heated as it is wanted.

In a country grave-yard, in New Jersey, there is a plain stone erected over the grave of a beautiful young lady, with only this inscription upon it:—

"Julia Adams, died of thin shoes, April 17, 1839, aged 19."

One stone, more conspicuous than the rest, has this singular inscription upon it;—

"Here lies the body of John Jones, who never held an office. An honest man."

Six things, says Hamilton, are requisite to create a "happy home." Integrity must be the architect, and tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed by affection, lighted up with cheerfulness, and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere and bringing in fresh salubrity day by day; while over all, as a protecting canopy and glory, nothing will suffice except the blessing of God.

The true secret of earthly happiness is to enjoy pleasures as they arise; for that man who can keep his eye upon the bright present, while it is bright, tastes the cup of sweetness prepared for him; but we are prone to look forward to dark objects, while we should be enjoying those that are more agreeable.

Avoid the man who says the world owes him a living. Don't order a new pair of boots until you have put the last patch on the old ones. If you are poor, it is some consolation that you can shave yourself. Don't discard an old garment for a new fashion. A new set of buttons revive an old coat.

One of the most celebrated members of the Paris bar was consulted the other day by a younger practitioner, upon an obscure point of the law. "I cannot give you a positive answer, young man," replied the advocate, "I have pleaded once one way, and once the other, and I gained my suit at each time."

A correspondent, in speaking of the ladies at Saratoga, says they "wear their shoulders bare to the lower edge of decorum."

A GLARING ENDORSEMENT.

While the writer has not, at any time, regarded the "American Sunday School Union" as entirely free from countenancing and even perpetuating some of the "venal" errors of "Romanism," as that institution may esteem some of the extra-scriptural practices of the Catholic church, yet it never entered into his imagination to apprehend that a Protestant establishment would ever openly aid and abet in propping the bold pretensions of that reckless hierarchy—that inverted pyramid, founded as it nominally may be, on the Rock, but which has become so corrupted and top-heavy with human devices, as to darken truth and threaten destruction to all who may approach its fatal precincts.

On making some further researches into the "Mine Explored," from which I gave a page, with some remarks, in a late paper, I find the following singular endorsement, on page 165, of a glaring innovation on the simplicity of the gospel system:—

"The Feast of Dedication was instituted by Judas Maccabeus, about A. D. 3840, as a grateful memorial of the renewed dedication of the temple to the service of God, after it had been profaned by Antiochus Epiphanes. Our Lord's attendance on this feast JUSTIFIES the observance of religious seasons OF HUMAN APPOINTMENT." (John x. 22.)

The presence of the Lord Jesus Christ in Jerusalem at the season of the Feast of Dedication, "justifies the observance of religious seasons of human appointment," may answer the gloss of an astute Jesuit, but to be employed as an argument by plain, honest Protestants, is, to me, inconceivable. Where were the sturdy Baptist and Presbyterian members of the Committee on Publications? and who are they that endorse, so loosely, the multiplication of feasts, festivals, and holy days, which now number nearly all the days of the year? Who are they? We should like to see what kind of Baptists and Presbyterians are on the "watch-tower;" for we are told that "no book can be published to which any member of the Committee may object." We should like, marvelously, to know what Baptist, at least, endorses the above passage.

If the Feast of Dedication "justifies the observance of religious seasons of human appointment," why not endorse and adopt at once, the whole calendar of saints' days? Where, I ask again, were the Baptist and Presbyterian members of the Committee? Are they mere cyphers and tools that can be jostled aside to suit sinister purposes, or have they no moral courage to put their veto on such a flagrant innovation? We should like to know, marvelously, who they are? We have had Puseyism in England, and now have Nevins-chism—Mercersberg theology—in this country, sufficent to bring confusion into the Protestant camp—enough to lead us hood-winked to the very gates of Rome; but we trust that we shall be spared becoming engulphed in the vortex of the "Romish" caldron, by that mighty engine, "the American Sunday School Union."

It behooves all true Protestants to be chary, very chary indeed, and particularly in these days, when wolves are stealing into the fold in sheep's clothing, in countenancing and adopting any such latitudinous principles. The Feast of Dedication, at the time, may have been innocent and appropriate enough. It doubtless was founded in profound religious impulse, not of an individual, but of all Israel, and arising from so pure and praiseworthy a motive as to appear to have been smiled upon by Divine approbation; but it was introduced under very peculiar circumstances, and was never designed as a precedent for others. When we have an extraordinary proceeding in Sacred History, we may be sure to find an extraordinary occasion, and not a pretext or pattern for the multiplication of innovations, to be continued in after time. According to Dr. Brown, in his "Antiquities of the Jews," the Feast of Dedication was appointed by Judas Maccabeus, as a new dedication of the Temple and altar, after they had been polluted by Antiochus Epiphanes, who entertained a malignant hatred to the Jewish name. He forbade their children to be circumcised, restrained them in the exercise of their religion, killed many who disobeyed his mandates, burnt the books of their law, set up idolatry, and sacrilegiously carried off the altar of incense, the show-bread table, and the golden candlestick, from the Holy Place, with the other vessels and treasures of the Temple. He even sacrificed a sow upon the altar of burnt offerings, built a heathen altar upon the top of that sacred pile, and with the broth of swine's flesh sprinkled the courts and the Temple to defile them. After several ineffectual attempts to recover their Temple, the Lord, in due time, raised up Judas, son of Mattathias, who took the field, under a standard bearing as a motto the original of the following words in Exodus: "Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the Gods?" Under this banner and this devout leader, they became completely victorious. It was from an abbreviation, formed of the initials of these words, that they formed the Hebrew word, represented in English by M-k b-i, and hence Judas himself was called Maccabeus, and all those who fought under him, Maccabees. After giving liberty to Judea, by these means, the new dedication of the Temple took place. Priests were appointed to take down the altar which Antiochus had profaned, to build a new one of unhewn stone, according to the law, and to hallow the courts. They began the day by some of the priests killing the morning sacrifice, laying it on the altar, and striking fire from flints to consume it, while others, going into the Holy Place, with part of that fire, burnt the incense on the golden altar, lighted the lamps of the golden candlestick, and laid the cakes on the table of show-bread. These things being done, Judas and his company, with all who were present, bowed with their faces to the ground, and besought the Lord that they might come no more into such troubles.

It is easy to conceive the joy which the Israelites would feel, on the reëstablishment of the daily service; and we can readily enter into their feelings, when they prolonged the service of it for eight days. We are therefore prepared to learn, how they kept alive that signal event among posterity. The greatest religious countenance given to the festival, while the Temple stood, was the singing of the Hallel in the Temple every day, as long as the solemnity lasted; and the general illumination, which annually took place throughout the land, showed the readiness of all ranks to comply with the decree. Josephus, in his account of this festival, says, "They were so very glad at the revival of their customs, when, after a long time of intermission, they unexpectedly had regained the freedom of their worship, that they made it a law for their posterity, that they should keep a festival on account of the restoration of their temple-worship, for eight days. And from that time to this we celebrate this festival, and call it Lights."

This was no ordinary occasion, and no ordinary call for holy joy and public thanksgiving. The Temple devoted to the living God had been desecrated, defiled by impious hands, and had been given over to heathen pollution. The Lord raised up a servant to overcome the enemies of Israel, and when victory had crowned their arms, and the daily worship of the Almighty was restored, after the custom of their fathers, in their grateful homage, they made this offering of eight days rejoicing. It was a very extraordinary occasion, indeed, and just such a one as we might look for the Lord to approve. It was befitting for man to institute it, voluntarily, as a thank-offering for a peculiar and most distinguished favor to that people, rather than the Lord impose by imperial authority. It did not conflict with any of the Lord's economy or appointments, nor did it detract, in the least, from His prerogative to institute and set aside. It was, I repeat, an extraordinary occasion, but no precedent for imitation, for there can be no occasion like it again.

While the foregoing proceeding may be allowable, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, yet we must have better proof than we have before us, that it was, absolutely, a religious service, and better evidence than we have, before we can assume, that the Lord attended, and, by his presence, gave countenance to it, as a religious service, or that he recognized the obligation to be present, and thereby "justify religious seasons of human appointment."

What are the naked facts in the case. Allusion is had to the Lord's presence at Jerusalem in the season of the feast of dedication, in but one passage in the New Testament (John x. 22,) and that in a most equivocal manner. It does not define the specific occasion sufficiently clear to avoid doubt. It is only inferred that it was the festival commemorating the third dedication, that instituted by Judas Maccabeus; but it does not state, as Grotius, Prideaux, and others assume, that Christ not only honored the festival with his presence, but that he came thither for the purpose of bearing part in the ceremonies in solemnizing it. On the contrary, in the absence of all testimony to fortify that assumption, we find him there fulfilling his mission as the Messiah, and preaching the doctrines of the new and better Covenant—far better than the blood of goats and calves and bulls—a mission that brought war against the existing order of things, yea even divisions into the household of Israel. He was there to preach righteousness, and not to uphold empty forms. There is not a particle, not a shadow of evidence that he went up to the Temple to take part in, to conform, in any manner, to any of the service appointed for the occasion. The most that can be made of his presence at Jerusalem, is, that he happened there at the time; and the most that can be made of the festival, is, that it was nothing more nor less than a national feast—a national season of rejoicing for deliverance, somewhat like unto our annual festival of the Fourth of July. It was a season of national festivity, celebrated with the ordinary demonstrations of national rejoicing, and was not marked by any special religious exercises, save singing the Hallel in the Temple once a day during the continuance of the festivities. Instead of being found partaking in, or conforming to, any of the services, Christ was preaching the laws of his own kingdom. Let the reader peruse the tenth chapter of the Gospel by John, and he will be wiser.

So much for Christ's attendance on, and countenance given to a national festival, which is put forth to "justify the observance of religious seasons of human appointment." Where were the learned Presbyterian and the staunch, unflinching, non-conforming Baptist members of the Committee of Publication, to allow such a sentiment to appear under their sanction? To justify a religious observance of human appointment, from the passage under remark, is about equaled, and only equaled, by the argument some times deduced from the miracle of the Saviour's converting water into wine at the marriage in Canaan, for men "well drunken," justifies drunkards and drunkenness.

Further, it was a prominent part of the blessed Saviour's mission, to emancipate the mind of oppressed man from the trammels of human tradition; and, therefore, he very early taught his disciples, "Call no man Rabbi"—Fathers of Traditions. Under the old economy these teachers became absolute spiritual masters. Christ would not have any such power exercised over his disciples. In no instance did he recognize the counterfeit inventions of men as legitimate service, but uniformly repudiated all such pretensions, and directed obedience only to our "Father in heaven." As "he spoke as one with authority," may it not be as probable, that he was repudiating worship, (if it was religious service,) instituted by man, when we find him interrogated, on the occasion, whether he really be the Christ? If there as an Isrealite, bearing part in the service, why the question? It carries prima facia evidence, that he was teaching or reproving. The whole scriptural account shows, that he was preaching the laws of his own kingdom. If his presence makes any thing in the case, it makes much against the assumption of "justifying religious observances of human appointment." The whole tenor of the New Covenant is at direct variance with countenancing any extra scriptural appointments, and the words and the spirit of the teachings of the Lord Jesus denounce any such presumptuous meddling. The Lord only can appoint and impose—man, under peculiar circumstances, may offer a public thanksgiving for special favors to a church or a nation; but these occasions, for security, ought to be very few—ought to be voluntary, never obligatory. Grotius justly restricts this proceedure to a memorial of "public blessings" conferred on man by his Maker. The only sure guard to save us from another incubus—a "ministration of death"—unquestionably is, to eschew all human appointments, and cleave strictly to a "thus saith the Lord," for every religious institution and every religious service. What at first may have been an innocent enough festival, in time becomes a fixed institution, an onerous observance, claiming fealty; and what may originally have been attractive and beautiful, may become deformed and heinous, from the redundancy of the natural tendencies of human nature to multiply outward ordinances and ceremonies. In a word, the primitive beauty and simplicity of the Christian church has already become covered with warts and excressenses, under the system alluded to, (many of which have found their way into the Protestant church,) until a reformation is loudly called for, to amputate and extirpate the whole conglomeration of extra-scriptural appointments from that fungoid body. In such a crusade, I should look to find the "American Sunday School Union" in the van, instead of covertly skulking behind the opponents of evangelical truth, and affording "aid and comfort" to the enemy. SYSTEM AND PRINCIPLE.

A short time since the Rev. Mr. A——— presented to my people the claims of one of our great benevolent societies; and on Monday I called with him on several members of the congregation. Entering the counting-room of a merchant, the following interviews in substance occurred:

Mr. A.—"Good morning, Mr. B———; our openings for usefulness are multiplying, and all that the churches will intrust to us, we can most profitably employ in the field of our labors."

Mr. B.—"I am always glad to see you, Mr. A———, and to do what I can for your noble society," handing him a liberal donation; "we all ought to feel that we are but stewards, and be diligent in doing good while we may."

Mr. A.—"Thank you, thank you, Mr. B———. We know you are a steadfast friend, and so is your partner, Mr. C———, is he in this morning?"

Mr. B.—"No, sir; he is in Europe. He was unexpectedly called to France on business, and sailed in the steamer some weeks since, to be absent about six months."

Mr. A.—"Then, I suppose, we shall lose his subscription this year?"

Mr. B.—"No, sir. One of the last things he did before sailing was, to request me to attend to his charities with the same care as to his other business, and to give, for him, to his various objects of benevolence, as they might come before our church, about the same as he gave last year, or, if any any thing, rather more, as this year we have been prospered. Do your remember what was the amount of his subscription last year?"

Mr. A.—"One hundred dollars."

Mr. B.—"Well, here is a check for one hundred and fifty dollars, which is about what I think he would give if he were at home."

With thanks to the giver, and especially to Him who had prompted the gift, the agent went on his way, wishing—1. That all would feel that they were but stewards. 2. That all would consider their charities a part of their business; and, 3. That all would give to the great objects of benevolence systematically and on principle, whether at home or abroad.

THOUGHTS FOR MINISTERS.

Do not rest without success in your ministry. Success is the rule, under a living ministry; want of it is the exception.

We must have the taste of a manna in our mouth, "milk and honey" under our tongue, else we can not tell of its sweetness.

Prayer is more powerful than preaching. It is prayer that gives preaching all its power.

If satan can only make you a covetous minister, a lover of pleasure, a lover of praise, a lover of good eating, then he has ruined your ministry.

Preach the word, the most essential parts of it, especially. I would humbly suggest for the consideration of all ministers, whether they should not preach more in the manner of God's word. It is certain the fathers used to preach in this manner.

Brethren, they will not thank us in eternity for speaking smooth things, and crying, "Peace, peace," when there is no peace. No, they may praise us now, but they will curse our flattery in eternity.

Speak boldly; what matters in eternity the slight awkwardness of time.

McCheyne's biographer says of him, "He fed on the word, not in order to prepare himself for his people, but for personal edification. To do so was a fundamental rule with him."

It was his wish to arrive nearer at the primitive mode of expounding the scriptures in his sermons. He said, "I am just an interpreter of scripture in my sermons."

"Not the words he spake, but the holy manner in which he spake, was the chief means of arresting souls."

I SEE THEE STILL.

BY CHARLES SPRAGUE.

I see thee still;
Remembrance, faithful to her trust,
Calls thee in beauty from the dust;
Thou comest in the morning light,
Thou'rt with me through the gloomy night;
In dreams I meet thee as of old;
Then thy soft arms my neck enfold,
And thy sweet voice is in my ear.
In every scene to memory dear
I see thee still.

I see thee still
In every hallowed token round;
This little ring thy finger bound;
This lock of hair thy forehead shaded;
This silken chain by thee was braided;
These flowers all withered now, like thee;
Sweet sister, thou did'st cull for me;
This book was thine—here did'st thou read;
This picture—ah, yes, here indeed,
I see thee still.

I see thee still—
Here was thy summer noon's retreat;
Here was thy favorite fireside seat;
This was thy chamber—here each day,
I sat and watched thy sad decay;
Here, on this bed, thou at last did'st lie;
Here, on this pillows, thou did'st die;
Dark hour! once more its woes unfold—
And then I saw thee, pale and cold,
I see thee still.

I see thee still;
Thou art not in the grave confined—
Death can not chain the immortal mind;
Let earth close o'er its sacred trust,
But goodness dies not in the dust.
Thee, O my sister! 'tis not thee,
Beneath the coffin's lid I see;
Thou to a fairer land art gone—
There let me hope, my journey done,
To see thee still.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF HEATHENISM.

A correspondent of the Morning Star, writing from India, gives the following sad illustrations of heathenism as it is seen in the present day:—

About a mile to the north-east of our new location of Santipur, is a respectable village called Raibania, and thither I proceeded on Monday evening last, with a view to proclaim Christ to the assembled multitude. I took up my position with Silas Curtis, a native preacher, and Bhabyobat Barik, a nominal Christian, beside a huge timber, about twenty or thirty feet long, planted upright, at the top of which, swung by the middle on a sort of pivot, another timber longer still but much lighter. After waiting a time, and conversing with a few bystanders, the throng came on with shout and drum and waving flags and tinkling bells, all in gala attire, to do honor to Mahadeb, the presiding deity of the festival.

The first spectacle that met my view consisted of a number of rude, ungainly cars, as it were, in which were men lying on their backs, with unsheathed swords, edge uppermost, under them. These however took very good care to place pillows and cushions under their backs and legs in such a way as to lift their loins off the edge of the sword. This puerile deception was paraded as an evidence of the presence and watchful care of Mahadeb over the safety of his votaries, that they should not be wounded by the weapons on which—or rather over which—they lay. I am inclined to think the swords themselves were blunted, for fear of accidents.

The next was a distressing sight. Men having the skin of their sides pierced through, danced about, between two parallel cords passing through their wounds—the cords being kept in position by two men, one ahead and one behind—thus acting as setons. Now these poor deluded creatures rushed forward, madly tossing their arms on high, then suddenly capering with fantastic gestures, began their backward movement along the length of the cords through their sides.

The third, and most wretched sight, was a short man of Herculean frame and sinister cast of countenance, rendered perfectly hideous by having his tongue kept out by means of two iron tridents passing through it, while from his back, just below each scapula, depended a hook, which was stuck through his skin. After capering about most violently for a time, he ascended a scaffolding erected for the purpose, and having the hooks attached to his back lashed on to the smaller beam already alluded to at one extremity, while by means of a rope tied on to the other extremity of the timber, he was swung round and round to the infinite delight (!) of the people, and the honor of Mahadeb, scattering from his airy position garlands and single flowers on the spectators. Oh, it was horrible to behold! Language is insufficient to describe the mingled feelings that swayed me then, and even now a shudder comes over me at the bare idea of this hideous spectacle. Oh! save this people from this more than slavery. "How long shall the land mourn—for the wickedness of them that dwell therein?" And in reference to the small number of missionaries, comparatively with the people, I cannot but exclaim, "How should one chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight?"

"BE NOT WEARY."

Not many years since, Providence brought a little fatherless boy into the neighborhood where I live. He from the first won my affections, and I considered him more in the light of a brother than as a stranger. I soon saw with pleasure that he was considerably attached to me; and as he attended the Sunday school, and was for some time in my class, I ardently wished to lead him to the Saviour. I conversed with him in private several times; but as it did not appear to produce any lasting impression on his mind, I became weary, and gave over.

A few weeks since I walked from the house of God in company with him, and his whole theme was redeeming love. When we were about to depart, he adverted to the conversations I formerly had with him, and said he had felt a great deal, but wished to hide it from me.

"The more I prayed," said he, "the more I wanted to pray, and the more earnest I was; but at length I thought that there were no others serious, and that I should be ridiculed; and the next time you met me you did not press me to seek the Lord, and I by degrees lost it all; but had you continued to urge me, as you had done every time you saw me, I have not a doubt but that I should have obtained a hope then!"

SYMPATHY WITH THE COMMON PEOPLE.

One of the causes of the failure of many ministers in doing good, is their want of sympathy with the common people whom they are aiming to reach. They neither know nor care to learn how they reason and feel on the subject of religion or any thing else. This evil is especially prevalent amongst ministers who are scholastic men, who have been shut up for years within the walls of Colleges and Seminaries of learning. We often find that a rude and comparatively uncultivated, but naturally strong-minded man, will sway his thousands of the common people, where his more polished neighbor does his hundreds. This is some times urged as an argument against learning in the ministry, but it is not a necessary result or concomitant to learning. We have a striking illustration that it is not in the person of the late Dr. Chalmers.

The life of Alexander Patterson, who was a man of very humble origin, has lately been published, from which we learn that his family were the especial objects of Dr. C.'s care and notice. It is said that his affection for "Saunders Patterson," who was an humble ploughman, was for a quarter of a century that of a fast friend. "Knowing his retiring modesty, which made him shrink from joining a circle of strangers, Dr. Chalmers used to invite him to tea or to breakfast alone, not grudging to spend two or three hours with him in converse about the things of God, and this when he was conducting two classes in the University, and sitting up habitually till one o'clock in the morning. Long before he came to Edinburgh, and during the blaze of his pulpit popularity, whenever the Doctor revisited Fife, he no sooner arrived at Dairsie Manse, than forthwith he made off for the adjoining farm where he found Saunders at the plough-tail, or otherwise employed as a farm servant. On such occasions he would bring his humble friend along with him to the Manse, and at family worship insist on his leading the devotions, "being greatly effected with his unction in prayer." One night Dr. Alexander had been invited to remain to supper; and on his retiring, Dr. Chalmers remarked to his hostess in his characteristic manner—"See, Madam, how Christianity teaches a man to handle his knife and fork."

When Dr. Chalmers was removed from St. John's parish in Glasgow, to the University of St. Andrews, he paid a visit, on his way to the latter town, to his friend Patterson at Dairsie-moor. Edie and he accompanied the Doctor to a neighboring village, expressing without reserve, as they went, their views as to his exchanging the pulpit for the professional chair. "I don't think," said Saunders, "that you should give up preaching for teaching." "Let us ask you a question, Saunders," rejoined the Doctor; "does the man who salts a pig, or the man who makes the salt which will salt many pigs, do the greatest service?" "The man who makes the salt," to be sure, was the reply. "Well," rejoined the Doctor, "I have been all this time salting the pig, and now I am going to make the salt." "Then the sooner you're in the salt pans, sir, the better," said Saunders.

A WORD TO PREACHERS.

We find the following sensible remarks on the importance of continued study to clergymen, in the Star in the West, from the pen of its New England correspondent. We commend them to all ministers of the Gospel:—

It is very evident that not a few preachers, of all denominations, greatly mistake in the estimate they put on the necessity of continued study. To preach well, a minister must comply with two conditions—he must, first of all, understand his subject; and, in the second place, he must be invigorated with his subject. To understand the subject, matter of a discourse is not enough—to have the plan of the discourse properly laid out is not enough—to know just what idea to start, and in what relation to start it, is not enough; in addition to all this, the preacher must, at the time of preaching, be imbued with the spirit of his discourse. Where this latter condition is not complied with, the very best sermon ever put into the English language will, in its effect, prove a failure. First, know what you mean to preach; second, feel the spirit of what you mean to preach; and then the sermon will take care of itself—in other words, will do its work. People often say, Such an one used to preach well; but now he is heavy, prosy, dull—now he preaches people to sleep; and they ask, What has occasioned the change? The answer is plain—he has stopped studying! Nothing but continued study can enable a preacher to preach even an old idea. Past study may fulfill one condition of successful preaching—it may give the preacher the matter and the arrangement of his discourse; but present study only can fulfill the second condition—present study only can imbue the preacher with the spirit of his discourse. If the most popular and effective preacher among us should throw himself entirely upon what he has acquired, rather than upon what he continues to acquire, he will very soon hear the people say, "He has had his day!" The important truth cannot be too constantly impressed upon all whom it concerns, that unremitting application alone can keep up the popularity and success of a minister. I suppose all our ministers are familiar with the doctrine of the certainty of punishment—could, at a moment's warning, preach a discourse on the subject; and yet if they had not just been thinking over the subject, have not just refreshed their minds with study relative to it, their preaching will fail. I have heard a man say that religious associations ought to withdraw fellowship from every preacher who does not compose two fresh sermons as often, at least, as twice in a month! I am by no means in favor of so stringent a rule; yet it is very evident, that a minister who does not compose new sermons cannot preach old ones. One of our ministers has preached one sermon seventy-five times, and he always preaches it well, because he is always a student—is always composing new sermons—is always refreshing his mind by continued application. Rev. A. C. Thomas once said to me that there was danger in the habit of preaching old sermons; it was a temptation to give up the practice of composing new ones. Rev. A. A. Miner once remarked, that he never liked to trust himself in the pulpit, even with a discourse with which he was the most familiar, without previously refreshing his mind by a new study of its matter and form. Rev. T. P. Abell said to me once, while in conversation on the subject, that he never preached a sermon twice without much reluctance—he was afraid of the consequences. I have been told (I know not how correct the remark may have been) that the Rev. Theo. Clapp, of New-Orleans, never allows himself to preach the same sermon a second time. I presume no one would find any objection to the preaching of the same discourse any number of times, were it not for the tendency to indolence which the practice encourages. For myself, I like to hear a good sermon a second or even a third time. What I object to, what I would warn preachers against, is the vice of neglecting study. The success of our best, and permanently best preachers, is against this neglect. A man of the world may be able to amass wealth, and retiring from active life, draw, at any time, upon the fruits of his past activity. But not so the preacher; he may indeed draw upon the past; but to present to others what he thus draws, he must rely on present effort. If, in mercantile phrase, he retires upon the fortune of his mental acquisition, he will very soon discover that the people have retired too! In this world there is no success but in continued effort.

THE SMALL NUMBER OF THE ELECT.

Voltaire regarded the following extract from Massillon, as one of the finest specimens of eloquence. It is taken from this eminent preacher's sermon on "The small number of the elect." Massillon does not waste his time and words in this discourse, in dissertations upon the eternal decrees of God, &c., but deduces the small number of the saved from the conduct of men, from moral causes, from the fewness of the righteous on earth. The entire discourse is very forcible and animated. But when the orator came to the following passage, Voltaire says, the whole assembly involuntarily started to their feet, and that the murmurs of acclamation and astonishment disconcerted Massillon, but greatly increased the effect of his appeal. The animated tone, manner, and language of the French pulpit orator, is needed to give complete effect to his discourse.

"I pause with you, my brethren, who are here assembled. I speak no more of the rest of men; but regard you as if you were alone on the earth. And this is the thought that occupies and moves my soul. I imagine that this is your last hour, and the end of the world; that the heavens are about to open above you, and Jesus Christ appear in all his glory in the midst of his temple, and that you are assembled here like trembling criminals, to hear the sentence of mercy or of eternal death pronounced against you; for you may well flatter yourselves that you will die such as you are to-day. All these desires of change and amendment which amuse you, will amuse you till the bed of death. This is the experience of all ages. All that you will in the future find new in you, will perhaps be a greater and more aggravated account to render to God, than what you have to-day. And as to what you will yet be, were you to be judged this moment, you could almost decide what will be your fate when you leave this life.

"I ask of you, then, and I ask it of you, terror-stricken, not separating in this respect my fate from yours, but placing myself in the same position in which I desire to regard yourself—I ask of you, then, if Jesus Christ should appear in this temple, in the midst of this assembly, the most august in the world, in order to judge you—to make the terrible separation between the sheep and the goats—believe you, that the greater number of those here would be placed on his right hand? Believe you, that the division would be equal? Believe you, that even ten righteous men would be found here, whom once God could not find in five entire cities? I ask it of you—you know not, and I know not myself—Thou alone, Oh God, knowest those that are thine! But if we know not those who belong to him, we know, at least, that sinners are not his. But who are the faithful here assembled? Titles and dignities here count nothing; you will be despoiled of them by Jesus Christ. But who are they? Many sinners who wish not to reform their lives; yet more, who desire it, but who defer their conversion. Again, others who never reform but only again to fall back. Finally, a great number who believe they have no need of conversion. These are they who are reproved! Take away these four classes from this assembly, for they will be taken away in the great day; and then appear, ye just! Where are ye? Thou holy remnant of Israel, pass to the right hand! Pure grain of the Lord, separate yourself from this chaff, destined for eternal fires! Oh God! where are thine elect? and what it left for thine inheritance?"

WHAT TO DO, AND HOW TO DO IT.—The remark of Rev. John Newton, below, deserves to be written on the tablet of every heart:—"I see in this world," he observes, "two heaps—one of human happiness and one of misery; now, if I can take but the smallest bit from the second heap, and add to the first, I carry a point. If, as I go home, a child has dropped a half-penny, and if, by giving it another, I can wipe away its tears, I feel that I have done something. I should be glad, indeed, to do great things, but I will not neglect such little ones as this." These little things are what we all can do, and we should encourage ourselves with the thought that

"The drying up a single tear, hath more
Of honest fame, than shedding seas of gore."

ASPECT OF THINGS ABROAD.

That the extinction of the Ottoman Empire is foretold in the Scriptures of Truth, we have never doubted. That Russia was the Power ordained to bring it about, was never so clear to our mind; yet present indications very strongly favor this view. It is well known to have been a long-cherished intention of the Czars to plant the Russian standard at Constantinople. There the Autocrat means to have his winter palace. He covets the maritime advantage which the possession of that city would give him, and he means to have it. Every movement looks steadily towards this object, nor will it be abandoned, if the accomplishment of it can by any means be effected.

On the other hand, the integrity of the Ottoman Empire is guarantied by the other Powers of Europe, so that what is called the "Balance of Power" may not be seriously disturbed. But what will the guaranties of other Powers avail, when the time foretold in Prophecy is fulfilled? "Many are the devices of a man's heart; but the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand" Prov. 19: 21. Should all the Powers on earth combine to establish the Sultan upon his throne, they will surely be defeated, when the Lord's time for fulfilling his purpose has come. Whether that time has now come, we do not know. But if it has, the allied Powers will not be able to fulfill their pledges. They will become jealous of one another, so that they cannot act in concert, or they will be outwitted by the Autocrat, and entertained by one pretext or another, till it shall be too late to avert the denouement.

It does really seem as if things were now assuming precisely this phase. The allied Powers are jealous of one another. England and France were always suspicious of each other's designs, and since the usurpation of Louis Napolean, matters have been nothing bettered, but rather made worse in this respect. No reliance can be placed upon Austria, as it is well known that her heart is not in the right place. Russian emissaries are, and have been for years, striving to foment these mutual jealousies, that the Czar might gain his grand object, while the Powers were watching each other. In the mean time, the Russian troops have crossed the Pruth, are in the occupancy of the Provinces of Moldavia and Wallachia, have taken the control of the Post-Offices of those provinces, and have outraged former treaties to such a degree, that all the world looks on in wonder that something decisive is not done by the allied Powers to put a check to their encroachments. Yet, by a strange sort of infatuation, the English and French fleets have advanced to the Golden Horn, only to make a little puerile display, while their ambassadors and cabinet-officers have been puzzling their brains to invent some method, by which the insolence of Russia may go unwhipt of justice. It actually seems as if a spell had come upon them. How easy it is for God to turn all their counsels into foolishness! When he decrees it, the firmness of the Englishman hesitates, the courage of the Frenchman fails, and the wits of the most astute statesmen are baffled. Ways are never wanting with the Almighty to defeat the powers that stand in his way.

The latest intelligence says, that the representatives of England, France and Prussia have agreed upon the basis of an arrangement to be proposed to Russia, and Turkey. What that arrangement is, has not yet transpired. The probability is, however, that it is such as gives to Russia about all she asks, or all, at any rate, which she will think it politic to demand in the present crisis. Recede from her purpose she will not, though she may be willing to patch up a truce, till her emissaries abroad shall succeed in fomenting farther jealousies; in which case she will have weakened the hands of the combined Powers, and gained time for making her last bold but decisive stroke. She is wide awake, and is not likely to be caught napping.

Let not the Christian sleep. The time cannot be very far distant, when the Lord will arise to shake the nations. A general war on the European Continent would not, it has been thought, be likely to disturb the existing state of things in America. It has been supposed that we were too far removed from the seat of struggle, to be seriously affected by it. But see how unexpectedly the providence of God orders things! The arrest of an insignificant Hungarian refugee by an Austrian corvette, in Smyrna harbor, comes near embroiling the United States and Austria in a difficulty, which no Diplomacy could heal. Indeed, it is not improbable, that the Court of Vienna will regard the behavior of Capt. Ingraham as an act of hostility, for which they are entitled to demand reparation from our Government. It is not at all likely that such reparation will be given. And when to this is added the general feeling of our people in regard to intermediation in the affairs of Europe, fanned as it was, a short time since, by the mission of Kossuth; also the fact that the behavior of the American Captain and Consul are loudly praised in popular meetings held in England, as well as in some of the more democratic journals; also that there is, with a large class of our citizens, a spirit of adventure and daring, that would transport them by thousands across the sea to mingle in the exciting contests of the Old World—it seems likely enough that America may be called to bear a part in the performance.

The remarks subjoined are from the New York Tribune of the 6th inst. The views expressed are, substantially, such as we entertain; and being much to the point, we give them to our readers instead of any additional remarks of our own. T. B. B.

Peace or War.

The money-changers of the Old World are in ecstacies. The danger of war they trust is averted. Their high constable, Nicholas, so long idolized as the great conserver of Peace, Order and material Prosperity, is about to lay down the paving-stone which he just now threatened wantonly to hurl through their windows, giving the signal for a general row and smash-up. Not that he has actually done, or is even reliably reported to have said anything looking to the desired restoration of amity. His armies, 80,000 strong, still occupy the Principalities. His cannon line the banks of the Danube and command its navigation in the heart of Turkish Europe. His minions have taken possession of the Post-Office, and act as if they had no idea of leaving, at least in 1853. His satellites in the Moldavian Senate speak and act as if they expected never to see the standard of the Prophet again floating over their heads. Her Minister Nesselrode, in his last manifesto yet received, outrages justice, reason, current history, as audaciously as in any former utterance from St. Petersburg. The Wolf's complaint that the Lamb drinking from the stream below him had disturbed the water to his prejudice, never was more strikingly paralleled than in the Autocratic complaint of the timid and faltering advance of the French and English fleets to Besika Bay after and consequent upon the armed occupation of the Principalities by Russia. Most certainly, if the Czar had steadily resolved from the first to make a dash at Constantinople, in fulfillment of the long cherished design of his family, we see nothing in what is absolutely known of his more recent demonstrations to prove that he has been swerved from his purpose.

Still, we will assume that the stock-jobbers are well posted—that the danger of a Russian foray on the capital and empire of the Sultan has blown over. In that case, it is clear that the issue is substantially a Russian triumph. Czar Nicholas has carried a high head throughout the controversy, in undisguised defiance of the great Western Powers. He has all along spoken promptly, boldly, decisively. While the Turkish notes have been conciliatory, placating, almost supplicating, in their tone—while the British Ministry has been divided in its counsels, wavering in its policy, and begging of Parliament respite after respite from a discussion which must have led to its explosion—while even France, with manifest Right and universal Public Opinion emphatic in her favor, has been content to reply to Nesselrode's insolence in manifestos which indicate the Himalayan hight that exalts the great Napoleon above the little one. Russia has spoken uniformly as if she had a blow ready to back every word, and was quite indifferent as to the order of precedence in which the two should be delivered. And therefore, whatever may be the delicacy or ambiguity of phrase wherein the arts of diplomacy may veil the point, it is clear to every discerner that the result of this embroilment cannot be other than an exaltation of the prestige of Russia and a visible hastening of the inevitable day when St. Sophia shall be restored to Greek Christendom and half the edicts of the Autocrat be dated from his winter palace by the Golden Horn.

Essentially, there are but two Great Powers in Europe—Democracy and Russia—and the policy of the various Courts is controlled by their overmastering fears of one or the other. When Democracy becomes rampant and aggressive, they take shelter under the ægis of Russia; that danger apparently blown over, and the Autocrat attempting to reap his harvest while the weather is propitious, they recoil from his embraces and coquet a while with Democracy. And whenever the Continent shall again be shaken by the clearly impending convulsion, whatever may be the immediate issue, the ultimate harvest must be garnered by one or the other of the substantial belligerents.

To whomsoever may have been cajoled into the belief that the peace, if amity be now restored, to be more than a truce, we commend a thoughtful consideration of the late incidents in the harbor of Smyrna. There the mere arrest of an apparently insignificant and worthless refugee, all but led to a collision which must have caused a rupture which the arts of diplomacy would have been insufficient to heal. We state an obvious fact in saying that Capt. Ingraham, had he sunk the Austrian corvette in Smyrna harbor, as it was but a chance he did not, would almost inevitably have been the next President of the United States. Had the two ships been cruising off the harbor, instead of at anchor within it, where action must have been a gross outrage on neutral rights and resulted in a woeful destruction of life and property on shore, the collision could not have been averted.

A General War—a War of Opinion—a war which has had no parallel in importance since Napoleon's dethronement—is yet all but inevitable. When or where it shall break out, we do not presume to determine; but when the whole world is a powder-mill, the spark that is to fire it cannot long be wanting

RELIGIOUS TOLERATION.

In a speech of President Pierce, during his recent visit to Baltimore, he said what is generally interpreted to mean, that "the banner of religious toleration was first given to the breeze at Baltimore." If this assertion be true, then surely Baltimore has sadly degenerated in these days, for it is not a month since the Mayor of that city sanctioned the interruption and arrest of a preacher of the gospel for exercising the right of free discussion. But the truth of the President's assertion has been questioned by the editors of several newspapers, who maintain that the banner of religious freedom was first unfurled by Roger Williams. In an able article on the subject, the Providence Journal says:—

"Rogers Williams repudiated the idea of toleration, because it seemed to imply the right of government to withhold, as well as to give. He denied the power of human government over the conscience, and held that any human power exceeded its just authority in restraining it; he held that the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience, was as clear as the right to see or to breathe. And in maintenance of this great principle, even yet imperfectly understood, but which he grasped in all its breadth, he turned to the pathless wilderness and offered his prayers where no roof interposed between him and his God. Lord Baltimore was in his personal character the reverse of Roger Williams. We have no reason to doubt that he was tolerant; but he neither comprehended nor cared for religious freedom. He was a dissolute man, indifferent to religion, and looking upon the church only as the means of rewarding his boon companions with places, for which, of all others, they were least fitted. To make such a man the apostle of religious freedom, and to make a colony which decreed death as the punishment of heresy, the pioneer in religious freedom, is an assault upon the memory of Roger Williams."

SAVING ORDINANCES.

Oft-times the most conclusive argument against a positive law of religion is couched in the expression, "Well, I don't believe it is a saving ordinance." When, from a real hatred of religious institutions, or on account of their great unpopularity, this position is taken, he who takes it is secure against all the convictions and persuasions of truth.

We ask, what is meant by the assertion? Is it designed to express the thought, that in some of the ordinances, and not in others, there is a saving power? But with those who use the expression, we shall, perhaps, find all the institutions of religion in the same category. It is said, by one and another, Baptism, the Sabbath, public worship, the Lord's Supper, repentance, faith, &c., are not saving ordinances. How are we to know what are and what are not saving ordinances? If the Gospel point them out to us, we can be all agreed. If a sectarian or selfish policy dictate, then caprice, and not the love of religion, fixes the measure of duty, and all, or none, may be saving ordinances.

We suppose those who use the expression mean to say, that a neglect of such ordinances does not endanger the soul, and send it to perdition; or, that one may disobey certain laws of Jesus Christ, and not incur his disapprobation. If this be the intention, we still object to it, because it would impeach the ability of Jesus Christ to frame a perfect religion for his followers, and charge him with instituting religious laws with the intention of conniving at their infraction. Moreover, we are substantially taught that men will be judged by his Gospel. Hence, the assertion is but presuming on his mercy, while trampling on his ordinances.

We are disposed to adopt the assertion as true; and add, still further, that there are no "saving ordinances" whatever in religion. And while we make the admission, we condemn all who use it as a justification for disobeying any ordinance thereof. There is no saving element in any ordinance of religion. We never trust in any or all of them for salvation. We never attend to any of them with expectation that it will insure our salvation. We never make mention of them in our prayers, and attach to them the plea of merit or justification. There is salvation only in Jesus Christ, and he is the only saving ordinance in which we have hope. So we believe, and hope, and pray.

The use of the ordinances of religion is to prove our salvation, but not to procure it. Our observance of Baptism, the Sabbath, prayer, and other ordinances of religion, is the proof of our salvation, and not the means of it; for we never could heartily observe these, if we were unreconciled to God. Jesus Christ has become our salvation, and therefore we love and practice the ordinances of his religion. Our hearts approve them. They are the media of showing our love and reconciliation to Christ. They are spiritual institutions, and our transformed spirits love them, for their spiritual significancy, and because we are prepared to relish and enjoy them.

We object, absolutely and fully, to the use of the expression, because it conveys thoughts that are foreign to the economy of religion, and may lead simple persons into gross error. There is an absoluteness and a force in all the ordinances of religion, that give them a certain, definite, unchangeable character. The whole plan of religion is so well arranged, and adapted to the world's necessities, that any variation of it, under any circumstances, would spoil its perfection, and hinder its healthful operations. Hence he who acts upon the sentiment, that obedience to any law of religion is not always connected with the enjoyment of religion and its salvation hereafter, robs himself of the blessings connected therewith. The simple declaration that "it is not a saving ordinance," betrays a want of interest in it as an institution given by God for the comfort of his people. It shows that the heart is deceived, and is occupied with poorer feelings, and impurer sentiments.

The lover of the Lord Jesus Christ is a lover also of his Gospel; as says the Saviour, (John 14: 21,) "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me;" and again, (15: 14,) "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Hence we judge that keeping his commandments is the evidence of love to Christ, and not the cause of it. The whole force of the expression, relative to any law of religion, that "it is not a saving ordinance," is simply a proof that they who make it do not love those laws of religion; while the lover of the Lord Jesus Christ says, "How love I thy law."

The expression, "It is not a saving ordinance," is the closing argument, and is used only when all others fail. We have an illustration of its use in connection with the law of the Sabbath. It is some times gravely asked, "You don't expect the Sabbath will save you, do you? I don't think it is a saving ordinance." Again, thousands yield the controversy, by saying, "Well, if there is any Sabbath in the Bible it is the seventh day; but, I don't believe 'it is a saving ordinance.'" Now the force of all this is simply a proof that there is a determination to please the world; and that men had rather be in favor with the world than with God—that popular prejudice is more powerful with them than the compassion of Jesus Christ manifested in his arrangements for their happiness. Again, it is said, "Yes, I believe the seventh day is the Sabbath, and if I lived with Sabbatarians I should keep it; but the Sabbath is not a saving ordinance." This is simply declaring that the customs of the world are preferred to the law of Christ. And finally, it is plead, "There is no Sabbath under the Gospel; the Sabbath is not a saving ordinance." And yet the Sabbath itself—its absolute necessity, and its constant blessings—are so interwoven with the perfection of the Gospel, and all its arrangements for the progress of religion and the happiness of Christians, that men are under the necessity, after they have demolished the Sabbath of the Bible, by saying that it is not a saving ordinance, of instituting a new one in its place.

While we insist that there are no saving ordinances, in the sense in which the phrase is used, we also believe, that no man will or can be saved, who deliberately and knowingly refuses to obey any ordinance of religion. In doing thus, he deliberately disobeys what God has commanded, and becomes a transgressor. Such an act shows his alienation from God, and consequently his unfitness for salvation. G.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday Steamboating.

GLASGOW, July 22d, 1853.

The Sunday observers are with dismay beginning to apprehend that steamers plying on the Clyde, on their adopted day of rest, is an established fact. Although the pier gates at Dunoon were shut against the desecrationists, this did not prevent a landing being effected by small boats—and the Board of Admiralty have been written to, in the expectation that Government may intimate that the closing of the gates is illegal. And although a correspondent of the Scottish Guardian, (the Free Church Glasgow organ,) says that a gentleman high in the legal profession has expressed an opinion that the Glasgow Harbor and River Triest can prohibit vessels plying for hire at the wharfs on the Clyde on Sunday, those gentlemen do not seem disposed to put such power into force by asking an interdict—and the third Sunday's sail is advertised to-day, with additional places of destination. A meeting of Sunday friends is to be held here next week, however, to take into consideration the threatened danger; and one was held of the same description at Rothesay on Monday last. "The Emperor" steamer cannot, according to the terms of her license, proceed so far out in the Frith; but, it is easily to be foreseen that if she be permitted to continue to ply, and be successful, larger boats are likely soon to follow. The Rothesay people have appointed a Committee, and advertised the names in the Glasgow papers, to take whatever measures may be in their power to prevent such a landing on their shores. The Scottish Guardian of to day, counseling the adoption of this mode of resistance, admits that "there is no longer reason to believe that the promoters of Sabbath [Sunday] steamboats will fail of their purpose by being let alone." It farther prognosticates that "whenever the public have been sufficiently familiarized with the sailing of steamers on Sabbath, [Sunday,] the barrier will be removed which prevents other steamboat companies from sailing their vessels" on that day. Where, then, we may ask, is the Scotch reverence for Sunday, if all are waiting behind barriers only till some Sunday-desecrator shall overthrow that barrier? And what, we again ask, will become of the "universal observance" argument in favor of Sunday, when all shall be found to have so availed themselves of the liberty or license afforded over barriers thus thrown down? But that which the Guardian thus anticipates as a future achievement, some of the companies referred to have long ago accomplished. The Glasgow steamers for Liverpool and Dublin do sail their vessels regularly on Sundays, although they do not start on that day—but sometimes a very few hours before midnight—the commencement of Sunday, according to their mode of reckoning—and arriving at their destination while others are at worship. And, it is now publicly stated, that the very Dunoon tacksman, who indignantly closes his pier gates on that day, and indignantly advertises them shut, against open avowed desecrators, is yet regularly employed in taking passengers from these sea-going steamers while passing, and landing them at Dunoon. The Guardian, contemplating the growth of Sunday traffic, says there are now "some fifteen omnibuses running in the city" upon that day; and admits that this has grown out of the unnecessary and ostentatious use of carriages and cabs taking people to church. Other of our newspapers note the traffic with little condemnation. The Examiner, which affects to be a kind of religious newspaper, and whose editor labored in the ministry before betaking to the broadsheet, argues in a leader in last number, that the Sunday steamer company should have waited till they ascertained that a majority of the community were in favor of their sailing on Sunday. This is carrying out the universal observance argument fully—but reversing the mode of its application. The Daily Mail, noticing the discomfort of last Sunday, from continuous rain, says, "Surely a very late homeward-bound steamer on Saturday night, or another on Sunday, would be an act of charity." And although they think "none of the regular steamers could be spared on the latter day, [Sunday,] as they are generally undergoing needful repairs at their moorings," it is yet intimated that "there are yet transient steamers which might find it profitable." Those, therefore, which have no Sunday "work of necessity" in the way of repairs, may find it "profitable" to sail them.

THE JEWS.

Rev. Mr. Duffield, of Detroit, who spent last winter in the East, in a letter from Jerusalem says:—

"The blindness which has happened to Israel still continues. It is wonderful to see the extent and power of it. One of the most affecting sights I have witnessed during my travels, was encountered yesterday P. M. I repaired to the appointed spot to hear the lamentations of the Jews over their desolated temple, and scattered nation. The site of the ancient temple is now occupied by the Mosque of Omar. No Christian or Jew is allowed by the Mussulmen to enter its precincts. The nearest approach that the Jews can make to it, is to the large and massive stones of the walls which Solomon built from the bottom of the narrow valley or ravine, Tyropean, for the purpose of sustaining and forming the terrace or arches, which were built out from the base of the rock on its four sides, and on which the temple on Mount Moriah was originally constructed.

"I saw thirty-five Jews, standing or seated near these stones, all of them bowing, and restlessly swinging to and fro while they read their Scripture in the Hebrew, and some weeping bitterly as they uttered their wail of distress. One man sobbed as if his heart was ready to break, while he stood reading and trembling with emotion in his whole frame. Women, with white scarfs thrown over their heads, passed mournfully along the wall, some kissed their hands, whilst most sat in a sqatted or Turk-like position reading parts of their liturgy in Hebrew. I ventured, with a courteous salutation, to look upon the page, from which an aged man was quietly reading. He politely pointed his finger to the place. He was reading the 58th, 59th, and 60th Psalms. The whole scene was so deeply moving, exhibiting in such a powerful light the sad reality of the Jews' great national sorrow, and caused such a rush of solemn thoughts in my mind, that I was quite overcome by it."

THE LATE DR. SHARP.—It is seldom that a minister of the gospel enjoys the esteem of all Christian denominations more generally than did the late Dr. Sharp of Boston. Perhaps the secret of it may be found in the following extract from remarks made by him when the Baptist ministers of Boston and vicinity presented him with a silver vase and salver in token of their affection:—

"I have never supposed that persons could be won from the ways of sin and error, by calumny, by bitter denunciations, or by garbled misrepresentations of their opinions and practices; therefore, as you know, I have never resorted to such means. I have endeavored, by a full, clear and cogent exhibition of Bible truths, in their fair and just and mingled proportions, to commend them and my own ministry, 'to every one's conscience in the sight of God.' I have never aimed at temporary, but at permanent effects. I have not sought so much to call forth emotions, as to cultivate principles; and have never been so anxious to arouse your passions as to enlighten your minds. Nor have I labored so much to shape your opinions to any human creed, as to shape them to the truths of Holy Scripture. In my relations to society, I have never forgotten that I was a minister of Christ, and your minister. My office has always seemed to me to be as high, as honorable and as useful as any other, if not more so. I have, therefore, determined, at all seasons, that I never would do any thing knowingly, in all my social, civil or political relations, which would degrade that office, or lessen my just ministerial influence."

PROTESTANTS AND CATHOLICS IN CANADA.—The following estimate of the relative growth of Romanism and Protestantism in Canada, is given in Mackenzie's Weekly Messenger. It represents things in a more favorable light than we had supposed facts would justify—but the authority is very good:—

"In 1820 the population of the Canadas may have been 520,000, of whom, perhaps, 380,000 were Roman Catholics, and only 140,000 Protestants—exhibiting 19 to 7 of the whole country as in favor of the Roman Catholic church, its doctrines and worship. In 1853, our people may be assumed to number 2,000,000, of whom 940,000 belong to the Roman Catholic or ancient religion, and 1,060,000 to the Protestant—showing nearly eleven Protestants to every nine Catholics. The latter have gained 560,000 in thirty years, the former 920,000. The Roman Catholics have more than doubled their number—but the Protestants have increased theirs more than seven fold."

REGARD FOR ORTHODOXY.—The following paragraph is going the rounds of the papers. It shows a regard for orthodoxy, greater, if possible, than was exhibited by a branch of the same church in excluding Mr. Morton for keeping the seventh day as the Sabbath:—

"The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian or Covenanted Church, lately met in Chicago, Ill. One of their ministers, the Rev. David Kennedy of Harrisville, Pa., preached in the First Presbyterian Church. During the service, he read two of the hymns in use in that congregation. For this act, he was arraigned before the Synod and a motion was made for his suspension. The Synod, after a long discussion, directed the Presbytery to which Mr. Kennedy belongs to put him on his trial, for giving out the two 'hymns' in question."

BIBLIOTHECA SACRA.—The July number of Bibliotheca Sacra and American Biblical Repository, has the following rich table of contents:—

I. Characteristics, Duties and Culture of Woman, by Barnas Sears, D. D. II. Lucian and Christianity, by Adolph Planck, translated by Rev. A. Hovey. III. The Relation of the Grecian to Christian Ethics, a translation from Neander, by G. P. Fisher. IV. The Religion of Geology, by Rev. J. J. Dana. V. On the Use of the Preposition eis, &c., in Romans 5: 18, by Rev. O. Sweet. VI. From Antipatris to Emmaus, by E. Robinson, D. D. VII. The Law of Remorse and the Law of Revenge, &c., by Rev. G. B. Cheever, D. D. VIII. The Certainty of Success in Preaching, by Prof. Phelps. IX. Bretschneider's View of the Theology of Schleiermacher. X. Notices of New Publications. XI. Select Theological and Liteary Intelligence.

THE BIBLE IN SARDINIA.—The Geneva correspondent of the London Christian Times, in a letter to that paper, dated 9th June, says:—

"Wishing to profit by the permission granted by the Sardinian Government with respect to the admission of Bibles, the Bible Society of Geneva lately sent to Chambery two of its colporteurs; and such was the demand for the sacred volumne, that, in the space of a fortnight, in the towns of Chambery and Annecy, 1,500 copies of the Scriptures were sold by the colporteurs of the Bible Society, and at the depot which Mr. Graydon, agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, established at the house of the editor of the Glaneur. Of these 1,500 copies, about 1,000 were Bibles and 500 Testaments—all of the French version of Sacy.

"The sensation among the priest party, which this movement produced, has, for the present at least, put a stop to the work. Orders have been given to prohibit the importation of Bibles and Testaments, and even to send back to the frontier several bales which were in the Custom House of Chambery; and the Archbishop of Chambery left for Turin, where he will assuredly spare no pains to raise up impediments to the circulation of the sacred volume. It is to be hoped that, from the firm intention of the Sardinian Government to maintain the religious liberty granted by the statutes, with its necessary consequences, he will not succeed."

A TRANSLATION COMPLETED.—Another version of the complete Bible has been effected, in the language of one of the tribes occupying the Pacific Islands—the Hervey group. The labors of the English missionaries in those islands have been greatly blessed for many years; and now Bibles, printed in England, in their native tongue, have been sent to them. The missionary ship John Williams arrived in March last, with the first cargo of the kind, which was met with an enthusiasm that should put our languid interest in the Sacred Word to the blush. At a public meeting, held in commemoration of their arrival, one of the natives said, "Let us read the whole book. Let us go to the missionary by day and by night, and inquire into the meaning of new parts which we have not read. Let us be at his door when he rises. Let us stop him when we meet him, that he may tell us of these new books." And he added, with the excited energy of a feeble old man, "My brethren and sisters, this is my resolve. The dust shall never cover my new Bible; the moth shall never eat it; the mildew shall never rot it. My light and my joy!"

THE INFLUENCE OF THE CHURCH OF ROME.—"Grace Greenwood," now in Europe, thus writes from, and respecting Rome. The saying of the Prophets is fulfilled—the nations have been made drunk with the wine of the fornication of mystical Babylon:—

"The more I see of the pomps, superstitions, mummeries, frauds, avarice, and arrogant domination of the Roman church, the more I am convinced that it is the source, strength, and subtle essence of European tyranny; that it narrows, binds down, and crushes out the very soul of the age. It is a fungus growth of error and falsehood, mocking the fair and fruitful forms of truth; a dark and gigantic unreality, for the time fearfully real; the nightmare which oppresses the world. As it seems to me, so must I speak of it. I cannot do otherwise, and keep my own truth toward God and my fellows."

POETIC OBITUARIES.—The Morning Star has the following suggestions about poetry in connection with obituary notices. Let those who read it understand why editors generally use the scissors on such articles:—

"Our friends who sends us 'Verses' attached to obituaries (or obituaries written in verse) must not think it strange if they do not appear in the Star. It would afford us pleasure to accommodate them, if we could with any propriety; but there are insuperable objections to the publication of such articles—1. The poetry (if poetry it can be called) is generally of the poorest quality. 2. They possess no interest except to a small circle of relatives. 3. They would occupy a column or more of the paper, nearly every week, if all that are received should be inserted. Other reasons might be given, but these must suffice."

DR. ONCKEN.—The N. Y. Evangelist says that Dr. Oncken, the energetic and successful Baptist missionary at Hamburgh, Germany, who was seriously injured by the calamity at Norwalk, lately preached at Rochester, with great acceptance, and is represented as being nearly restored. He commenced his labors at Hamburgh nearly thirty years ago; but for a long time was compelled to encounter the opposition and persecution of the Established Church and the civil power, and consequently made but little progress. In 1834, Dr. Sears, of Boston, baptized Dr. Oncken and seven associates, and organized the first dissenting church in Hamburgh. From that time he has continued, in defiance of persecutions, and confiscations, and imprisonments, until some sixty churches are established, with a membership of over 9,000. He is a native German, though he speaks the English language readily and fluently.

LIBERAL BEQUESTS.—Hon. W. B. Banister, of Newburyport, deceased, has left in his will $50,000, to be distributed equally as follows: The American Bible Society, the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the American Education Society, the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, and American Colinization Society; on condition that they will pay to his widow, annually, during her natural life, $240 each; and to his daughter, Frances B. Banister, annually, during her natural life, $120 each. $1,000 is left on the same conditions, to his brother Seth Banister, and his wife, of Brookfield.

NEW EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—On Saturday afternoon, July 6, the corner stone of a new edifice for the members of Zion's Church, lately worshipping in Mott-st., Rev. Richard Cox pastor, was laid on Murray Hill, corner of Madison-av. and Thirty-Eighth-st. New York. The Church will be constructed of blue stone, with Connecticut brown stone dressing and slate roof. Its dimensions are 120 feet long by 60 feet wide, and 60 feet in hight. The Church will be one of the purest specimens of perpendicular Gothic architecture in the City.

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A Baptist missionary in South Africa thus speaks of the abundant labors of the Rev. Mr. Morgan, a Scotch missionary laboring there: "He preaches uniformly four times on the Sabbath, twice in English and twice in Dutch; trains his own choir, and conducts his own singing, and his own Sabbath school; and has charge of numerous mission and charity schools, in which he spends much of his time during the week days. He is also either Chairman or Secretary of all the benevolent societies in the town, and generally gets up their reports."

The American Seamen's Friend Society has received from Rev. Titus Coan, who labors at Hilo, in the Sandwich Islands, one hundred dollars to promote the noble work of this institution. Mr. C. announces that the donation is made with "the love, prayers and strong desires of the donors" for the best good of seamen. One hundred dollars were not long since received from the same source for the same object. The same church in Hilo, has contributed during the past year fifteen or sixteen hundred dollars to benevolent objects. More than four hundred have been added to it in seven months.

The venerable and faithful missionary, Mr. Goodell, with his equally faithful wife, have sailed for Constantinople—the post which they have occupied, amidst so many changes and perils, for thirty years. The spectacle of an old man going forth upon an enterprise demanding the energy and hopefulness of youth, sustained by faith and animated by love, has in it something of the sublime. Mr. G. is accompanied by Rev. J. N. Ball and wife, and the wife and son of Mr. Schneider.

"Harry Hill," a well known wealthy cotton merchant, and liberal hearted Methodist, is about building a Methodist Tabernacle in New Orleans, in an eligible position, at a cost of $150,000. It is to be capable of seating 3,000 persons, and occupied for preaching alone. He proposes to deed it to the Bishops, placing it under their control and that of the General Conference. Once in four years a programme is to be made out, setting forth the appointments to this grand arena, on this plan: the greatest men of each Conference are to be detailed for one, two, or three months' service.

John Sinclair, Archdeacon of Middlesex, who was appointed by the English Bishops to return the visit of Bishops McCoskry, of Michigan, McIlvaine, of Ohio, Rev. Dr. Wainwright, of New York, and other American Episcopalian clergymen to England, leaves in the Liverpool steamer of the 15th inst. He will be accompanied by Mr. Hawkins (Secretary of the Episcopalian Propagation Society,) and another Delegate not yet selected.

Phillips, Sampson & Co., have in Press, and will publish about the first of September, Memoir of the Rev. Adoniram Judson, D. D., the First American Missionary to Burmah, by Rev. Francis Wayland, D. D., President of Brown University. To be comprised in Two Volumes, duodecimo, with a superb Portrait, finely engraved on steel.

Bishop Scott, on a visit to Liberia for the supervision of the Methodist missions there established, after preaching to large and very attentive congregations under the shade of tamarind and mango plum trees in the government lot, ordained ten brethren, five of whom are local preachers, to the office of deacons, and eight to the office of elders—one of the most interesting days of his life, though one of the most laborious.

The Episcopal Recorder calls attention to the fact, that in the parts of Pennsylvania where Episcopal churches once flourished, they have so completely faded away, that their very existence has become a tradition. This region, too, is within a hundred miles of two great cities, where, as the Recorder says, the Church is found rolling in wealth and influence.

The increase of Sunday schools in Great Britain is an exceedingly hopeful aspect of the religious state of that country. According to a recent parliamentary return, in 1818, when the population of England and Wales was 11,642,683, the number of Sunday schools was 3,462, with 477,225 scholars. In 1851, when the population had increased to 17,927,000, there were 23,498 Sunday schools, with 2,407,409 scholars.

Georgetown College, Ky., at its late Commencement, conferred the degree of D. D. only on two New York ministers, whereat the Western Watchman says: "From these facts, we draw the encouraging inference that the ministers in Kentucky are in so generally a healthy state that they do not need doctoring. May they long continue so."

The New York Observer states that Prof. Niedner is at present occupied upon a church history, to be completed in six volumes, in which he intends to show the influence of art, science, and philosophy, on the church, from the time of the Apostles to the present day.

There are 61 Congregational Associations in England and Scotland, and 2,312 Congregational churches. The members belong mainly to the middle classes in society, and maintain a respectable position for intelligence, enterprise, industry and moral worth.

A communication from Rev. Mr. Spear, missionary of the Presbyterian Board to the Chinese at San Francisco, and formerly their missionary in China, expresses the opinion that it is a great "religious reformation," as well as a political revolution.

Mr. Beebee, the veteran editor and proprietor of the New York Baptist Register, has announced Professor Andrew Ten Brook "as equal proprietor and equal participant in its editorial labors and responsibilities."

The receipts of the American Board of Foreign Missions, for the eleven months ending on the 30th of June, were $270,972.

The Rev. Mr. Revel, the modest, and worthy Moderator of the Synod of the Waldenses has returned to Europe, having succeeded in the objects of his mission, to a degree that warranted him in returning.

She brings intelligence of the total destruction by fire of the packet ship I. Z. on the 7th inst., in lat. 42 deg. lon. 62. The I. Z., 750 tuns burden, sailed from New York July 2, under the command of Capt. Spench, for Liverpool, with a cargo chiefly consisting of turpentine, corn and cotton. She was owned by Messrs. Zeraga of this city. The captain and all hands, 20 in number, were rescued by the Ebenezer, and landed at Liverpool. The fire is stated to have been caused by spontaneous combustion.

FUGITIVE SLAVES IN CANADA.—On the 21st. of June a meeting was held in Free Mason's Hall, London, to hear a statement from the Rev. Mr. Ward as to the condition of fugitive slaves in Canada. The Earl of Shaftsbury presided. Mr. Ward, in his address, stated that the number of fugitives in Canada was from 30,000 to 35,000, and that the average number escaping was 3,000 a year, or about ten a day. A Mr. King, in the county of Kent, he said, had purchased land for the purpose of settling them upon it. Hatred and prejudice, however, ran so high against them, that a petition and memorial were presented to the local government against the occupation of land by these negroes. But that petition was unsuccessful. The settlement was made; it had existed now for four years; it contained about 120 families, or 500 individuals; and it was one of the most successful he ever saw in any country; upon it there was not a single drunkard, or a vender of intoxicating drinks. On the settlement there was also a flourishing school, the different classes of which he had examined in geography, grammar, Latin; and notwithstanding former prejudices, the white people had actually taken advantage of two things connected with the settlement; they attended the preaching of Mr. King, where the negroes worshiped; and abandoning their own, sent their children to to the negro schools. The meeting was addressed by Rev. Messrs. Gribble, Thomas James, J. Sherman, and others, and a committee was appointed, of which the Earl of Shaftsbury is chairman, to raise money in aid of the object.

A SAD PICTURE.—A young man, who left Nantucket some three years ago for the gold mines of California, came passenger on the steamer "Bay State," from New York on Saturday. Some ten months since, not meeting with good luck at the mines, he left San Francisco for home. Not having funds to pay his passage through, he got as far as Central America, where he was a stranger without friends or a place to lay his head. In a few days, on account of the fatigue and a broken down constitution, he entirely lost his reason and became a maniac, and wandered about the place for some weeks. At last, in consequence of some information from letters found upon him, he was taken in charge by the American Consul, and sent to New York, where his aged father met him. The young man is a mere skeleton, only weighing about sixty pounds, his reason gone, and he resembling an image of death. It was a sad sight to see the father with his son in his arms bringing him on board the steamer, for his sweet home, there only to remain, perhaps a few days on earth. This true picture is but one of many of the results of California immigration. [Bost. Trav.

A DEEP ARTESIAN WELL.—Messrs Belcher & Brother, sugar refiners at St Louis, Mo., are engaged in boring a well, which has already reached the very great depth of 1,750 feet; far below the bottom of a great portion of the Mexican Gulf. The object is to procure a supply of pure water for their works, which, it is said, are capable of turning out 50,000,000 pounds of sugar per annum. The expense so far has been over $10,000, and the result a stream of salt and sulphur water. The hole is 3½ inches in diameter, the rods measure 33⅓ feet in length, and are put together with screws. They intend to continue the boring till they reach good water, or 2,000 feet in depth, which will be the deepest well in the world. The augur is driven by a steam engine, and penetrates about four feet a day and most of the distance has been through shale and limestone rock. The work is continued day and night. There is a well boring at Charleston, S. C., 1,100 or 1,200 feet deep. Artesian wells are very numerous in the limestone region of Alabama.

AN EXTRAORDINARY MAN.—David Wilson, an old revolutionary soldier, and a native of New Jersey, died, after a short illness, in Dearborn County, Indiana, in August, 1853, aged one hundred and seven years, two months, and ten days. He had, at different periods of his life, five wives, and, at the time of his death, was the father of forty-seven children! While residing in Pennsylvania, near the old Redstone Fort, his wife gave birth to five children in eleven months! This extraordinary man, when in his one hundred and fourth year, mowed one week for Esq. Pendleton, of Hamilton County, Ohio, about two miles from Cincinnati, during which he mowed one acre per day of heavy timothy grass. He was about five feet six inches in height. His frame was not supported by ribs, as the frames of ordinary men are, but an apparently solid sheet of bone supplied their place. He could hold up his hands in a verticie position, and receive a blow from the fist of a powerful man, on the lateral portion of his body, without inconvenience. He served throughout the entire Revolution under Gen. Washington, was engaged in most of the Indian wars since, and was the companion of Marion and Rodgers, and of many other distinguished early pioneers of our Western and Southern wilds. Our readers may rest assured that this statement is correct, as we received it from Mr. Alexander Wilson, of North Madison, who is the forty-fifth child of the subject of this paragraph.

LIQUOR LAW IN SWEDEN.—In Sweden, whoever is found drunk is fined, for the first offense, three dollars; for the second, six; for the third or fourth, imprisonment is added to the fine, and deprivation of the right of voting at the elections, or holding office, and exposure in the church on Sunday. If the same individual is found committing the same offense a fifth time, he is imprisoned six months and condemned to hard labor. If a professor of religion, it is still more severe, and he is cut off from the church. Whoever is convicted of intoxication is fined three dollars, which sum is doubled for every offense. An ecclesiastic who falls under the offense, loses his benefice. It is strictly forbidden to give or sell spirituous liquors to students, servants, or apprentices. Whoever is found drunk in the streets, or making a disturbance in a public house, is imprisoned and fined—one half the fine goes to the informer, and the other to the poor. Twice in a year these ordinances are read aloud in the churches by the clergy, and every tavern keeper is bound to have a copy hung up in the principal room in his house, under heavy fines. Under these regulations, scarcely a drunkard is to be found.

EDUCATION OF THE CHINESE PRETENDER.—A much more probable theory, to account for the Bible quotations in the Chinese proclamations, than that which attributes them to Jesuit inspirations, is that the writer had acquired his knowledge of the scriptures directly or indirectly from Gutzlaff's "Christian Union." A correspondent of the Christian Times has come forward to say that Tienteh was himself at one time a disciple or scholar of Gutzlaff. He declares that "the the chief leader of the insurrection, Tienteh, solicited and received from my late lamented friend, Dr. Gutzlaff, instruction in the truths and principles of Christianity, and although there is no evidence of his conviction, it appears that he renounced idolatry and burnt his idols and ancestral tablets. It also appears that his popularity and influence with his followers arise mainly from his acting on the moral principles of the gospel. His progress is said to be marked by the putting down of idolatry and substituting an equitable rule of government in place of the oppressive corruption of the Chinese officials."

SUICIDE BY A RETURNED CALIFORNIAN.—A few week ago, a Mr. Gray, who had recently returned from California with an immense forture, and had married a wife at Washington, committed suicide at New Rochelle, near New York, by throwing himself before an express train of cars on the New Haven Railroad. No satisfactory cause for his course could be given, and it was supposed to be the result of momentary insanity following depression of spirits. But it is now stated, that Mr. Gray was the husband of two wives, having left his first one in California, since which he married a daughter of S. B. French, of Fauquier county, Va. His first wife had rerently arrived in New York, and threatened to prosecute him for bigamy. It is also stated, on the authority of the Washington News, that in contracting his second marriage, he supposed that his former matrimonial obligations were obliterated by the action of the law, and that he was at liberty to marry again. Distress of mind at finding himself in such a situation undoubtedly drove him to the desperate deed.

A SINGULAR CASE.—A Miss Read of West Boylston, took chloroform a few days ago, (says the Worcester Transcript,) for the purpose of having a tooth extracted, and after the operation was peformed, she was attacked with a severe pain in the head, became unconscious, and apparently died. Her friends supposing her dead, laid her out for burial, and began to prepare for the funeral ceremonies; but their grief was unexpectedly turned to joy and astonishment, on finding that the supposed dead began to revive! She eventually recovered the full possession of her faculties; but what is still more remarkable in her case, as we are told, she suffers violent pains in the head as regularly as evening approaches, and at length, and about the same time every night, falls into a swoon very similar to that which in the first instance was supposed to hove been the sleep of death. This case certainly presents a most remarkable escape from premature burial.

SUMMARY.

A little girl about ten years of age, the daughter of one of our most esteemed citizens, (says the Norfolk News,) was taken sick a few days ago, and to the poignant grief of her parents, apparently died. The usual preparations were made, the room darkened, and the body enclosed in a shroud, with the intention of burying. But the apparently dead girl revived, and terribly frightened at the situation in which she found herself, with her cries alarmed the household. She is since, we learn, doing well, and our readers may imagine the feelings of the family from this astonishing incident.

The execution of Thomas Conner for the murder of Capt. Hutchinson took place at Baltimore, Friday, Aug. 5. The culprit was taken on to the gallows at 11½ o'clock, perfectly composed and firm. The bolt was immediately drawn, when the rope broke, and the unfortunate man fell to the ground, a distance of 25 feet. He was taken up insensible. Preparations were then made for another trial. Finally, at 20 minutes past 2 o'clock, Connor was launched into eternity. The gallows was erected above the jail wall, affording a full view to the multitude assembled outside. There could not have been less than 30,000 persons within sight of the gallows.

Patrick O'Donohue, an Irish exile, who arrived in this country only two or three weeks since, was arrested at Boston, Friday, Aug. 5, on a warrant charging him with sending a letter to B. S. Treanor, accepting a challenge to fight a duel somewhere in Manchester, New Hampshire, the next morning. He was taken before Justice Rogers, of the Police Court, and gave bail in the sum of $2,000 to answer at the Court, and in the meantime keep the peace. A warrant is also out for the arrest of Treanor, who gave the challenge, and he probably will be arrested. O'Donohue's friends caused his arrest as the only means of averting the meeting.

By a recent act of the Legislature of Illinois, which went into operation with the month of August, foreign Bank-Notes are prohibited from circulation, under severe penalties, unless recognized as the regularly chartered, specie-paying currency of the States from which they date. The State Commissioners have issued a circular, in pursuance of this Act, with a complete list of all the regular Banks of the United States, from which, of course, the Atlanta, of Georgia, specially got up for circulation in Illinois and Wisconsin, to elude the Security feature of their Banking Laws, was excluded.

In New York, one day last week, a counterfeiter, agent of a gang, was arrested, and on him were found large quantities of counterfeit $5 notes, and spurious $5 and 20-shilling pieces, purporting to be genuine issues of the United States Mint. The counterfeit bills recovered were $5's, purporting to be the genuine issues of the "Fallkill Bank" of Poughkeepsie, Dutchess Co., N. Y., signed by John F. Hull. Cashier, and Wm. C. Sterling, President.

The clipper ship Flying Arrow, (of Boston,) Capt. Treadwell, arrived at New York on Thursday, Aug. 4, from St. Thomas, July ~~23d,~~ having put in at that port in distress, Feb. 16, with loss of her three masts and her deck swept. The F. A. was bound to San Francisco. Owing to the prevalence of the yellow fever at St. Thomas, she was not able to obtain a crew, and has put in to New York port for that purpose. Three passenger and seven seamen died on board at St. Thomas.

A party of travelers report that on the 13th ult., in ascending the summit of Mount Washington, by a new route, they passed under or through a natural archway of snow, twenty feet high, one hundred and sixty feet long, the crust above their heads forty feet in thickness. They express the belief that this natural archway of pure snow will remain in its present state during the summer. The surface of this mass of snow extends over several acres, and has no signs of ice or crystalization.

Mr. Dwight R. Perry, of New Bedford, recently dug up, on his estate, a curious natural chair of granite stone. It is perfectly smooth, and the solid block forming it supplies the place of legs. This remarkable production weighs about half a ton, and forms a complete chair. It is evidently natural, as it would be impossible to hew out such a massive block with any thing like ordinary labor.

The merchant brig Attar Gul, has arrived from Italy, with Greenough's statuary, ordered by Congress for the east portico of the Capitol. The subject is a scene in pioneer life—an Indian about to murder a white woman, when his hand is arrested, and himself slain by her husband. Said to be a very fine group. It will be erected on its destined place in a few days.

The imports from China, in 1851, were $7.065,144, or a little more than double what they were twenty years ago. Since 1842, no cottons whatever have been introduced into this country from China. The principal items of import still continue to be tea and silks.

The British ship Panama, of Glasgow, from New Orleans for Liverpool, with 1,334 bales of cotton, went ashore on the 26th of July, in consequence of a strong current, on Kurdwery Breakers, took fire and was burned to the water's edge. A boy named Ross, of Glasgow, had previously died at sea, of yellow fever.

There was an excursion up the North River to Yonkers, on Sunday last, and on its way back to New York the excursionists got into a melee, during which one man had his head severely wounded with a bottle, another was stabbed with a knife, and a third was knocked overboard, but was rescued. No one was dangerously hurt.

Mr. Wm. Hall, of Beaver county, Pa., who is now in his one hundred and fourth year, is still able to ride from his home to Washington, a distance of twenty-eight miles, twice a year, to draw his pension as a revolutionary soldier! This is a remarkable instance of health and longevity. The old veteran retains all his faculties in full vigor.

The Bangor Mercury state that the marshall seized in that place on Saturday, three barrels full of green cucumbers, in the middle of each was an eight gallon keg of liquor. On Wednesday six barrels of liquor were seized by the same officer, and two kegs found in a large leather covered trunk.

There is now a surplus of within a fraction of $22,000,000 in the treasury, notwithstanding the Secretary is redeeming U. S. stocks, and otherwise paying the public debt as fast as the law to that end will allow him.

The clipper Sovereign of the Seas is chartered at London for Melbourne, Australia, at £7 per tun to the wharf; and it has been agreed that if she does not make the passage quicker than any steamer on the berth at London or Liverpool, £2 10s. per tun shall be deducted.

A riot between two parties engaged on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad, near Lawrenceburg, on Sunday July 31, resulted in the death of three persons, and six others were severely wounded.

A man in Cincinnati has invented a new rheumatic ointment, one of the ingredients of which is toad oil. A correspondent of one of the papers of that city saw in the basement of the inventor's store a collection of six or eight hundred toads, waiting to be "tried out."

Gerrit Smith, of Peterboro, it is stated, is perfectly relieved of a painful disease of seventeen years standing, by a recent surgical operation. It consisted in the removal of six large hemorrhoidal tumors by tying and cutting.

A savage fight occurred in the Eighteenth Ward of New York on Saturday night, provoked by a gang of ruffians regularly organized for the purpose. Twenty-two of the villians were arrested.

The amount of money in active circulation in the United States is estimated in the Merchants' Magazine at $295,447,257, which, reckoning the population at 25,000,000, would make $12 per head. It was $11 in 1816 and 1836, and 5,50 in 1830.

At Quincy, Ill., Mrs. Barton, wife of Waite Barton, formerly of St. Louis, fell upon a pair of scissors that were in her pocket at the time, and was so much injured by their being driven into her side, that she survived only two days.

The man Donohue, who murdered Mrs. Kinney and daughter, of Truxton, N. Y., under aggravated circumstances, ten months since, was convicted at Courtland, and sentenced to be hanged on the 2d September.

Governor Seymour has postponed the execution of McGuier now under sentence in Onondaga County, from 17th August to 17th December. A new trial will probably be obtained and the sentence set aside.

The population of San Francisco is now estimated to be nearly 50,000. Six years ago the population was 459; of which 247 males and 128 females were white, and there were 34 Indians, 40 Kanakas, and 10 negroes.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of TITSWORTHS & DUNN, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U S, and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

This Seminary is confidently commended to the public as a first-class Institution, supplied in an eminent degree with all the facilities of education usually found in the Colleges and Universities of this country. It is provided with ten departments of Instruction, having an able and experienced Instructor at the head of each, thus giving such a division of labor as can alone secure the highest ability in conducting each department. Students can here complete an entire course of collegiate education, or be prepared for usefulness in mechanical, agricultural, or commercial pursuits, or for entering immediately upon professional studies. The Teachers' Department supplies the public with at least one hundred and fifty experienced teachers of common schools annually, and the Department of Elementary and Agricultural Chemistry affords the young farmer all the facilities desirable in the best agricultural schools. Having recently completed another spacious and elegant edifice for a chapel and recitation rooms, and being now engaged in extensive enlargements and alterations for the accommodation of a much larger number of students than hitherto, the Trustees express their intention that the high character which this Institution has acquired, for thorough instruction, for strict moral and social training, and the best of educational advantages at a very moderate expense, shall be fully sustained. The location, on the N. Y. and Erie Railroad, two miles from the Alfred depot, is romantic, retired, and one of the healthiest in the world. Circulars, &c., gratuitous, on application to Prof. W. C. KENYON, or to Rev. N. V. HULL, Pres. of Trustees, Alfred Center, Allegany Co., N. Y.

The Summer of the Heart.

BY MARIE ROSSEAU.

There is no sorrow in my heart—
No shadow on my brow—
A thousand glad and happy thoughts
Are thronging round me now.
Like flowers—the bright and fragrant flowers
Of Summer's earliest bloom—
They rise in beauty round my way,
And breathe their sweet perfume.

What tho' 'tis but a Winter's day,
And clouds are in the sky,
And damp and chilling are the winds
Which rudely pass me by;
Bright flowers are blooming in my heart—
And twining sweetly there
In fragrant and unfading wreaths
Of beauty rich and rare.

Sweet thoughts in tuneful melody,
Like strains of merry birds,
Are pouring forth in joyous tones
The music of their words.
Not one discordant sound is heard
To mar the gentle notes,
But with enchanting melody
Each merry cadence floats.

There is no Winter in my heart—
No blighted flowers are there—
Sweet buds of bright, unchanging hopes
Are blooming every where.
No rude and chilling winds are felt,
But zephyrs bland and still
Play gently o'er Æolian chords,
And bring sweet sounds at will.

The Cathedral at Mexico.

A gentleman who has resided a long time in Mexico, has favored us with the following authentic account of the magnificent gold and silver ornaments contained in the Cathedral of the City of Mexico. The facts are obtained from the most unquestionable source.

Golden Altar service :—

6 large golden candlesticks, 50 inches high.

6 large golden branches with vases of same size.

4 smaller candlesticks of gold, 16 inches high.

2 golden censors.

2 golden utensils to sprinkle holy water, (navetas.)

1 golden cross, set with very precious stones, with pedestal and front pieces also set with precious stones.

1 cross of gold, filagree work.

2 golden ditto, Atriles.

2 golden ditto, Palabreros.

2 Portapazes of gold. The weight of this altar service is not less than 460 pounds, and its value not less than $125,000.

The image of the Ascension, (the title of this Church,) is of solid gold, adorned with very rich jewels; the weight of the image is 6984 gold castellanos, or $18,700. Its value, including jewels, is not less than $30,000.

The image of the Conception is of solid silver, and weighs 39 pounds—value $625.

The silver lamp which adorns the front of the Presbytery weighs 2186½ pounds of silver, 855 pounds of which is gilded with pure gold. Its appearance is magnificent. It has 54 burners; its height is 22 feet, circumference 30 feet, and is suspended by an iron chain and bolt weighing 1650 pounds. The cost of the lamp was $71,343 37½, and its value of silver and gold alone, is over $45,000.

The principal "tabernacle," or case in which the sacred spices are preserved, is 37½ inches high, and weighs 44 pounds, of pure gold. Its front is covered with 5872 diamonds, its back with 2652 emeralds, 544 rubies, 106 amethysts, and 28 saphires. Its cost was upwards of $150,000, which it is now richly worth.

The large Cibrium is of pure gold, of nine pounds weight, and has 1676 diamonds set in it. It is worth $10,580.

The Chalice, of pure gold weighs 5¼ pounds, and has set in it 122 diamonds, 1400 emeralds, 850 pearls, and is worth about $5,000.

The jewels of these cups were the gift of the Emperor Charles V.

In addition to these cups, there are 20 chalices of gold, mostly richly adorned with diamonds and precious stones—6 large golden plates, with their incense boxes and bells of gold. The united value of these cups and plates is not less than $20,000.

The silver service of the Cathedral is very beautiful, and extremely valuable; among the pieces are 12 chandeliers, 12 incense boxes, 12 large branches, 7 feet high each; 72 silver cups and incense burners, 96 silver candlesticks, and a multitude of branches; 3 silver statues, 1 very large silver closet, beautifully engraved, for the deposit of holy things, 2 lamp standards, with 4 clusters of branches, 2 large standard candlesticks, each 6 feet high, 20 silver candlesticks, very large, in the aisles of the Cathedral. Value of silver utensils, in silver, 30,000 to 40,000 dollars.

The robes and garments of the Priesthood are of the richest and most costly description. The more expensive were gifts of the Emperor Charles V.

Prizes in the Lottery of Authorship.

It is stated that Dryden received £1,300 for his "Virgil," and Pope £6,000 for his "Homer." Gay netted £1,600 by his "Beggar's Opera," and the subscription edition of his poems brought him £1,000. He lived extravagantly, yet left £3,000 at his death. The poet Mallet received £1,000 from the Duchess of Marlborough, to write a life of the illustrious general, her husband; and the second Duke further gave him a pension, to stimulate him in the task; yet, when Mallet died, several years afterward, it was found that the ungrateful fellow had not written a line of the promised work! Sir John Hill, a cotemporaneous satirist, used to net £1,500 a year by his pen. Churchill, the poet, also realized so much by his satires, that, notwithstanding his notorious profligacy, he bequeathed by his will two annuities, amounting together to £130. Fielding received £700 in all for "Tom Jones," and £1,000 for "Amelia." Smollet's "History of England" produced him upward of £2,000. Gibbon got, for the second part of his "History of Rome," £5,000. Dr. Hawkesworth realized £6,000 for his "Collection of Voyages." Dr. Robertson received £600 for his "History of Scotland," and £4,500 for his history of Charles I. of Spain." Dr. Henry's "History of Great Britain" produced £3,300 (and the King gave him £100 a year, to testify his admiration of the work.) Hume received immense sums for his historical writings also.

Macpherson cleared £1,200 by his "Ossian," and by his "Great Britain" no less than £3,000. Dr. Clark received for his various "Travels" the sum of £7,000. Dr. Johnson had £1,575 for his "Dictionary," (certainly a stupendous labor,) and Boswell had £1,500 for his life of the great "leviathan of literature." Hannah More received for her writings, from first to last, the enormous sum of £30,000, and at her death she bequeathed £10,000 in charities. Goldsmith is said to have obtained £1,800 in a single year by his comedies, although his immortal "Vicar" only produced £60. It is true he died £2,000 in debt, but, in the words of Dr. Johnson, "was poet ever so trusted before?" Godwin's "Political Justice" produced £700. Mrs. Radcliffe sold her "Mysteries of Udolpho" for £500, and her "Italian" for £800. Allan Ramsay cleared £500 by his first poems, and much more by his "Gentle Shepherd." Burns received above £500 clear for the first large edition of his poems, and Currie's "Life" of the glorious bard produced £1,000 for the benefit of his family. Dr. John Wolcot, ("Peter Pindar,") after receiving very large sums for his humorous, satirical poems, finally sold the copyrights for an annuity of £250, which he enjoyed for twenty years. Thomson obtained for his "Seasons," from first to last, about 600 guineas. Crabbe received £3,000 for his "Tales of the Hall." Sir John Carr (facetiously nicknamed "The Jaunting Car," in allusion to his numerous tours,) received for four separate books of travel the sum of £1,900. Thomas Moore was paid £1,000 for his "Loves of the Angels," and not less than 3,000 guineas for his "Lallah Rookh." For many years he netted £500 a year by the sale of his "Irish Melodies," and it is understood that Longman & Co. paid him an annuity of £300 for his entire copyrights.

Thomas Campbell received, in all, for his "Pleasures of Hope," £900, (the entire poem contains only 1,100 lines;) for the short poem of the "Pilgrim of Glencoe" he had 300 guineas, and for the editorship of "The New Monthly Magazine" he was paid £600 per annum. His income from the profits of his works (and the bulk of the whole is very small) was for many years at least £700, and yet he used to morbidly express his fears of coming to the work-house at last. Southey, too, though continually maundering about the scanty remuneration of authorship and its drudgery, and so forth, received £100 for each review article he wrote for the "Quarterly," (according to his own account he has written one in a few days,) and after living in good style all the latter half of his life, and (properly) declining a baronetcy, he left £12,000 to his children, besides a library, characterized as "one of the most valuable private libraries in the kingdom." Theodore Hook had £2,000 for the first series of his "Sayings and Doings," and for years his income from his pen was never less than £3,000 a year. The truly enormous sums earned by Scott and by Byron are well known. Byron received in all some £25,000, and for one of his smaller poems, written in three nights, (on his own authority,) Murray paid him 500 guineas.

Besides the large sums above-mentioned, many of the authors referred to enjoyed pensions of £200 to £300 or upward per annum for many years.

Wonderful Clock.

We find in an English journal the following description of an ingenious elaboratory clock, made by E. Henderson, LL D., of Liverpool :—

"It is calculated so finely," says the Liverpool Albion, "that, in many of the motions by wheel work, it will not err one minute in 1,000 years! These calculations, we understand, have received the unqualified approbation of the leading scientific men and astronomers of the day, both in Britain and foreign countries. The clock will show the minutes and hours of the day; the sun's place in the ecliptic; the day of the month, perpetually, and take leap year into account; the moon's age, place, and phazes; the apparent diurnal revolutions of the moon; the ebb and flow of the sea at any port in the world, the golden number exact, solar cycle, Roman indication, Sunday letter, and Julian period; the mean time of the rising and setting of the sun on every day of the year, with its terms and fixed moveable feasts. The day of the week will be indicated, and the year will be registered for 10,000 years past and to come. The quickest moving wheel revolving in one minute, the slowest in ten thousand years from the date.

"To show the very great accuracy of the motions in this complicated clock, a few of the periods may be noted, viz.: the apparent diurnal revolution of the moon is accomplished in 24 hours, 50 minutes, 58 and 379,882,268 decimals of a second, which makes an error of one minute too fast at the end of 1470 years. The stars will make a revolution in 23 hours, 56 minutes, 4 seconds, and 99,087,284 decimals of a second, which gives an error of one minute too slow at the termination of 589¾ years. The synodical revolution of the moon is done by the wheels in 29 days, 12 hours, 44 minutes, 2 seconds, 872,544,288 decimals of a second, and this will give an error of one minute too fast in 1167 years. The siderial year is done in 365 days, 6 hours, 9 minutes, 11 seconds, and 53,322,496 decimals of a second, which will make an error of one minute too slow in 1806 years. The clock will go 100 years without requiring to be wound up, which is unequalled in horological science. The clock will contain about 170 wheels and pinions, and upwards of 300 distinct pieces."

Hudson River Railroad.

The road has added to the real estate between the Battery and Albany, a larger value than the whole cost of the road. This new value is a real creation of wealth; and the proof of it is found in the increased rent, or utility, which the property will command. But this is not all. A new value is added to all the lands of the North and West where the products of the people are brought nearer, in time and cost, to the city of New York. Five car-loads of fresh eggs, which arrived here Saturday morning, in thirty-six hours from Canada, found a better market than their owners ever thought of, before this road was made. Now, by just so much as this road has augmented the wealth of the lands along, and beyond it, by so much has it advanced the cause of humanity; for it has enabled the same land to support a larger number of human beings, or to give a better support to the same number. The old adage, that the man who makes two blades of grass grow where but one grew before, is a real benefactor of his race, is true only on the supposition that the two cost less than twice the labor of the one. And labor saved in the exchange of commodities is just as real a benefaction as labor saved in their production.

This road has increased the capacity of New York for civic and commercial greatness. "She shall bring her food from afar," was a prediction of the greatness of an ancient city. This is specially true of a city which can bring its daily perishable food from a great distance. This road, and others, have enlarged the field tenfold from which the daily food of our city can be so cheaply brought. Dressed meats are coming by the cars from distances not before thought of; and this movement suggests that all the meats for our market might be dressed in meadows and by river sides, as remote as the valleys of the Mohawk and the Susquehanna, leaving there all those parts of the animal which are a nuisance to us, and an enrichment to the lands of those regions. Arrangements are now in progress to bring milk from five counties north of Troy, and two of them in Vermont.

A rainbow in fair weather denotes foul; if foul, fair weather will follow. A double rainbow indicates much rain.

A predominance of the purple color on the rainbow shows wind and rain; dark and red, tempest; light red, wind; yellow, dry weather; green, rain; blue denotes that the air is clearing.

If the Aurora Borealis appears after several warm days, it is generally succeeded by a cloudiness of the air. If the Aurora Borealis has been considerable, either an increased degree of cold is immediately produced, or bodies of clouds are immediately formed.

If in a very wet season the sky is tinged with a sea green color, near the bottom where it ought to be blue, it shows that rain will speedily follow, and increase; when it is of a deep blue, it is overcharged with vapors, and the weather will be showery.

When the sun appears white at the setting, or goes into a bank of clouds, which lie in the horizon, they indicate the approach or continuance of bad weather.

When it rains with an east wind, it will probably continue twenty-four hours.

The harvest rains, when of long continuance, generally begin with the wind blowing easterly—which gradually veers round to south—and the rains do not cease until the wind has got to the west, or a little north-west.

While rain is falling, if any small space of the sky is visible, it is almost a certain sign that the rain will speedily cease.

If the clouds that move with the wind become stationary when they arrive at the part of the horizon which is opposise the wind, and appear to accumulate, they announce a speedy fall of rain.

A frequent change of wind, with an agitation of the clouds, denotes a sudden storm.

A fresh breeze generally springs up before sunset, particularly in the summer.

The weather usually clears up at noon—but if it rains at midnight, it seldom clears till sunset.

The winds which begin to blow in the day time are much stronger and endure longer than those which begin to blow only in the night.

A hollow or whistling wind denotes rain.

If the wind follows the course of the sun, fair weather will follow.

Weather, either good or bad, which takes place in the night time, is not of long duration—and for the most part, wind is more uncommon in the night than in the day time. Fine weather in the night, with scattering clouds, does not last.

Violent winds prevail more in the vicinity of mountains than in open plains,

A Venetian author says, "A sudden storm from the north does not last three days."

If it thunders at intervals in the spring season, before the trees have acquired leaves, cold weather is still to be expected.

If it thunders in December, moderate and fine weather may be expected.

Thunder in the morning denotes wind at noon—in the evening, rain and tempest.

If in summer there is no thunder, the ensuing fall and winter will be sickly.

Woman's Rights—Indorsing Notes.

The Governor of Missouri, in his late Message, made one admirable suggestion, that no man shall be allowed to indorse another man's note without the consent of the indorser's wife, or rather, that no indorsement without such consent shall be valid. The Governor well says :—

"An evil of great magnitude exists in our country, to cure which a suitable remedy has been looked for in vain. The evil alluded to is the practice of indorsing in private transactions. If a man is bound to sell his real estate for a fair price, and to receive the full value in hard money paid down, the law still requires the consent and signature of his wife before she can be divested of her interest in it. The wisdom of this law has seldom been doubted. It might be well, then, before a man, in a convival moment, or when overcome by the persausions of an imprudent friend, or deceived by the false representations of a bad man, puts his whole estate—the earnings of a long and laborious life, and of much toil and care—in jeopardy of the law, to require him at least to get the consent and signature of his wife. If she is to be reduced to poverty, it may be as well to let her consent to it. This might remedy the evil to some extent, by adding a little more time, reflection, and caution to all such transactions, without preventing much of the good resulting from this practice. Experience has shown that the wife is a good adviser and safe counsellor."

Mr. Polk, of the Missouri Senate, has introduced a bill framed in accordance with this suggestion. We trust one of the same sort will soon be enacted by every legislative assembly in our land.

Lighting Gas with the tip of the Finger.—This is a feat anybody may perform. Let a person in their shoes or slippers walk briskly over a woolen carpet, scuffing his feet thereon, or stand upon a chair with its legs in four tumblers, to insulate it, and be there rubbed up and down on the body a few times with a muff, by another person, and he will light his gas by simply touching his finger to the tube. It is only necessary to take the precaution not to touch anything or be touched by anything during the trial of the experiment. The stock of electricity acquired by the process we have described is discharged by contact with another object. A second person must turn on the gas while the other fires it. The writer has lighted it in this way, and seen it done by children not half a dozen years old. We are all perapatetic matches, if we did but know it.

Old Times.

The old Countess of Desmond, who died in the reign of James I., pronounced Richard III. as handsome a man as she ever danced with. [Exchange.

"The Countess must have lived longer than people do now-a-days. Richard III. was killed in 1485. King James commenced his reign in 1603—an interval of only 118 years. Therefore, to have been of sufficient age to have danced with Richard, even on the day of his death, and to have died on the very day James I. mounted the throne, would make the old Countess to have lived about 135 years. But to have danced with Richard when he was a young man and in his dancing days, and to have died about the middle of the reign of James, would make her about 170 years old at the time of her death. Verily, an old Countess, indeed!"

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, having read the foregoing, cites the following facts in relation to the Countess of Desmond, as derived from Walpole :—

"The Countess of Desmond lived to the age of 159 years, danced with Richard III., and affirmed that he was a well made man. She was 87 when she married O'Conner of Sligo. The Earl of Desmond's first wife died in 1564; if he remarried the next day his bride must have been 68, and yet she had a son and five daughters by him. Lord Bacon, says Fuller, computed her age to be 140 at least, and added that she three times had a new set of teeth.

"An extraordinary anecdote, given as authentic, relating to this lady, by Robert, the second Earl of Leicester, who received the account from Lady Desmond, 'that the old Countess came to England to solicit a pension, at the end of Queen Elizabeth's reign, and was so poor that she walked from Bristol to London. Her daughter, being too decrepit to go on foot, was carried in a cart.' 'The Countess,' says Lord Leicester, 'might have lived much longer had she not met with a kind of violent death, for she would needs climb a nut tree to gather nuts; so, falling down, she hurt her thigh, which brought on a fever, and that fever brought on death.' She was born in 1466, died in 1625, making her 159 years old."

Talbot's Mountain-Borer.

The great invention of the day—the boldest in conception, completest in execution, and most novel in appearance when in motion—is the great Tunnel Borer, just built by Messrs. Woodruff & Beach of this city. It is the invention of Mr. E. Talbot, a mechanic of known genius, who has been a foreman in the great machine factory of Woodruff & Beach for several years. The Borer has been built under his immediate superintendence. Worked into its own machinery, is an engine of 60 horse power. This drives four piston rods, horizontally, and these turn four half circle plates, of stout proportions, on which circular revolving blades are set. These four plates are turned with exactness about one fourth of a circle and back, and are all set upon a revolving plate, of about 10 feet in diameter, and as thus set, cut a cuticle of 17 feet in diameter. The machine weighs about 80 tuns, and is of stout proportions throughout. The motion obtained by this invention is novel—entirely new. By it the revolving knives, each running its quarter circle, cut completely from the center to the circumference, and they do their work steadily and surely, cutting a round hole as they are turned by the large or center plate. But we cannot describe the great machine so as to give a good idea of it, and will not attempt it. We say, however, that it stands among the greatest inventions of the age, and will bore its way to an enviable notoriety. It is to be taken to a rock at or near Harlem, N. Y., for an experimental trial. [Hartford Times.

A Quick Repartee.—The following anecdote of Gov. Morris, is related by a correspondent of the New York Times :—

He had a respect for Bishop Moore, as a man noted for the purity of his charcter, but not less for the retiring modesty of his disposition, and the general favor in which he was held. As the story ran :—A dinner was given by some one of Gov. Morris's friends, when he was about departing for Europe. Bishop Moore and his wife were of the party. Among other things that passed in conversation, Mr. Morris observed that he had made his will in prospect of going abroad; and, turning to Bishop Moore, said to him :

"My reverend friend, I have bequeathed to you my whole stock of impudence."

Bishop Moore replied :

"Sir, you are not only very kind, but very generous; you have left me by far the largest part of your estate."

Mrs. Moore immediately added :

"My dear, you have come into possession of your inheritance very soon."

The Sailors' Snug Harbor of Boston.—New York possesses a noble institution, called the Sailors' Snug Harbor, which is an honor and blessing to the State, where hundreds of seamen are cared for, and made as happy as any number of men, alike aged and infirm, or decrepit as themselves, can be made; and there they may remain till the voyage of life is ended. It is proposed, says the Journal, to establish a similar institution in Boston, and a charter for "the Sailors' Snug Harbor of Boston," was granted by the Legislature of 1852. The Board of Trustees embraces some of our most respected merchants and public-spirited citizens. Some progress has been made towards carrying out this noble work. A site for the institution has been secured at Quincy. The late Captain Josiah Bacon, Steward of the Marine Hospital at Chelsea, who was one of the most active founders of this charity, left by his will some $6000 or $8000, the bulk of his property, which, his wife having recently deceased, reverts to the institution.

Perfect Happiness.—A laundress, who was employed in the family of one of our former Governors, said to him, with a sigh :—

"Only think, your excellency, how little money would make me perfectly happy!"

"How little, madam?" said the Governor.

"Oh! dear sir, one hundred dollars would make me perfectly happy!"

"If that is all, you shall have it," and immediately gave it to her.

She looked at it with joy and thankfulness, and, before the Governor was out of hearing, exclaimed: "I wish I had said two hundred!"

The Swearing Room.—The Baltimore Sun of the 19th ult., says: A day or two since, a genteelly dressed man, and having the appearance of a gentleman, walked into the bar-room of one of our most respectable hotels, and perhaps by way of show his consequence, strutted about the room, asking questions, and interlarding his language with any amount of oaths, especially annoying to the landlord and several other persons present. The landlord at last went to him, and quietly calling him aside, told him that the language he was using was exceedingly disagreeable in that place—further, that there was a private room, particularly fitted up, which was called the "swearing room," and if he would only go there he might swear to his heart's content. The stranger took the rebuke kindly, and no more swearing was heard from his lip at that time.

Simplicity in Dress.—Those who think that, in order to dress well, it is necessary to dress extravagantly or gaudily, make a great mistake. Nothing so well becomes true feminine beauty as simplicity. We have seen many a remarkable fine person robbed of its true effects by being over-dressed. Nothing is more unbecoming than over-loading beauty. The stern simplicity of the classic tastes is seen in the old statutes, and in the pictures painted by men of superior artistic genius. In Athens the ladies were not gaudily, but simply arrayed, and we doubt whether any ladies have even excited more admiration.

VARIETY.

The founder of the Zoarite Socialist Community, of Tuscarawas County, Ohio, is falsely stated to have died on the 10th of July. He had been Prophet, Priest, and King, over the Zoarites for nearly half a century. Thirty-seven years ago they emigrated from Germany—poor, friendless strangers. By economy, unity, and industry, the body have accumulated immense wealth. They number about 240 souls, and 45 heads of families. They are supposed to be worth the major part of a million of dollars. It has long been believed, that upon the death of their leader, Mr. Bimeler, the society would dissolve, and distribute the property among the members.

The folly of connubial quarrelling was strikingly illustrated in Lowell, Mass., the other day. The better half of Mr. Evans got angry with him, and sought satisfaction by cutting off the head of his portrait. The indignant husband flew to the law for satisfaction on his part, and protection for the future; and the result was, that Mrs. Evans was fined for cutting up her tantrums as aforesaid, and—Mr. Evans had to pay the fine.

The census returns of 1851 to the British Parliament have just been published in two volumes. The original documents consisted of seven millions of schedules, weighing upwards of fifty-two tons. This enormous mass of statistics was digested into a volume of 1,250,000 pages, which, being too bulky for popular use, was further subdivided into managable volumes.

The Frederick Examiner states that a cooper in that city made a flour barrel one day last week in the space of ten minutes, which was considered quick work; whereupon Mr. Harrison Knight, another cooper, undertook for a wager, to make a barrel in less time, and succeeded in completing it in 7½ minutes.

In the province of Antre-Minhoe Douro, in Portugal, there is a mountain called Stelles, which is remarkable for one thing, which is not easily accounted for. On the top of it there is a lake in which the wrecks of ships, broken pieces of masts, shrouds, and even anchors are found—though the mountain is at least twelve leagues from the sea.

A London paper states that Mountjoy, a well-known pedestrian, accomplished, in the first week of June, the extraordinary task of walking from Loughborough to Derby and back again twice a day for six consecutive days, making 68 miles a day. He commenced on Monday and completed his task on Saturday night, with evident ease.

It is curious that Shakspeare, though giving us Greeks, Romans, Indians, Moors, Egyptians, Germans, Frenchmen, Italians, English, Welsh and Scotchmen, in no instance throughout his plays introduces an Irishman.

The New York Day Book says that cotton is now extensively used in the manufacture of mattresses. By a patented process, the cotton is prepared in the form of felting, permanently elastic, and otherwise well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

The slate of a physician in the town of Chelsea, bore the following a few days since: "Please call at Patrick McCallanghan's, who lives opposite to Mr. Murphy—who moved over to Chelsea yesterday."

It is estimated that during the last twelve months there have been imported into New York, from England and colonies 100,000 tons of bituminous coal, which, at $10 a ton, would amount to $1,000,000.

IMMORTALITY—SPIRIT-RAPPING, &C.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

In the Recorder of July 21st, I noticed some questions, proposed by R. F. Cottrell, on Immortality, Spirit-rapping, &c. And though I am perfectly satisfied with the answer given by T. B. B., as far as it goes, yet I think something more is called for on those questions.

The questions are, "How can you discountenance the spirit-rappings without giving Bible proof that they are false? The soul being immortal, how do you know that the dead do not communicate with the living in this way? How do you know that this is not the work of God to introduce the millennium?"

These questions can all be answered under one head; for, if Bible proof be given that their claims are false, it negatives the whole of them. And nothing will depend on the question, whether there will be a period, somewhere in a future eternity, when the wicked will cease to exist or not. The present state of things, this side of the resurrection, is the point in question. The exposition of Eccl. 9 : 5, given by T. B. B.—that it is in the affairs of this world that the dead know not any thing—will, no doubt, be perfectly satisfactory to those whose views are already in harmony with his. But such as are inclined the other way, will, as a matter of course, wish to inquire whether the teachings of the Bible uniformly, or generally, corroborate that sentiment. It is bad policy, and also betrays a want of candor, to refuse to grant to an adversary what is certainly true, and may be proved so.

That there are two classes of spirits frequently among us, cannot be denied, with the Bible before us, as the infallible testimony of Jehovah. Good angels are said to be ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation. And Jesus says of his little ones, "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." That is, as the connection shows, to receive the first intimation of his will, and fly to their protection. Then it does not appear that they live here among us; but come when they are sent, as ministers of providence—not ministers of grace, or gospel truth; for the Divine testimony was finished, and "bound up and sealed, among Christ's disciples." (See Isaiah 8 : 16, and Rev. 22 : 18, 19.) And while faith, hope, and charity—all necessary graces—were to continue in the church, prophecies, with all other miraculous gifts, were to fail, cease, vanish away. (See 1st Cor. 13 : 8—13.) And when the land of Israel is cleansed from idols, which is yet in the future, the Lord says, "And also I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirits to pass out of the land. And it shall come to pass, that when any shall yet prophesy, then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live; for thou speakest lies in the name of the Lord: and his father and his mother that begat him shall thrust him through when he prophesieth." (Zech. 13 : 2, 3.) This shows, that since the gift of prophecy failed, at the close of the apostolic age, prophesying—pretending to reveal new truths not contained in the Bible—is prompted by unclean spirits. So the point is clear, that good angels are no longer employed to communicate new truth, but are employed, so far as the Lord sees fit to employ them, as ministers of providence.

Fallen angels, or devils, roam in our atmosphere. Their leader is said to be the prince of the power of the air—the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. One of them, in Job's day, came from walking up and down in the earth, and from going to and fro in it. And, one of them said to Jesus, Our name is legion, for we are many. But their power is bounded; for they are reserved in chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day. And the apostle shows their limitation, by saying, Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. This implies, on the other hand, that if we court his company, or commit ourselves to his influence, by hovering around to admire his wonders—his "peeping and muttering"—we may have enough of it. Though it appears, by the question that one of them put to our Saviour—"Art thou come to torment us before the time?"—that they know their doom, that, together with unjust men, they are reserved unto the day of judgement, to be punished, (see 2d Pet. 2 : 9,) and know that their power is now limited, yet Paul discloses to us their present work, by saying, "Your great adversary, the devil, walketh about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he MAY devour." Then, if we would keep out of the coils of the old serpent, we must stand aloof from and resist his charms, lest we be the persons whom he may devour. And, as a roaring lion—a natural ventriloquist—he seems to take a hellish delight in throwing over himself the garb of religion, and then making his roar sound to be in the sanctuary of the truly pious, and so frighten his unwary dupes into his own deadly jaws.

Here, in my opinion, is where all the writers against the spirit rappings, whose writings I have had the opportunity of perusing, have failed; and this is the principal reason which has prompted me to move my pen on the subject. It has long been very unpopular to own that men could have the aid of evil spirits to assist them in carrying on mischief and deception in human society. Therefore great pains have been taken to spy out tricks of jugglery among those called spirit-rappers. And there is no doubt but what much has been discovered, in that line of things. But this affords no proof that there is not a manifestation of the power of spirits in other places, and in connection with other persons. And it does nothing towards convincing believers in these things. Nor does it satisfy multitudes who have seen these things, or heard of them from the most reliable witnesses, and yet have no fellowship for them, that there is no operation of spirits about them. And the facts brought to view, show that there is a class of spirits ready to assist in any evil work, to the extent of their limited power.

Now to the question whether that power will admit of such manifestations. A familiar spirit is a spirit that holds familiar intercourse with a person, by giving answers to inquiries. Then, what does the claim and profession of spirit-rappers amount to, but that they have familiar spirits? And is it not a common thing for the Bible to tell of persons having familiar spirits? If the Bible treated this affair as a mere pretense, and poured its anathemas on those who pretended to have familiar spirits, and said of such and such persons that they pretended to deal with such spirits, then the popular notion, that it was all deception, might stand; and the honest frankness of the Bible too. But as it is, one of the two must fall; for the plain, unvarnished language of the Bible treats it as a reality; as, for instance, that Manasseh "dealt with a familiar spirit." Let the reader carefully peruse the following passages: Lev. 19 : 31, and 20 : 6, 27, Deut. 18 : 11, 1st Sam. 28 : 3—9, 2d Kings 21 : 6, and 23 : 24, 2d Chron. 33 : 6, and Isaiah 8 : 19, 19 : 3, and 29 : 4. The language in these passages distinctly conveys the idea that persons did have familiar spirits. That in the 8th chapter of Isaiah is in connection with a clear prophecy of gospel times, and is a precept that applies to us at this very day. And the prophet describes what is now going on among us, as ingeniously as he could have done it if he had been standing over it and witnessing the operations. He says, "And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have (not pretend to have) familiar spirits, and unto wizards, that peep, and that mutter; should not a people seek unto their God?" From these scriptures, the proof is conclusive, that men did have familiar spirits in ancient times; and that it would be equally true that the same would exist in gospel times; and that Christians would be called on, by certain persons, to get religious instruction from them that have familiar spirits. This shows, that these operations would be set up under the name of religion; which has now fully developed itself, claiming to be the only true religion of the present day. And we are strictly forbidden to have any thing to do with it, and directed to seek unto God—to his law, and to his testimony—which was bound up and sealed among the immediate disciples of our Lord. And the prophet says, "If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

But it may still be asked, How do we know but what the spirits of dead men make some of these communications, admitting their active existence? Their active existence, separate from the body, must be admitted, and can be proved conclusively. It can also be proved, that they are not here in our atmosphere, to know the affairs of men in the flesh, or make communications to them. That there has been one or two instances of their appearing on earth in the days of miracles, and as miracles, must be admitted. To lay the foundation for proving their separate existence in active life, we notice, first, the language of Paul, in Acts 26 : 22, 23, "Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come, that Christ should suffer, and that HE should be the FIRST that should rise from the dead," &c. Then, though some were restored back to this life, as Lazarus and others, before that event, yet none who had died were ever properly raised from the dead, to live in the future, or eternal state, till after the resurrection of Christ. Hence every passage which shows the active existence of persons (whose bodies had died) before the resurrection of Christ, is proof in point. And there is abundance of such proof. Room for but little of it, however, can be allowed here. Isaiah, dwelling upon the death of the righteous, says, "And merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come. He shall enter into peace; they shall rest in their beds, EACH ONE WALKING IN HIS UPRIGHTNESS." (Isaiah 57 : 1, 2.) Here both points are distinctly stated—that they, their bodies of course, rest in their beds, their graves, and they, their disembodied spirits, at the same time, have entered into peace, and walk in their uprightness—which can be nothing less than intelligent obedience to the divine law. And we know, if the plain statements of the Bible are to be relied on, that Moses had not risen from the dead at the time he was seen and heard to converse with Jesus on the Mount. It is as distinctly stated that he died, as any other historical fact in the Bible. See Deut. 34 : 5, 6. And the story of the rich man and Lazarus, whether we take it as a statement of facts, or as a parable to illustrate facts, corroborates the sentiment that both righteous and wicked live—that their spirits live an intelligent, active life, in a state of separation from the body. If it were not so, it would be just as true of the soul as of the body, that it dies; and then the whole man would be dead, from our death to our resurrection. And to say it is so, would be a flat contradiction of the words of Jesus Christ, particularly in regard to the righteous. He says, (John 11 : 25, 26,) "He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth, and believeth on me, shall NEVER die."

But the spirits of the dead are not here upon our earth, to know the affairs of men in the flesh, or communicate to them. The text above referred to, as explained by T. B. B., is in point, that the dead know not any thing of the affairs of this life. And the general Bible treatment of the subject corroborates that sentiment. Eccl. 3 : 21, "Who knoweth the spirit of man, that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast, that goeth downward to the earth?" Away from this earth is called upward, both in Bible and in common language. Then the spirits of men, righteous or wicked, when they die, depart from this earth; while the spirit of the dying beast mingles again with the elements, and returns to the earth. Job was dwelling upon the certainty and universality of death; and addressing Deity, he says, "Thou prevailest forever against him, and he passeth: thou changest his countenance, and sendest him away. His sons come to honor, and HE KNOWETH IT NOT; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." (Job 14 : 20, 21.) This shows that they are not only sent away from the earth, but also that they remain so far away that they know nothing of the condition of their friends in this world, whether in prosperity or adversity. And it is the dead without distinction, whether righteous or wicked. But the story of the rich man and Lazarus shows that they go to widely different places, and far removed from each other, and an impassable gulf between. It also shows, that the dead cannot be sent back to warn the living. The living are put upon their peril, to adhere to the word of God, or perish. This is sufficient to establish the point beyond any excusable doubt. And there is nothing in the Bible, properly understood, that weighs against it; for the one or two miraculous appearances of departed spirits, recorded in the Bible, and they too under such very extraordinary circumstances, together with the fact that there were so very few of them during the long lapse of time over which the Bible history carries us, weighs much more against the notion of a common intercourse between living men and departed spirits, than it does for it. At the appearance of Moses on the mount of transfiguration, not a word that he spoke was communicated to the world. We only know the subject of the conversation. The very light and glory of heaven rested down upon them—insupportable by men in the flesh. That there is joy in heaven, among the angels, over the repenting sinner, is no evidence against our position; for the ministering angels, it is likely, are permitted to carry the news.

I do not think it is giving due weight to Bible language to deny that Samuel appeared to Saul, though commentators do not generally admit it. But, by consulting 1st Chron. 10 : 13, it will be seen that Saul expected only to get a communication from that woman's familiar spirit. But when it was perceived that Samuel actually appeared, an awful astonishment overwhelmed both Saul and the women. And the passage just referred to shows that going to inquire of a familiar spirit through that woman its medium, was one of his transgressions against God, for which he was slain. A poor encouragement to consult mediums, or spirits through them! And the miraculous appearance of Samuel, and the tremendous message he brought, almost extinguished the lamp of life in Saul at the time. And every word recorded as the words of Samuel to Saul, was fulfilled to the letter.

It is claimed, by some, that the angel that gave John his revelations was a human spirit. But I do not believe that the language of Rev. 22 : 9, was designed to convey any such idea. I think any unprejudiced scholar, giving it a careful examination, will admit, that it means that he was but a created being, and not to be worshiped—that he was a fellow servant, serving the same God that John and his brethren the prophets served. But if this angel was one of the old prophets, (which I do not believe,) even then we should have but three of these miraculous appearances of departed spirits, during the 1,000 years of the world's existence, over which the Bible history carries us. Who, then, has a right to believe it has now become a common thing for men to have intercourse with departed spirits?—and that, too, right in the face of so many plain statements of the Bible to the contrary; and now, too, since the law and testimony is bound up and sealed, and eighteen hundred years and more since the last will and testament of Jesus Christ was sealed by his death, unalterably fixed? Though the Apostles were employed to write out his testament after his death, and qualified to do it by the special operations of the Holy Spirit to bring it all to their remembrance, yet, if they had inserted a single thing that he did not authorize before he died, they would have been guilty of forgery. And if they, or an angel, or any other creature, should introduce a new thing, as religious truth, not enforced in that testament, or make any essential alteration, they would fall under that condemnation pronounced by Paul, Gal. 1 : 8, "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Then the doctrine, that we must have a new revelation, and a new dispensation, to introduce the millennium, must have germinated in some corner of that pit whence the revelator's locusts ascended to represent Mahometanism; and we ought to set our faces as firm against the one as the other, But, according to scripture, we may expect, in the order of divine providence, an overthrow of every oppressive, tyrannical power, which opposes the triumph of the gospel, and finally a destruction of all the openly wicked, to introduce the millennium.

But we have one thing more to introduce, to bring the argument to its climax. The apostle John, after giving us warnings against lying spirits and false prophets, gives us a rule to go by to test them, in 1st John 4 : 6. He says, "We are of God: he that knoweth God, heareth us: he that is not of God, heareth not us; hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." When he says, "We are of God," he means himself and the other inspired apostles, of course. And then it is in harmony with the words of Isaiah, (8 : 20,) "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

And now to the question, Do spirit-rappers adhere to the plain and obvious teachings of the Bible, and hold on to the vital principles of the gospel, or do they not? It will be but a very limited sketch, that can here be given, by way of comparison, in answer to this question. In the first place, it must be admitted, that many good men have followed it, for a while, and received communications, harmonizing in some degree with Bible truth, till they have discovered its constant tendency to lead off further and further from the principles of the Bible, and then turned from it, and renounced it. But this is in perfect keeping with the policy of the old serpent from the beginning. If he can get men to swallow a little of his deadly poison, in the first place, he will consent to let them have a large potion of truth to take it in, in order to be sure to get it down, and then he has them in a fair way to take a little more at another time, till his coils are well fastened around them.

But it may be asked, to what degree of error has it advanced, with such as continue to follow it? And what vital principles of the gospel does it deny? I do not know but they all profess to believe that there is one God. But so far as I can understand them, their faith is nearer like the faith of a deist than that of a Christian. That is no more than the devils believe, and tremble too. Beyond this, though they have not all advanced to the same degree, yet I can hardly tell of one of the vital principles of the gospel which some of them do not either deny or so pervert as to destroy its true gospel character. But I forbear going into the details at present, lest some, who are not acquainted with them, might think I slandered them. But that the spirit rapping influence is directly against the Bible, and the religion sustained by it from the days of the Apostles, it wants no eagle eye to see.

And now, if there is any dependence to be placed upon the Bible, or any reality in our sacred trust in Jesus Christ for salvation, or any reality in our enjoying the foretastes of heaven, and the security of eternal life through his atoning sacrifice, the claims of spirit rappers are false; for both cannot be true, being directly opposed to each other. And I would adopt the language of Paul, on another occasion, and say, Touch not, taste not, handle not. And let us cleave to the pure testimony, which is bound up and sealed—to the last will and testament of Jesus Christ, which is unalterably fixed, to stand till he comes to judge the world. ELIAS BURDICK.

SCOTT, Aug. 3, 1853.

A SCHOOL INCIDENT.

The following incident is taken from the Cincinnati Times. If our readers can peruse the account of the conduct of the noble boy and his teacher, without a moistened cheek, they can do more than we can. It will also be read with interest, says the Roxbury Journal, "by those who knew the venerable Dr. Prentice, and those who may remember the parties spoken of. The doctor taught the 'Roxbury Grammar School,' which was kept in the building now occupied, in part, by our office." The doctor is still living.

In my early years, I attended the public school in Roxbury, Massachusetts. Dr. Nathaniel Prentice was our respected teacher; but his patience, at times, would get nearly exhausted by the infractions of the school rules by the scholars. On one occasion, in rather a wrathy way, he threatened to punish with six blows of a very heavy ferule, the first boy detected in whispering, and appointed some as detectors. Shortly after, one of these detectors shouted—"Master, John Zeigler is whispering." John was called up, and asked if it was a fact—(John, by the way, was a favorite, both of the teacher and his schoolmates.) "Yes," answered John. "I was not aware what I was about. I was intent in working out a sum, and requested the one who sat next to reach the arithmetic that contained the rule which I wished to see." The doctor regretted his hasty threat, but told John he could not suffer him to escape the punishment, and continued: "I wish I could avoid it, but I cannot without a forfeiture of my word, and the consequent loss of my authority. I will," continued he, "leave it to any three scholars you may choose, to say whether or not I omit the punishment." John said he would agree to that, and immediately called out G. S., T. D., and D. P. D. The doctor told them to return a verdict, which they soon did, (after consultation,) as follows: "The master's rule must be kept inviolate—John must receive the threatened punishment of six blows of the ferule; but it must be inflicted on volunteer proxies; and we, the arbitrators, will share the punishment by receiving two blows each." John, who had listened to the verdict, stepped up to the doctor, and with outstretched hand, exclaimed: "Master, here is my hand; they shan't be struck a blow; I will receive the punishment." The doctor, under pretence of wiping his face, shielded his eyes, and telling the boys to go to their seats, said he would think of it. I believe he did think of it to his dying day, but the punishment was never inflicted."

THE GRASS OF THE OVEN.

In crossing Lebanon, we stopped one day for refreshment, near a rivulet flowing towards the east. As I was sitting there, I observed a peasant of the country digging up with a sort of pick-axe, the clumps of shrubs and coarse grass, which grow in the thin soil spread over the rocks. He was collecting them to carry home, in order to burn them as fuel. I had seen heaps of the same material piled up near the limekilns in the vicinity of Urtas; and I frequently saw troops of donkeys returning from the fields loaded with bundles of such fuel. The scarcity of wood in the East is very great, and the people are obliged to resort to the use of almost every thing that is capable of being burnt, in order to procure the means of warming their houses in winter, and of preparing their daily food. They not only cut down for this purpose the shrubs and larger kinds of grass, but gather the common withered grass itself, and the wild flowers of which the fields display so rich a profusion. It is from this source that the Saviour derives the beautiful illustration which he employs for the purpose of repressing an undue solicitude on the part of his followers respecting the wants of the present life: "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin. And yet I say unto you, that even Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" Matt. 6 : 28-30. [Ch. Review.

YOUTH AND AGE.

[The following beautiful lines originally appeared in the "Etonian," a periodical started about twenty years ago by the boys of Eton College. For truth, tenderness, and melody, they are incomparable.]

I often think each tottering form,
That limps along in life's decline,
Once bore a heart as young, as warm,
As full of idle thoughts as mine!
And each has had its dream of joy,
Commencing when the blushing boy
First thrills at lovely woman's glance.

And each could tell his tale of youth—
Would think its scenes of love evince
More passion, more unearthly truth
Than any tale before or since.
Yes! they could tell of tender lays
At midnight penned in classic shades,
Of days more bright than modern days,
And maids more fair than modern maid:

Of whispers in a willing ear;
Of kisses on a blushing cheek:
Each kiss, each whisper far too dear,
Our modern lips to give or speak;
Of passions too untimely crossed;
Of passions slighted or betrayed;
Of kindred spirits early lost,
And buds that blossom but to fade:

Of beaming eyes and tresses gay,
Elastic form and noble brow;
Of forms that have all passed away,
And left them what we see them now!
And is it thus—is human love
So very light and frail a thing?
And must youth's brightest visions move
Forever on times restless wing?

Must all the eyes that still are bright,
And all the lips that talk of bliss,
And all the forms so fair to sight,
Hereafter only come to this?
Then what are earth's best visions worth,
If we at length must lose them thus?
If all we value most on earth
Ere long must fade away from us?

SQUEEZING THE MINISTER.

Lately, a church, or rather the lords thereof, made a resolution that their minister must be satisfied to live upon what they should collect at the month's end, let the amount be little or much, and that they would not, from that time forward, bind themselves to make up any particular sum. This resolution they communicated to their pastor, with the solemn advice, "Brother, you must squeeze, the times are bad." He replied, that he would think of the matter, and see how the plan was likely to answer.

In a few days, he called upon the owner of his house, who was a member of his church, to pay his rent, and told him that he could not promise him any specified sum for the house from that time forth; "that the times were bad, and he must squeeze;" but he would pay for it as circumstances would permit. The landlord stared at him with astonishment, and replied, "Man! who lets houses in that manner—to give as much as you please for it?—did any one ever hear of such a thing? I thought to advance the rent a pound next year; you shall not have my house, I am sure, for one half penny less." He next went to the miller, and asked for half a sack of flour. "Certainly," said the miller, "but, do you know that the price of flour has advanced since you purchased the last." "I was not aware of it," replied the minister, "and indeed it is of no great consequence, as the order of things is changed; I am to give what I can for it—Brother, you must squeeze, the times are bad." "Good or bad," answered the miller, "I must have according to 50s. per sack for it; hearken, man! who sells flour upon those terms?" He next proceeded to the farmer, (passing by the maltster, who was a deacon, without calling,) and asked for a bushel of wheat. The farmer said he should have it, but it would cost him eight shillings and sixpence. "No, no, brother," replied the minister, "you must squeeze, for the times are bad; I will give you as much as I can at the end of the month, after seeing how much the collection will be." "What has that to do with the price of wheat?" exclaimed the farmer; "I have a great rent to pay next month, and I do not know how to bring things to bear between the wages, the tithes, and the payments." This brother kept a large farm, and paid specific wages to his laborers, except Jacko, the half-witted boy, who was at hand to fetch the cows for the women, to clean the outhouses, &c.

The minister next called upon John, the shoemaker, who, after hearing the terms, for a pair of shoes, began to put the snuff into his wide nostrils, which were as black as two flues, and talk very sarcastically respecting such terms. "He would not put a patch upon his shoe under treepence." The butcher treated him in like manner, "his meat was so much a pound;" and the tailor also insisted upon having a regular price for his commodities.

On his way home, the minister went into the shop of his principal deacon, and asked him for some small articles necessary for the use of his family, such as a pound of soap, a pound of sugar, a pound of candles, two ounces of tea, and a half penny worth of soda, (but no tobacco,) After packing the things neatly, the grocer began to count their cost. "You need not waste your time reckoning," interrupted the minister, "I am to pay you for them as my circumstances will permit. Brother, you must squeeze, as the times are very bad with me at present, but I will give conscientiously for them what lies in my power." "Squeeze!" said the shopkeeper, "what do you mean? give what you please—how much will that be?" "I can not say at present," replied the pastor, "but you shall know at the end of the next month, when I see how much the collection will be." "That will not do for me," said the shopkeeper, "I am obliged to pay a certain price for every article, and I have a great amount to make up next week." "So, indeed," exclaimed the minister, "well, I see there is no one but myself to squeeze, and that I am out of the reach of bad times; if I was able to perform miracles, like our Saviour with the loaves and fishes, your plan would answer. I have called upon all the members who sell anything for the use of man, but you must all have a particular price for your goods; the owner of my house, the miller, the farmer, the shoemaker, the butcher, the tailor, and yourself likewise. You will not let me have a pound of sugar, or an ounce of tea, out of your shop, without I pay a stated price for it; how then can you expect me to pay my way, without a stated salary, and that, too, proportionable to my family. Before I can agree to receive what you collect monthly for me, you and others must be willing to receive that between you in proportion to what I may have had from each, and I will promise you to live quite moderately, or, if you prefer it, I am willing to live on the money which is wasted weekly by the members in snuff and tabacco.' I do not know how the matter was settled.

THE POWER OF KINDNESS.

No man hath measured it—for it is boundless; no man hath seen its death—for it is eternal. In all ages of the world, in every clime, among every kind, it hath shone out, a bright and beautiful star, a beaming glory!

Look at the case of Saul and David. Bitter and blasting jealousy filled the heart of Saul—and he sought to take the young man's life. With hellish hate he hunted him, even to the dens and caves of the earth. But David conquered his enemy—even the proud spirit of haughty Saul, he humbled. And how? Not with sword and spear—not with harsh and coarse contumely—for these did never touch the heart with gentle influence. No—but with a weapon, simple as the shepherd's sling, yet sure as the arrow of death. 'Twas kindness! This killed rankling hatred, and left Saul to live. And when it had done its work, Saul said to David, "Thou art more righteous than I, for thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil." Was not here a victory—more glorious, more God-like, than a Wellington ever knew?

See Joseph, in the hands of his wicked brethren. For a few pieces of paltry silver, they sold him into Egypt. Providence, in kindness, broke the bands which held him in slavery, and made him a ruler there. Famine spread over the land her dark mantle—and the cruel brethren of Joseph hungered. They went to Egypt for corn. And how acted Joseph? More than once he filled their sacks and returned them their money—and then he made himself known. "I am Joseph, your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt!" Here was kindness, forgiveness. And it crushed to death the spirit of jealousy that had once made him a slave. He had conquered.

Come farther down in the world's history, and tell me, what word, of all those spoken by the "meek and lowly Jesus"—the "Prince of Peace," the "Savior of the world"—was best calculated to soften and subdue the hard hearts of his persecutors? Are we not pointed to the cross on Cavalry? Are we not asked to listen to the soft, sweet tones of that voice—"Father, forgive them?" O, here was kindness.

Look over our extended country at the present day. What has changed those miserable hovels of other days, where misery and wretchedness had dwelt, into the neat and beautiful abodes of plenty and peace? What has kindled anew the flame of love and affection in hearts long estranged and freezing with coldness? What has made happy the homes of thousands of wives, and tens of thousands of children? What, in short, has been the great propellant of the late temperance reformation, which has carried joy and gladness all over the land? What, but kindness?

Reader, have you an enemy whom you would make a friend—a neighbor who needs repentance—a fallen brother whom you would restore to sobriety and virtue? Forget not the power of KINDNESS. [Christian Soldier.

PUBLIC WORSHIP IN OLDEN TIMES.

The following description of the early mode of conducting religious worship in the Congregational Church, is taken from a historical sketch of Old Milford, Conn.

The pastor being in the pulpit, which towered high, and was surrounded by a huge sounding board, the ruling elder on an elevated seat before the pulpit, facing the audience, and the deacons on their seat, somewhat less elevated than his, the heads of families on plain seats in the body of the house, and the children and young people where they could most conveniently dispose themselves, the pastor opened the service with a prayer at least fifteen minutes long, which was followed by the reading and exposition of a chapter of holy writ, which was followed by the psalm given out by the elder, in which all the congregation who could sing joined, which was followed by a sermon an hour or more in length, measured by the glass; with which, and another prayer, and the benediction, the meeting closed. The entire services occupied three hours. They met at nine o'clock in the morning, and two o'clock in the afternoon, and celebrated the Lord's Supper once a month, at the close of the morning service.

Every Sabbath there was a contribution, previous to the taking of which, one of the deacons in turn, standing up, said, "Brethren of the congregation, now there is a time remaining for contribution to the Lord; wherefore, as the Lord hath prospered you, freely offer." The box was not passed from seat to seat, as with us, but was placed on a stand or table, near the pulpit—those disposed to contribute, came forward and placed their offerings in it. These offerings consisted not of money merely, but notes of hand, and any articles which could be profitably appropriated to the use of the church.

A great deal of unhappiness is caused to us by paying too much attention to what others say and think of us. He is an arrant coward, who, conscious of doing right, fears to brave the censure of the whole world. Whether we do well or ill, others will still form wrong estimates of our motives, and attach blame to us for doing deeds of which we have no reason to be ashamed.

Every young man should remember, that the world will always honor industry. The vulgar and useless idler, whose energies of body and mind are rusting for want of occupation, may look with scorn—it is praise; his contempt is honor.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, August 18, 1853.

THE SUNDAY STATUTE.

The assumption that the Sabbath, as enjoined by the law of the land, is altogether a civil institution, is the dernier resort of those who are pressed with the unconstitutionality of a law which enforces religious duties. This was the ground taken by Judge Bell of Pennsylvania, in the case of the Commonwealth vs. Specht, some five or six years ago. But if the State enjoins abstinence from labor on the first or any other day of the week, it proposes the accomplishment of some important end by such a regulation. Now, whatever collateral ends it may propose, the ultimate end to be accomplished is the prosperity and happiness of the community. But in order to secure the accomplishment of this ultimate end, it is indispensable that those who enjoy the leisure of the day avail themselves of it to promote the cause of virtue. They must not suffer it to be a day of mere idleness; they must improve it in acquiring, or imparting to others, that knowledge which shall be the means of establishing them in virtuous habits. Observed in this way, the day may be a source of good to the State, and tend to general happiness.

But if there is any considerable class of persons who will not thus occupy the leisure afforded them, choosing rather to make it a day of self-indulgence, in what respect does their cessation from labor contribute to general happiness? Certainly, it contributes nothing. And so far as they are concerned, the great end which the State proposes by a day of rest is lost. Nor is it in the power of the State to compel that improvement of the day which would secure the end proposed; for it is manifest that such improvement must be voluntarily made, in order that it may have the least tendency to the desired result. Therefore, unless the continued prosecution of labor by one class would hinder the other from making what is supposed to be a right improvement of the day, it seems foolish to say that their cessation from labor is necessary to the general good.

But what hindrance does the labor of one man oppose to the Sabbath-keeping of another? Or, if the entire class of those who are accustomed to make the Sunday a day of self-indulgence be employed in labor, what hindrance would it oppose to a different improvement of the day by the other class? Would the exercises of a religious assembly be marred by the consciousness of those composing it, that others were, at that time, engaged at work? Need the private devotions of a Christian be spoiled by the consciousness that his neighbor chooses to occupy the day in another manner? Certainly not. But if there is hindrance in such supposed cases, with what tremendously unequal power does it bear upon those citizens who feel bound in conscience to keep holy the seventh day of the week—the Saturday—the day when the sound of the hammer, the rattling of carts, and the noise of all kinds of trade, are raised to the highest pitch!

But there is no real hindrance in the cases supposed! The virtuous may be grieved that others will, instead of making a right use of the day, spend it in labor; but they cannot, with any fairness, pretend that it stands in the way of their own improvement. Yet if they plead that this grief is so great that they are made absolutely uncomfortable, and on this ground argue that it is a hindrance to their devotions, why (we would ask) are they not equally grieved at the various forms of self-indulgence, resorted to by the irreligious, by way of passing off the day? Why do they not complain that the recreations of pleasure-seekers are a hindrance to their sabbatical devotions? Yet we never hear them complaining thus? In all such cases they are content simply to express disapprobation, never seeming to feel that the sins of others are a restraint upon their own devotions.

Every candid person must admit, however, that the recreations of idlers are, in point of fact, as great a hindrance to the proper improvement of a Sabbath by others, as their labors in the shop or the field would be. There is no appreciable difference in the two cases. And as recreations contribute nothing to the great end for which the Sabbath, considered merely as a civil regulation, was instituted, we cannot conceive why that cessation from labor, which is sure to bring forth nothing else but recreations, and their attendant excesses, should be coerced by statute law. SUNDAY AND THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

Several of the New York daily papers have recently contained articles in relation to the opening of the Crystal Palace on Sunday—some advocating it, and others opposing it. Those who advocate the measure express a belief that a day spent in viewing the wonders of art collected at the Palace would exert a most healthful social and religious influence—that many persons will be deprived of viewing them, unless they are allowed to do so on Sunday, when they are at leisure—that it would be much better for such to spend their Sundays in the Palace than in the streets or beer-shops. Those who oppose the measure do so generally on moral and social grounds, expressing the fear that such a move would open the way for other and worse forms of Sunday desecration. None of them treat the subject in a strictly religious or scriptural manner. One correspondent of the Tribune, it is true, raised the question what scriptural objections could be made to Sunday amusements, and what authority exists for applying to the Sunday those texts of scripture which were originally written with reference to the seventh day of the week; but his communication was not printed in full, and he was referred to Paley and others for light upon those points, the discussion of which is not considered appropriate for a daily paper. The articles upon the subject thus far are not particularly able, and probably not very influential. Should they take such a turn as would likely interest our readers, we may copy some of them hereafter. Meanwhile we see in them only additional proof that the people at large have but little reverence for Sunday, and do not by any means consider it as the Bible Sabbath.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday Steamboating.

GLASGOW, July 29th, 1853.

The most obvious topic for remark still is the Sunday sailing of steamboats on the Clyde. No legal impediment having hitherto been put in the way, the "Emperor" again sailed on Sunday last, varying slightly the trip, and taking Greenock, Gourock, Dunoon (without attempting to land,) Helensburgh, and Garelochhead. She left Glasgow in the morning with 200 passengers, and returned in the evening with 300—the difference discovering one of the quieter forms of desecration that prevails, for it included "a number of the passengers from Greenock, who usually come up on Sunday by the Liverpool steamers." They were added on the present occasion to the number of the Emperor's Sunday desecrators—a far more obnoxious class—by no additional sin of their own, but from there being no Liverpool boat; the Lyra having broken her shaft.

I noticed in my last the Sunday meeting at Rothesay, for the purpose of protesting against the new desecration. This week, there has been one also at Greenock, under the auspices of the Working Men's Association for Sunday Protection, and that of the Laymen's Protestant Association. But this Working Men's meeting was presided over by W. Martin, Esq., while the only speakers were, the Rev. Mr. Gilmour, the Rev. Mr. Jarvie, the Rev. Mr. Stark, and Peter Drummond, Esq., and Thomas Hamlin, Esq. It has been the clerical policy, for some time past, to put forward the working men—but on this occasion, the working men's work was done by deputy. It was resolved to appoint a Committee to wait upon the Provost, Magistrates, and Harbor Trust, to urge upon them to oppose the landing at the piers of the passengers of Sunday steamers, to the utmost of their power. One of the speakers said that the same traffic had formerly been attempted at Greenock, Gourock, and Rothesay, and it had then been arrested. "What was done before, could be done again," said the Rev. speaker. We have no recollection of the effort thus pointed to; but it may perhaps be found, that what was done formerly cannot now be done. I believe that in the purer time of apostolic Christianity, the church could not have been led to substitute Sunday for the Sabbath, while I also think that in these times, in which the church apostate in the matter, having had her attention directed to the fact that it is tradition, not Scripture, upon which she rests for her adopted day, and yet perseveres in this way, she may find that the disciples she has taught disobedience to "the Commandment of the Lord" will also disregard the injunctions of men.

The Glasgow Working Men's Sunday Association have also had a meeting this week, with the same object. Here most of the speakers, on both sides, do seem to have been working men, although one of the church papers parades, as present, the names of six Clergymen, one Magistrate, and six Eqrs. Apologies for absence were received from other three clergymen, one of whom, the Rev. Mr. Burgess, stated that he regarded the cabs and carriages taking people unnecessarily to church, as the origin of the Sunday steamer. The Chronicle, in giving an account of the meeting, says, The Rev. Mr. Mitchell, in the opening prayer, was not unmindful of "those deluded men who had recently been profaning the Lord's day by sailing upon the Clyde on that day in a steamboat." That party was referred to by the Chairman also, as "vile buccaneers." But this did not prevent three oppugners of the object of the meeting from openly declaring so. The first resolution, affirming "the divine origin and appointment of the Sabbath," was allowed to be carried without opposition. But when the sailing of the Sunday steamer was denounced in the second resolution, ("itself the length of an ordinary speech," says the Chronicle,) a storm of opposition arose, which was not even quelled while the apostolic benediction was being pronounced within a few minutes of midnight. Yet that resolution included in its condemnation the unnecessary use of cabs and carriages on Sunday. In its support, a Mr. Campbell, (according to the Chronicle,) "read a long and wearisome speech." It contained the following computation of Sunday labor in this country at present:—

On Canals and navigable rivers,	100,000
On Railways,	70,000
In the produce and sale of spirituous drinks,	600,000
In the sale of tobacco,	209,000
In the Post-Office,	20,000
In steamboats in and around London, in connection with cabs and carriages,	16,000
	1,005,000

With an addition of workers in iron, soap and glass works, as also in secret works, not included in the above.

The Scottish Guardian of to-day announces by placard, as the attraction of the paper, the "Defeat" of the Sabbath-breakers. But there seems but little to boast of—especially when it is considered that the meeting was expressly called of those unfavorable to Sunday sailing, and that, in consequence, one of the papers in favor of that sailing had dissuaded its readers from attending such a one-sided meeting, promising that the working men in favor of Sunday healthful recreation should have a meeting shortly, at which they might express their own opinions. And still less is that to be regarded as a "defeat" which leaves the steamer plying as before—announced as she again is for Sunday first.

And here we pause for the present, necessarily requiring to discontinue these ephemeral remarks on passing events and topics of our time, while we purpose, if the Lord will, to be again occupied, at our leisure hours, with our proposed notes on the History of the Change of the Sabbath—when first we have finished our observations on the Sabbath of Millennial Times. MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

An intimate friend, and most excellent Presbyterian brother, who communicated to me cobbler Lee's flimsy attempt to patch up a decayed subterfuge for not yielding obedience to the commandment of the Lord originating the observance of his own appointed rest day, has sent the following bit of witticism, by way of slurring over the flagelation his charmer, Dr. Lee, got in the remarks accompanying the notice of his University sermon, published a few weeks since in the columns of the Recorder:—

Your reference to Moses reminds me of an anecdote told me by a wag who spent two or three years in the Polytechnic School of France. The Commandant of that institution was an aid of General Kleber in Egypt, and had been sent by that General with dispatches across the desert to notify a post of the approach of a detachment of Mamelukes, giving him an escort of twelve men.

"Le General, give me mes despach. I take twelf men wit me. I carry my water in my stomach, like le camel! I leave ten men on ze zards. I deliver mes despach in two days and a half!"

"Well, Commandant," said my friend, "that was one grand exploit. You beat Moses: he took forty years to cross the desert!"

"Moses," ejaculated he with a scream such as a Frenchman only can explode; "Moses! you call him: Moses may be a very much gentleman, but, zare, he vash not brought up in the French Armee!"

The foregoing anecdote has no appropriateness or point whatever to the subject of either communication, but makes much against cobbler Lee and his admirers. If designed, simply, to illustrate the proverbial vanity of the French nation, it may be very well, and equally so, if intended to designate cobbler Lee's folly, as a "specimen of religious twaddle;" but if meant as a poke at the Cassius article, it may find its solution in the renowned nursery rhyme:—

"Little Dicky was too quicky,
He tumbled over the timber;
He bent his bow to shoot a crow,
But kill'd the cat in the winder."

The advocates of the Heaven-appointed Sabbath are perfectly willing to take Moses at his word, and have no need to resort to quibbling, garbling, nullifying, or manufacturing for him. If he had been brought up in the "French Armee," he might have had a sliding scale for the Sabbath—to shift and shuffle as might suit his purpose—and would not be worth naming in such a connection. Frenchmen are, unquestionably, brave, but have no character for veracity. Such authority might very well suit cobbler Lee, to sustain his false theory—his impious position. Sabbatarians rely on Moses, because they believe that he belonged to the Army of the Maker of Heaven and Earth—was set apart of God to be the Chronicler of Israel, as well as the Prophet and Leader of the Lord's chosen people; and because they cannot think that he would or could withhold any of the dealings or purposes of his Master. They that think otherwise, must prove his infidelity and tergiversation. Sabbatarians take him, I repeat, at his word, and repudiate the blasphemous imputation of French morals and French legerdemain practiced by him on the Sabbath question. Sabbatarians do not only repudiate, but deprecate, such wanton license, and have no wish whatever to add or diminish a single "jot or tittle" of all his testimony. Can cobbler Lee and his admirers say so?

Some years ago I urged upon the Senior Elder of our Society, the importance of doing something to raise the standard of education among our people, so as to be qualified to enter the arena and contend, not only valiantly, but understandingly, against prevalent error in respect to the Sabbath of Jehovah. In offering some arguments to enlist his influence in that cause, I named the commanding position of the Presbyterians, and pointed his attention to the Methodists, who, but a few years since, were a mere handful of illiterate disciples, but now are an educated and influential body, having the control of several Colleges, and are constantly sending out ministers and missionaries, fully able to cope with scholars from any portion of the Christian family. "That's right," he quaintly replied, "they need it—they need a great deal of learning. It takes but little learning to preach the plain truths of the gospel, but it takes a great deal of learning to make a lie of the Bible; and as many preachers, in the present day, make a lie of it, they need something more than plain common sense to do it."

Cobbler Lee may be distinguished as a scholar, and possess every evidence or qualification of having been brought up in the "French Armee," as, unfortunately, too many of our modern theologians do; but that will not prove any crown to their rejoicing. Perverting the Scriptures is one of the most solemn, most awful denunciations against man left on the Record. Sabbatarians do not require that Moses should have been brought up in the system of the "French Armee," or that he should be possessed of cunning and trick, but are perfectly satisfied to receive him as the faithful historiographer of God's ancient people, and do not desire to be any faster than the "thus saith the Lord" which he has given to us. Cobbler Lee and his followers do. Humph! W. M. F.

THE CHINESE REBELLION.

The religious character and probable influence of the Chinese rebellion, is a matter of deep interest to every philanthropist and Christian. Statements have been made to the effect that "the leaders of the movement are not merely formal professors of a religious system, but practical and spiritual Christians." This the Hong Kong Register pronounces sheer nonsense and humbug. It contends that the Christianity of these men has shown itself in robbery, licentiousness, and bloodshed. They glory in stating that they have put to death 25,000 Tartars, without distinction of age or sex, since they have had possession of Nanking. It considers them as using religion merely as an engine to serve their ambitious ends. The way these men became acquainted with any part of Christian truth, is said to be this:—

Their principal leaders are men belonging to the Kwangse province in the South, and had never before been in the North of China, and the inference was natural, that they must have obtained copies of the Chinese version of the Bible either in Hong Kong or Canton. This turns out to have been the case. A society of Chinese, called the Christian Union, which had been organized and instructed by Dr. Gutzlaff, was broken up when he went to Europe, and it is more than probable that some of the men now in high places with the rebels may have had some teaching at his hands, and others from missionaries in Canton.

At the last meeting between the British and rebel chiefs at Nanking, one of the leaders made mention of Dr. Hobson, of the London Missionary Society at Canton, and said that in his hospital, when under medical treatment, he had first heard of Christianity. No one can say what amount of Christianity may be in their ranks. The Register says there is undoubtedly great imposture and wild fanaticism among them. The leader, Tae-ping-wing, gives out that his origin was divine, and he asserts that he is often taken up to Heaven, and has direct personal communion with God, and is the brother of Jesus Christ! His followers seen to entertain the same belief. In practice, he has thirty-six wives!

It is further stated, that the use of opium is disallowed in the ranks and forbidden to their followers. In fact, it is said that they have added the interdiction of the use of tobacco and opium to the Ten Commandments, tacking it on to the end of the seventh. It is stated that they have plenty of money. As they were poor men, they must have obtained this by plunder.

AN APPEAL TO THE PHILANTHROPIC.

Miss Mary Elizabeth Wormeley, daughter of Rear-Admiral Wormeley, now residing at Newport, R. I., makes the following touching "Appeal to the Philanthropic," through the Newport Mercury. The case is an extraordinary one, and would seem to justify philanthropists in engaging in the slave-trade, if the thing is ever justifiable. Alas, that law should make such appeals necessary! Here is the substance of Miss Wormeley's letter:—

I have been passing part of the summer in Clarke County, Virginia, where two cases affecting persons I have known for years have greatly enlisted my sympathy, and I now venture to make my most earnest appeal to persons richer than myself to assist me in the attempt to give them freedom, home, and happiness.

The more pressing case is that of a man named John Gordon, a very light mulatto, a blacksmith and paper-hanger by trade, whom I have known since 1842, and who bears the highest character among the gentlemen who employ him. He was born the slave of Mrs. Hawes, of Rappahannock County, and received his freedom at her death, when all her negroes were emancipated and provision made for their transport to Africa. John Gordon, who had recently married a slave woman, to whom he was much attached, preferred to remain in Virginia. He had continued to reside there fifteen years as a free negro, but under the laws recently passed by the Convention of Virginia, he has been called before the County Court, and warned that he must quit the State within two months, or return to Slavery. It is easy calmly to read or state these facts, but it was not easy to listen to them calmly when the poor fellow in deep distress came up to speak to me. He had an idea that people in free countries would pity him—that "Miss Lizzie from the North" could do something to assist him in the purchase of his wife, and at least some of his bright children, so that they might leave the State together. Was there nothing that I could do? he asked; was there nothing he could do to prevent his being separated forever from his family, leaving his wife and children to the uncertain chances of Slavery. "Oh! I would do any thing," he exclaimed with a pathos that deeply touched me, "any thing on earth for them, Miss Lizzie, but go back and be a slave again." I could not bear to tell him that I had no power effectually to assist him—that I could give him only my own few dollars and my sympathies. I did, what I think almost any one else in my place would have done. I promised—however painful it might be to me to ask assistance—that I would lay his case before my friends when I came North, and see what could be done for him. The gentleman who owns the family also urged me to interest myself in the case. He is a person of great benevolence, and the brother-in-law of Mrs. Hawes. Instead of opposing the emancipation of her negroes, he took the most lively interest in their welfare, superintended their embarkation, and continues to receive the most grateful letters from Liberia. But he is far from rich, and though he assures me he will gladly sell Evelina and her children (whom he originally bought at the earnest request of John Gordon, to save them from being separated and sold to the traders) for less than half their market value, in order to secure their freedom, the state of his affairs is such that he is not justified in giving them their liberty.

My other case is that of a woman, now about 30 years of age, who was the beloved and devoted attendant of one of my dearest relations. It was her mistress' most earnest wish, upon her death-bed, to give Sarah the freedom she had long sighed for, and after many difficulties, owing to the arrangement of the property, the family was enabled to give her her papers. But, by the same law of Virginia which operates so harshly on John Gordon, she is compelled to leave the State within a year or return into slavery. She has a husband to whom she is devotedly attached. Conjugal affection is (not unnaturally) rare among negroes, but this attachment I have never seen surpassed in any condition, and she cannot bear to leave him. He is a slave of excellent character, trusted and esteemed through all the neighborhood; but, unfortunately, though hired by the family to whom Sarah belonged, and living for the past ten years under the same roof with his wife, he belongs to another master. This gentleman is willing to sell him to his wife for a sum very much less than his market value. They have warm friends at the South, willing to do all in their power to promote their object; and, once free, are secure of employment and the highest wages in Baltimore.

About $3,500 are necessary to accomplish both these objects; a sum so large that I can hardly hope to raise it all. A thousand dollars would set free John Gordon's wife and five youngest children.

THE DEFICIENCY OF MINISTERS.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have seen in the Sabbath Recorder, and in some other papers, the question somewhat discussed as to why so few young men of the present day are entering the gospel ministry? Several reasons have been offered, and it seems to me with considerable force too. But after all, I fear that the reason has not been suggested. I beg, therefore, that the opinion I offer may be duly considered. After some twenty years experience and observation, and after considering all that has been said upon the subject, it seems to me that the reason is the want of love to Jesus Christ, and a hearty interest in his cause! I find that love makes difficult tasks easy, and heavy burdens light. N.

THE PILGRIMS AND THE SUNDAY.—One of the reasons given by the Pilgrim Fathers (so called) for leaving Leyden, was "their grief at the profanation of the Sabbath." What would they have said, if they had risen up in Boston, a few Sundays ago, when the New York Light Guard, on their way to the Pilgrim Celebration at Plymouth, were marching about the city, escorted with martial music? The celebration was to come off on Second-day (Monday.) On Sabbath (Saturday) evening, this military company, and a large number of citizens, left New York to attend; of course traveling all night, (when a true Pilgrim would have been sabbatizing,) and reaching Boston so late Sunday morning, that the church bells began to ring before the strains of martial music died away. O modern Pilgrims, how are ye fallen!

CHURCH EXTINCTION.—In these days, when so much is said about church extension, a little thought may well be given to a process of church extinction which is going on in New York City. According to a writer in the Journal of Commerce, there were in the six lower wards of New York—below Canal-st. on the West, and Catharine-st. on the East—77,099 inhabitants in 1830, and 112,366 in 1850. Of forty churches located in that portion of the city in 1830, thirty-two have been abandoned for other locations. In 1830 there was only one Catholic Church in that region; now there are six. This change results from the removal of a large part of the Protestant population 'up town' or to Brooklyn, and the filling of their places, so far as numbers are concerned, with immigrants from Europe, chiefly Roman Catholics or Nothingarians. Of the churches abandoned, twelve were Presbyterian, and six Protestant Episcopal.

THE GERMANS AND THE SUNDAY.—One of our exchanges says that almost the entire mass of the German population of the city of Newark, N. J., recently petitioned the municipal authorities of that city to repeal the Sunday ordinance. This they urge on the ground that it interferes with their habits—having been accustomed, in the Fatherland, to make it a day of amusement. "The city authorities have answered the memorial in a report, in which they maintained the advantages of the Sabbath as a civil institution, and show how difficult and impolitic it would be to attempt to engraft on our institutions foreign customs so repugnant to the convictions of our people."

GRAND COMBINATION CONCERT.—On Thursday evening, August 18th, a Concert of Vocal and Instrumental Music is to be given at Castle Garden, New York, combining the leading musical talent at present in this country. The idea of such a reunion was suggested by the Industrial Exhibition of all Nations. The completeness of the arrangements may be inferred from the fact that among the artists are Madame Sontag, M'll Steffanoni, Madame Amelia Patti, Signors Salvi, Marini, Rocco, Badiali, Rovere, and Rosi, supported by the entire force of the Musical Societies, English, Italian, French, and German. It is also stated that M. Ole Bull, the great Violinist, will on this occasion appear once more before the public whom he has so often delighted. The whole is to be conducted by Max Maretzek. Such a combination of musical talent is not often concentrated—perhaps may never again be in New York.

PREMIUM FOR AN ESSAY.—A premium of $200 is offered, on behalf of a liberal and pious citizen, (to which another proposes to add $50 or $100 if the work fulfills his expectations,) for an essay, not exceeding 200 12mo. pages, on "The more perfect exemplification in Christian life of the Doctrines of the Gospel, and with special reference to the conversion of sinners to Christ." The gentleman who offers this premium says:—

"The great danger, in this day of light, to the Orthodox Churches, I apprehend, is that of resting in a dead faith. The present I know is called the 'age of action.' But I must think it is 'action' only in comparison with the past. As compared with the work now demanded by the exigencies of Christ's kingdom, the present is an age of worldliness, of lukewarmness and self indulgence. The merest modicum, as a general thing, is given to the work of Christ, while multitudes go for fashion, extravagance and luxury. Even the little we do for Foreign Missions seems to be in danger of bribing our consciences into the neglect of the perishing around us. The 'broad way' is still the thronged way."

Competitors may address Rev. Dr. Humphrey, Chairman Committee, Pittsfield, Mass., or Sewell Harding, Sec. Doctrinal Tract Society.

THE HEAT AND ITS EFFECTS.—Such hot weather as that of last week was never before known in New York. For several days the thermometer stood most of the time in the neighborhood of 100 degrees. On Sabbath-day it was above 100 degrees in the shade, and 115 degrees in the sun. Among the results, we have to record two hundred and twenty sudden deaths during six days, in New York and environs. The Tribune of Monday morning last gave the names of most of the victims, from which it appears that a large number of them were emigrants recently arrived, who were engaged at work under a blazing sun. From such heat and the filth of the city there is reason to apprehend more serious consequences. Reports of unprecedented heat and sudden deaths come from all parts of the country.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Christian Intelligencer says: A highly esteemed member of one of our city churches has, through the Board of Education, presented to each of the young men of the graduating class in our Theological Seminary at New Brunswick, who may need the same, thirty dollars in cash, and twenty dollars in books. These amounts to be available to them as soon as they shall have obtained their professoral certificates.

A marble monument, in the form of an obelisk, has recently been put up in the old burying-ground in Concord, N. H., to mark the spot where lie the remains of the son of President Pierce, who lost his life at the accident on the Boston and Maine railroad, near Andover, in January last. The monument bears the following inscription: "Benjamin Pierce: born April 13, 1841: died January 6, 1853: 'Go thy way, thy son liveth.'"

Rev. Dr. Nelson, who is now writing a series of letters to the Puritan Recorder, from Europe, refers thus to the Swiss whom he met in the Canton du Vallais: "The people seem hardy and coarse, but very civil. As we meet them, they give us some salutations, and the boys actually take off their hats, and make a bow, reminding us of the good old times of New England, when the organ of reverence existed."

In answer to the solicitations of a Chief of one of the Marquesian Islands, the Hawaiian Missionary Society have sent or are about sending a number of teachers to Fatuhiwa, one of the Merquesian group. The Chief visited Honolulu in person to procure teachers, with the hope that the introduction of Christianity and civilization would put an end to the wars and social degradation of his people.

The Mercer-st. Presbyterian Church in New York is reported to have contributed more than $60,000, during the last few months, for the Union Theological Seminary in New York, and other purposes of education. This church has also, during the year, given nearly $6,600 to the American Board, for the cause of Foreign Missions.

By a report presented to the Massachusetts General Association, it appears that whereas clergymen, on an average, remained in their parishers nine years, fifty years ago, they now remain permanent only from three to six years. This is the estimate in regard to the Orthodox Congregationalists.

The Synod of the Church of Scotland, in Canada, has adopted an address to the Queen, in view of the late Gavazzi riots. They give their views in regard to liberty of conscience, and express the hope that the majesty of the law may be fully vindicated.

Rev. Mr. Barker and Mrs. Barker recently sailed from Boston for Bombay, in the ship Arabella, in the expectation of being connected with one of the Mahratta missions of the American Board. For the present they will probably reside at Satara.

A private letter received by the Baltic, says that the claim of Dr. King at Athens has been settled by the payment of 12,000 drachms for his land taken for the public use. His religious griefs were not recognized as entitled to redress.

The Tablet states, that no less than £12,000 have been collected in England, Ireland, and France, for the purposes of the defense fund of Dr. Newman. The taxed costs of Dr. Achilli amount to not more than £1,000. The whole expense of the proceedings against Dr. Newman are stated to be £9,001.

A correspondent of the London News says, that Father Newman is now studying very hard with the Dominicans, at Rome, and is about to found an order of Roman Catholic missionaries, whose especial object will be the conversion of the 'flourishing kingdom of England.'

Wednesday, June 15th, was ordered by royal proclamation to be observed in the Sandwich Islands as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer, deprecatory of the small-pox, which, the proclamation says, was likely to decimate the population.

In no State in New England are candidates for the ministry equal to the number of vacant churches, or to the actual demand for pastors.

Rev. Stuart Robinson, of Baltimore, declines the D. D. conferred on him by Centre College.

European News.

The steamer Africa, with European dates to July 30, arrived at New York on the 11th inst.

Respecting the Turkish question, we have really nothing beyond strong hopes of peace. The formal protest of the Porte against the occupation of the Principalities had been published. It was reported that the Sultan had signed the agreement prepared by the Powers, and would send an ambassador to St. Petersburg. Austria is active in her endeavors to bring matters to a settlement; some dangerous symptoms manifesting themselves within her own territory.

A dispatch from Smyrna, July 15th, states that the day preceding, a Hungarian refugee, whose name is not reported, arrived there from Beyrout, where he is said to have been the cause of disturbances not unlike the recent Smyrna riots. This man having gone on board a steamer belonging to the Austrian Lloyd's, was arrested by the captain in the name of the Consul of Austria, and was informed that he would be carried to Trieste. The Hungarian protested against this measure, and, taking advantage of a momentary carelessness of his captors, jumped into the sea, whence he was rescued by a boat, and conveyed to the Consul of the United States, who at once took him under his protection, and compelled the Austrian captain to give up the wife and children of the fugitive.

The Pope's health is reported to be precarious. He has been suffering for some time from an attack of asthma and from general debility. He is 61 years of age, and his death would, without doubt, be the signal for important movements in Italy. A good deal of excitement prevailed among the population of the Romagna, and in several assassination was becoming rife. Four murders were reported within five or six days: two at Taenza, one at Imola, and another at Castel Bolognese. Alarming riots had occurred at Bologna, Forli, Rimini and Ravenna. The ostensible cause of these disturbances was the dearness of provisions, but it was strongly suspected that this was a pretext to cover political moves. The export of grain had been prohibited from Ancona.

A tragedy lately happened in Hungary. Julien Sarossy, a popular poet, Fellow of the Hungarian Academy, having taken part in the revolution, was outlawed and a price put on his head. He was unable to escape, and lived concealed as man-servant first, with one of his friends, the poet Alexander Wahott, later with a lawyer as tutor of his children, and at last he was appointed teacher in the Protestant Common School at Gyöngös. Here he was recognized, imprisoned, and carried in fetters to Pesth. The Court Martial was assembled, and Sarossy examined as to where he had been concealed for four years. He remained silent, and declared that he never would compromise his friends. The Court Marshal sentenced him to be flogged until he would disclose the names of the friends who had given him shelter. He received fifty lashes, without betraying his friends; but at last, overpowered by the pain, he named them. They were immediately imprisoned—the lawyer committed suicide in prison to escape the torture, and Wahott became insane.

From China we have important intelligence as to the progress of the rebels. They have added the considerable city of Amoy to the country in their possession. This place is a seaport, some five hundred miles above Canton, and carries on a considerable trade with the island of Formosa, which lies opposite. We shall, probably, next hear that Ning-po and Shanghae on the north, and Canton on the south, have fallen into their hands. They will still have to defeat the Tartar armies, which are to come from the north of the empire, before the question of their entire success is settled. Our present advices confirm the previous reports of their hostility to Paganism, and their ferocity toward their conservative opponents. Among the latter they occasionally make dreadful slaughter, cutting them to pieces long after they have laid down their arms and cried for quarter. This amiable peculiarity is described in lively rhetoric by some of the Catholic missionaries in the country, who look upon the decidedly Protestant and rationalistic doctrines of the insurgents as bad, and worthy of condemnation. Still there seems to be reason to anticipate that their triumph will prove a blessing to China.

California News.

Two weeks later dates from California have come to hand since our last. We give a summary of the news, which is not strikingly important.

By no means the least interesting event of the fortnight was the celebration of the Anniversary of American Independence. Throughout the State, so far as we are informed, the occasion was observed with much enthusiasm.

The beautiful village of French Corral was almost annihilated by fire on the 8th ult. Loss estimated at $50,000.

The town of Ophir was reduced to ashes on the 12 thult. Loss $80,000.

The summer fires have done much damage in mountain and valley. Large quantities of grain have been destroyed in various parts of the State.

The wheat crops in most of the agricultural districts are suffering from rust.

On the second ult., Lola Montez and P. P. Hull, Esq., (late of The San Francisco Whig,) were married at the Mission Dolores.

The mammoth tree in Calaveras County, the greatest and most wonderful production of the vegetable kingdom ever known, has been sacrilegiously cut down for speculative purposes.

James Collier, formerly Collector of San Francisco, has been indicted by the Grand Jury of the County, for feloniously using money belonging to the United States.

The Baptist denomination of San Francisco are about to erect a spacious church.

A Chinese church is to be built in San Francisco, 42 by 45 feet, three stories high. It will be devoted to moral and religious instruction, under the superintendence of Geo. Athei, of the See Yup Company.

The vineyards promise a much larger yield than usual, perhaps double the previous year. As usual, great quantities will be shipped to San Francisco, and from thence distributed to all parts of the State.

Wm. H. Clark, formerly of Lowell, Mass., was killed in a most shocking manner, on the Calaveras. He was engaged in working his claim on Red Bar, when his foot accidentally slipped, and he fell about fifteen feet, striking a long-handled shovel, which passed nearly through his body. He lingered in great agony until 12 o'clock at night, when death relieved his sufferings. He leaves a wife and family at home.

The first of the overland emigration of the present year, arrived in Sacramento on the 4th July. The party consisted of twelve persons, headed by Captain Isaac Evans, and were from Galena, Illinois. They left the Western frontier of Missouri on the 20th April, and met with little molestation from Indians. The early part of the journey was impeded by deep snow. The winter has been terribly severe on the plains. Humboldt river was found very high, and the ordinary river road overflown. From this cause it was thought the earlier emigrants would find much difficulty in procuring grass for their stock. A number of Salt Lake trains, with considerable herds of cattle, had already arrived in Carson valley, on the Eastern side of the Sierra Nevada.

The Oregonian has information of the discovery of gold in considerable quantities on the head waters of the Santiam. Some men who were prospecting obtained $4 a day by the process of "panning."

Six prisoners, aided by persons outside, recently escaped from the Salem jail.

The spurious gold dust manufacturers are attempting to pass their impositions in Oregon.

Railroad Massacre.

On Tuesday afternoon, August 8, the 2 o'clock P. M. train from Philadelphia, and the 2 o'clock P. M. train from New York, while coming round a curve, at or near Old Bridge, on the Camden and Amboy Railroad, came into a terrible head and head collision, whereby four persons were instantly killed and a large number wounded, some of them, it is feared, fatally. The details are given to the N. Y. Tribune in the statement of two reliable gentlemen, which we append:

Mr. Paxson Price, and Mr. John Jackson, from Philadelphia, residents of Delaware County, who came on in the 2 o'clock P. M. train from Philadelphia, state that about 4.15 o'clock, we saw a white flag in the hands of the signal-man; it appeared as though our engine was then reversed, as we slackened speed considerably; I looked out of the car, and observed the New York train coming toward us, and not 50 yards distant from us; it was just coming around the curve, which is very sharp at this point; I then saw the engineer or fireman, or both, jump off, and escape uninjured; the New York train was coming along like lightning, and both trains were out of time, and both trying to make some station, at which they could lay by and let the other pass; I was in the 4th car, and did not get injured, nor did any person in that or the three after ones get hurt; the two trains came on head and head, and the collision was almost instantly after I saw the New York train. I had just time to brace myself for the shock when it took place—I scarcely felt the shock, but the second and third cars of our train were smashed all to pieces. The first car was not broken. I saw seven or eight that were badly wounded in the second and third Philadelphia cars. Our locomotive was considerably broken. The collision was so forcible, that it tore up the track for a considerable distance. The locomotive of the New York train was badly broken. The first and second passenger cars of that train were driven into each other, and broken so much that the opposite ends of the two cars were driven within seven feet of each other. I saw four persons taken out. One of them was dead, and the other three died shortly afterward. The scene baffled all description. People rushed out of the cars as though crazy; but it was surprising that very little screaming was heard.

A Coroner's Jury in the case, express the following opinion as to the cause of the accident:—

"The said Jury find that the collision was caused by gross negligence on the part of John Anderson, engine-driver of the train from South Amboy, in running said train at unusual speed by the station and around the curve at Old Bridge. The Jury also find that Edward Muschamp, conductor of the train from South Amboy, is highly censurable for omitting to compare his watch, and that of the engine-driver, with the standard clock of the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company in New York, on the day of their collision, agreeably to instructions expressly given by said Company. The said Jury exonerate the said Company from any censure in regard to said collision. The Jury further think, if the orders of said Company had been obeyed, the collision would not have taken place. The Jury exonerate the agents and officers of the train from Philadelphia from any censure."

Another Railroad Calamity.

A frightful accident occurred on the Providence and Worcester Railroad, near Pawtucket, on Sixth-day morning, Aug. 12, about 8 o'clock. The regular up train was run into by an excursion down train, smashing locomotives and cars, killing fifteen persons, and wounding three times as many more. Among the killed was an Episcopal clergyman from Providence, named Penny; most of the others were factory operatives from Whitinsville.

One account says that the accident resulted from a variation of two minutes in the watches of the engineers; and that two minutes later the excursion train would have passed a switch, and been on one track, while the up train would have been on another.

Another account says that the collision was the result of the recklessness of the conductor of the excursion train, who, being late at Valley Falls, should have waited. But having the excursion party on board, who were afraid of losing the steamboat, and having but half a mile to run to reach the junction, he hoped to accomplish the distance before the arrival of the Providence train. The Providence train, which had the track, waited a moment or two beyond its time, when it reached the junction, to give ample time for the down train, and then proceeded. The collision occurred at a curve, a short distance above the junction, the up train not having obtained full speed. The down train was going at a high speed.

Among the incidents of the disaster is a very miraculous escape of a little girl, whose mother was killed. It appears that she was sitting in the foremost seat of the car when the shock took place. The back of the seat opposite her was jammed against her breast, so that she could scarcely breathe. She screamed for assistance, and her life was saved by forcing back the timber with a rail, and dragging her out. A man who sat on the same seat with her was instantly killed by a large splinter running through him.

A Race for Liberty.

A gentleman of our acquaintance (says the Christian Press,) related to us the following, which took place under his own eye at Niagara:—

He was standing on the steps of one of the principal hotels there, when a carriage drove up, containing a Southerner and his party. In front of the hotel stood a mulatto woman, talking with her husband, while several colored waiters were also there, employed in their various duties. As the man stepped from the carriage, his eye met that of the woman, and on both sides there was instant recognition. He advanced toward her with the salutation, "How do you do, Martha!" extending his hand. She shrunk back, fearing that if she took the proffered hand she would be detained by its grasp. He pressed toward her, while she retreated, and finally turned and run. The Southerner then bawled out that he would give a hundred dollars to any one who would arrest her.

Several were brutal enough to start like hounds in pursuit. But her husband sprang to her side, and the waiters interposed between them and the pursuers, and all rushed toward the river. The woman outran them all, even the husband, and plunged down the ferry stairs by hops instead of steps. A single boat lay there, while she could not push it off. In a moment her friends were at her side again, while the pursuers were hurrying down the steps. She sprung into the stern of the boat, followed by her husband, others seized a handspike and applied it to the boat, it moved, and as several hands were reached out to seize it, it glided just beyond them. An instant more and they were afloat on the broad river, and sent up a glad and defiant hurra, that was heard above the roar of the cataract. They reached in safety a soil which is truly free.

THE CROPS IN WESTERN NEW YORK.—A business letter from Eld. N. V. Hull says:—"I have just returned from an excursion through Cattaraugus and Chautauque Counties; and although I saw but little of the country, I ascertained by conversations with several persons, that the drouth which has been prevailing in this region had seriously affected the crops, especially the hay crop. But in some parts the damage done to vegetation by the grasshopper is even more than that done by the drouth. On my brother-in-law's farm, where I had the best opportunity to notice their movements, I saw where they had eaten even the standing corn, cob and all. Green apples were greedily devoured by them. Such utter destruction by the grasshopper I never before saw."

THE BIRDS PROTECTED.—There was one sensible and humane law passed the last Legislature, for which they deserve public thanks. It goes into effect on the 17th of this month.

SEC 1. Any person who shall kill or wound or trap any bird within any cemetery or public burying ground, or who shall destroy any bird's nest, or remove the eggs or the young therefrom, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of five dollars for every bird killed, wounded or trapped, and for every bird's nest destroyed or eggs or young birds removed, recoverable in any justice's court within the county where the offense has been committed, to be sued for by any person making the complaint. The penalty to go toward the support of the poor of the county.

SEC. 2. Any person who shall knowingly buy or sell any bird which has been killed or trapped, or shall have such birds on sale, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable with a fine of five dollars for every bird bought, sold, or on sale, to be recovered and to be disposed of in like manner as provided for in the first section of this act.

PANIC IN A RAILROAD CAR.—Mr. Henry Stetson, a hatter, of Orange, New Jersey, was accidentally killed at the Hackensack bridge, Aug. 8, under the following circumstances: As the train was going upon the bridge the whistle was blown to notify some laborers to get off the track. A Mr. Thayer and Mr. Selah Hill, of Jersey City, were seated together in the next to the last car of the train. Mr. Thayer remarked to Mr. Hill, when he heard the unusual whistle, that the draw must be open. They started for the door, and Mr. Hill looking from the platform of the car saw that the draw was right, and so remarked. But the rumor that the draw was open spread through the car, and created a panic. The passengers pushed toward the doors, some of them screaming with fear. One passenger threw himself from the platform and was slightly injured. Mr. Stetson undertook to throw himself through the window, just as the train was passing through the draw, and his head was struck by the frame of the draw. He was instantly killed, and his body thrown alongside of the track.

THE YELLOW FEVER AT NEW ORLEANS.—New Orleans papers of August 7th give the following summary of the Records of the Board of Health; from which it will be seen that the whole number of interments in the city for the week ending at 6 A. M. on the 6th inst., amounts to ELEVEN HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FOUR, and of this number one thousand and four were victims of yellow fever:

	Yellow Fever.	Total.
July 31	137	157
August 1	119	142
August 2	121	135
August 3	129	146
August 4	151	166
August 5	139	150
August 6	208	238

It is proposed to bridge the Ohio near Parkersburg. Engineers have declared it practicable at four points, viz: at Parkersburg, at a cost of $1,390,496; at Blannerhassett's Island, at a cost of $944,496; at Little Hocking, at a cost of $830,760; and at Walker's brick house, at a cost of $386,496.

SUMMARY.

About 11 o'clock on Teusday night, Aug. 9, the Boston express train over the New Haven Railroad came in contact with a large stone, weighing about 3 tons, which had fallen on the track near Portchester. The locomotive was thrown off the track, and the Engineer, Theo. Humprey, was killed. A fireman was injured, but not dangerously, having only a bruise on the ancle. The engine, tender, and baggage car, were badly smashed. The tender is said to have been thrown ten feet over the engine. Some of the passenger car were slightly injured.

Augustus H. Ward, Esq., the founder of the Ward Medals at the Free Academy, inclosed a check for one hundred dollars to John Hardy, the young man who bore off one of the Gold, and six of the Ward Medals, at the late Commencement. The young man who has thus been made the recipient of this testimonial, is the son of a blacksmith, who has done everything in his power to sustain his son through his course, while the latter has shown his appreciation of his opportunities by turning them to the best advantage. At the late meeting of the Board of Education, Mr. Hardy was appointed to a tutorship in the Academy.

Mrs. Christiana Breitenstein, an elderly lady of Economy township, Pa., who for several months had been afflicted with paralysis and mortification in her left leg, on the 11th ult., found that the sound portion of the limb had effected a separation from that which was diseased, a little below the knee. The flesh is healing over the stump; and her health, which had been such as scarcely afforded her friends a hope of even a short prolongation of life, is rapidly improving, and no doubt is entertained of her complete recovery.

The Deseret (Utah) News says that the grasshoppers are performing the work of destruction at a fearful rate, in some parts of that Valley. "We are credibly informed that between the Cotton-wood Creeks, whole fields of various grains are totally extinct by their operations; that in one ten acre field, which was very promising, not a green thing is to be seen; also, similar news from the Big Field, and various parts of the country."

The American Alarm Lock is the latest novelty in the way of invention we have noticed. It is in the main a combination lock enclosing a bell, so that any fingering or picking at the key-hole, even with the proper key, causes the ringing of a sharp, shrill alarm. This bell, if preferred, may be located away from the lock—in the bed-room of a watchman, cashier, or sub-treasurer, if you please, so as to give him instant notice when any one meddles with the lock.

One of the most numerous gatherings of reporters that we have ever known outside of a large city, was at the Plymouth celebration. There were no less than fifty-three of the profession present. Over twenty quartered at the Samoset House. Of the whole corps present, about one-third were from New York. Seventeen were skillful phonographers, sixteen practiced various systems of stenography, and the balance appeared to be content with the elongated hand.

A sixth part of an ounce of chloroform for a common hive, or nearly a quarter of an ounce for a very large hive, is used in Scotland for putting bees to sleep while their honey is taken. They put the chloroform in a shallow breakfast plate, covered over with thin gauze, then put the hive over the plate, covered with cloths, and in twenty minutes the bees will be sound asleep and out of the combs on the table. This is considered better than sulphur, and the bees rather like it.

Thompson's Bank Note Reporter says the demand for Land Warrants continues in excess of the receipts, and we note quite a falling off in offerings, although the price is as high as prudence will warrant.

	Buying.	Selling.
160 acre Warrants	$184	$190
80 acre Warrants	92	95
40 acre Warrants	46	47½

A new Warrant, called Virginia Scrip, is being issued. These Warrants are applicable, the same as money, for any Government lands. They are exempt from charge for entering at the land Office, and are worth 2½ cents per acre over other Warrants. They are engraved on a large sheet of Bank Note paper—(beware of Virginia Land Warrants printed on letter sheet, they are nearly worthless.)

A case of poisoning recently occurred in Buffalo, in which Rev. J. E. Ryerson, of St. Catharines, nearly lost his life. Mr. Ryerson was given poison in a glass of lemonade, by a person connected with a Temperance Hotel. Mr. Ryerson's watch was found upon the man, but his money, to a large amount, could not be found. The man is in prison, and it is said that he was once an inmate of the State Prison.

A letter from Prince Edward's Island says that "fires have been raging in the woods, fearfully, during the past week. Some farmers have lost houses, barns, fences, and all their crops, and very few have escaped without losing some of their fencing and grain. A great number of sheep have also been lost—in fact, the extent of all the damage done cannot yet be ascertained."

St. John (N. B.) papers of August 8th, state that the potato rot has appeared there. From Prince Edward's Islands we hear of devastating fires in the woods, which destroyed houses, barns, timber, and even sheep. The Maramichi (N. B.) Gleaner says that the catch of mackerel in that vicinity, though not of an extraordinary character, will exceed that of last year.

A dispatch dated Northampton, Mass., Friday, August 12, 1853, says: To day, while the officers were in the act of destroying about 250 gallons of liquor, it was set on fire by some thoughtless boys, and four of the bystanders were badly burnt—one of whom, named Cummings, was so severely injured that his recovery is doubtful.

The East India Company has ordered a ton weight of the seed of the Doedar tree to be placed at the disposal of the British Government. Should it all vegetate, no fewer than 16,000,000 plants will have been acquired, and we may expect the hills of Great Britain to be soon clothed with the sacred cedar of the Brahmins.

Samuel Jones, Ex-Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the City of New York, died Aug. 9, at his residence on Long Island, aged 84 years. Mr. Jones was an honored branch of a family in no small degree celebrated in this neighborhood.

There was a "General Jail Delivery" at Bath, Steuben County, recently. Four prisoners escaped. The only instrument found after their escape was a case knife made into a saw, and an old razor, which was used for making the saw out of the case knife. One of the prisoners returned on Monday, having gone home and been advised to that course.

Beeves are now delivered in New York from the Northwestern prairies, within a week, by means of railroads, at an expense of $10 to $12 per head. It would take from fifty to ninety days to drive the cattle from the western parts of Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, or Arkansas.

The Managers of the Crystal Palace have decided to issue to the Stockholders one thousand shares of new stock at par, in the proportion of one new share for every four old shares. This will make the entire capital $500,000.

The Hot Weather of last week carried New York thermometers up to over 100 degrees. On Friday between twenty and thirty persons died from the excessive heat. "The oldest inhabitant" does not remember any such weather.

Oswego has voted a special tax of $5,000 to meet the extraordinary expenses occasioned by the late fire, and to improve the fire department. The vote was 94 for to 24 against.

A dispatch dated New Orleans, August 7, 1853, says the total number of deaths reported for the past week were eleven hundred and thirty—of which nine hundred and fifty were from yellow fever.

The Cincinnati Atlas suggests the purchase of Mount Vernon by Congress, for a summer Presidential mansion. This would obviate any objection to the purchase on the score of lack of constitutional power.

The Rochester people have cars fitted up as refrigerators, in which they transport fresh meats, vegetables, oysters, &c., from the New York markets to their own, in perfect order.

The Directors of the Black River and Utica Railroad have closed a contract for the entire construction of their road. The work is to be commenced immediately.

A letter dated Berlin, Marquette Co. Wis., July 30, says: The crops of every kind in this section of the State are first rate. Winter wheat is harvested and secured. The farmers will have nothing to complain of this year.

It is reported that there are seventeen persons now under sentence of death in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Georgia, and all doomed to be strangled within the next six weeks.

The ravages of the Yellow Fever at New Orleans is most terrible. On Wednesday of last week there were 164, and on Thursday 184 deaths by the pestilence.

The arrivals of gold from California in two days of last week were, on freight and in the hands of passengers, about two and half millions of dollars.

MARRIED,

In Waterford, Ct., June 12th, by Rev. J. S. Swan of New London, Mr. MARCUS L. SMITH to Miss CAROLINE E. FOX, both of Waterford.

DIED.

In Alfred, August 11th, Mrs. ELSE BEEBE, wife of Mr. Seth Beebe, aged about sixty-six years. The subject of this notice died in a most unlooked for manner. On the day previons to her death, she was walking in the highway, and met a gentleman with a team loaded with sand, which was at the moment ascending a sharp rise in the road, and after having past each other a short distance, the double whippletree broke, and the wagon commenced running backward with great force, and so sudden was its movement, that, although instant warning was given, the deceased had no time to escape. The wagon coming against her threw her down, and passing over her, bruised and mangled her in so shocking a manner that she died in a few hours. How uncertain to us is the time of our end! The deceased left a husband, several children, and a number of relatives, to mourn their loss.

At Waterford, Ct., on Third-day morning, July 26th, OLIVER R., only son of Oliver Maxson, Jr., and Ursula Maxson, in the 11th year of his age. He was a member and a constant attendant of the Sabbath School. In his death, not only his parents and relatives, but his school-mates, feel that they have sustained an irreparable loss.

"The gentle Saviour calls
Our children to his breast;
He folds them in his gracious arms,
Himself declares them blest." L. T. R.

In McGrawville, N. Y., on the 28th July, SARAH, wife of Leroy Palmer, in the 22d year of her age. She died of brain disease, induced by excessive vomiting. She has left an affectionate husband and numerous relatives to mourn her early departure, but we trust our loss is her eternal gain.

The Virginia Association.

THE next Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Virginia Association, is to be held on the Meathuse Fork, Doddridge Co., Va., commencing on the sixth day of the week before the first Sabbath in September, 1853, (second day of the month,) at 10 o'clock A. M. Brethren (especially ministers) of sister Associations, are invited to meet and spend a season with us.
J. F. RANDOLPH, Cor. Sec.

Yearly Meeting of R. I. and Connecticut Churches.

THE Yearly Meeting of the Rhode Island and Connecticut Churches will be held with the 1st Church in Hopkinton, commencing Sixth-day evening before the last Sabbath in August. Introductory sermon by Eld. E. Barnes.

P. S.—At the same place, on Fifth-day preceding the Annual Meeting, there will be preaching at 10 A. M. by Eld. Joel Greene; on Sixth-day, at same time of day, by Eld. A. B. Burdick. Other arrangements will be made in due time. It is hoped that a general attendance at these meetings will be followed by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the people.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of TITSWORTHS & DUNN, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.
WILLIAM DUNN, A. D. TITSWORTH, Jr
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, R. M. TITSWORTH.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U. S. and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

A New Volume

OF WOODWORTH'S YOUTH'S CABINET commenced with the July number, and of course now is a favorable time for new subscribers. A word to the wise is said to be sufficient, therefore the publisher begs to employ two words just to say that the Cabinet—the most popular illustrated dollar magazine in the Union—is more captivating than ever. The editor, in his Foreign Sketches, is now rambling with the reader among the wonderful ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeii. The Biography of Distinguished Americans is still continued. Try this magazine. You will find it just the thing for your family. Each number contains 48 pages. There are two volumes in a year—one commencing in July, and the other in January. A yearly volume embraces nearly 600 pages, and about 100 Illustrations.

Those who wish to subscribe, can do so at a reduced price, by taking the work in connection with other persons, and remitting the several subscriptions at the same time. Price, for a single copy, $1; 4 copies, $3; 7 copies, $5; and, in the latter case, an extra copy to the one who forms the Club. Payment invariably in advance. Bound volumes of the new series (three in number) 75 cents each, postage free.

Please to send on your orders by mail to the Publisher,

Miscellaneous.

Be Kind to the Poor.

Be kind to the poor—
Let the sunshine of love
Descend on their hearts
Like dew from above.

O! be kind to the poor—
For how do we know
But the shadows may change,
And the gaunt form of woe
Be our fellow companion
Through the balance of life,
And we made to feel
Want's keen-edged knife?

Then be kind to the poor—
For 'tis pleasant to feel,
As we lie down at night,
And dreams o'er us steal,
That it's been in our power
To lighten the heart
Of one fellow mortal
From want's cankered smart.

O! be kind to the poor—
For their hearts have been seared;
By the frowns of the world
And its chilling regard,
As, all sore and distressed,
By the wayside they stroll,
With no starlight of hope
To cheer up their soul.

Oh! ye, who have plenty
Laid up in your store,
Don't forget the quaint adage,
"Remember the poor."

Be kind to the poor—
Do you not hear the groan
Of the fatherless child,
And the widow's sad moan?

O, give to the poor—
From the plenty you have,
You surely can spare
The little they crave.

Oh! be kind to the poor—
For your Saviour was kind,
He healed up the sick,
And gave sight to the blind;
O, will you not pattern
By one full of love,
Whose heart was as humble
And meek as a dove?

How sweet to the heart
The reflection must be,
As we journey along
Over life's troubled sea,
To feel in ourselves
The spirit of love
Descend on our hearts
Like light from above.

A Dainty Dish.

Among a variety of curious insects which are common to tropical climates, the groogroo worms of the West Indies may be considered particularly interesting. The groogroo worm—so called because it is found in a species of palm vulgarly called the groogroo—is the larva of a large-sized beetle, the Prionus, which is peculiar to the warm latitude of America. With the exception of a slight similarity about the region of the head, the worm bears no resemblance to the beetle. When full grown, it is about three and a half inches in length, having the body large and turbid, and increasing in circumference from the head towards the opposite extremity. The head is of a corneous opaque substance. It has neither eyes nor the rudiments of antennæ which distinguish the beetle tribe. It is, however, provided with the mandibulate group of insects, and it is only in this feature that any connection with the beetle can be traced. The trunk is precisely that of a worm; it consits of many closely knit segments which are possessed of an extraordinary contractile power.

At the posterior extremity, there is a small horny termination, something like the hinder part of a loach. The organs are exceedingly simple, the digestive being the most developed. Albium is the substance which composes its body, and its blood is of a greenish tint. With a motion similar to that of the earthworm, it perforates with extraordinary rapidity into the substance of the tree in which it is found.

When the moon is at her full, the gatherer of worms enters a neighboring wood and selects a young palmiste tree. This is a tree of the palm order, exceedingly stately and graceful, growing sometimes to the extraordinary height of 80 feet. From the roots upward it has not a single branch or shrubby excrescence, but grows beautifully smooth and straight, tapering toward the top. At its top an abundance of the richest and most beautiful leaves spread out in graceful symmetry, and bend down on all sides, forming a figure like an umbrella; while the young leaf, still firm and compact in its folier envelop, is seen standing erect in the center of this foliage, like a lightning conductor.

When a promising palmiste is found, the gatherer makes an incision into it with a cutlass or a hatchet. This incision is generally in the figure of a half moon, with the base of the semicircle downwards, and the wound increasing in depth in that direction, so as to expose effectually the flesh of the tree. When this is done, the gatherer marks the locality and leaves the tree, which he does not revisit for a considerable time. When the moon is in her wane, he returns and examines his palmiste. If the young leaf, together with the others, begin to show a yellow tinge at its extremity, and if, on an application of his ear to the trunk, a hollow rumbling noise is heard within, he concludes that the worms have attacked the vital parts, and the tree is immediately cut down; but if these symptoms are absent, it is left standing until they appear. The gatherer, however, must now visit the tree frequently, because the transition of the insect is so rapid, that almost immediately after the appearance of the yellow tinge, the whole would disappear. When the tree is felled, a square portion of the bark is cut out longitudinally from the original incision upwards, and its fibrous texture laid open. Myriads of worms are then seen voraciously devouring their way through the substance. In capturing them, some degree of dexterity is necessary, both to protect one's self from the mandibles of the insects, which inflict a painful bite, and also to save time, by preventing them from burrowing out of sight. When the worms are taken, they are placed in a closed vessel, where they continue to retain their activity and vigor.

The number that can be procured from a single tree depends altogether upon the season in which it is wounded. If the moon is in her full, they are generally numerous and good—many thousands being found in an ordinary young tree of twenty-five feet in height.

Before the worms are cooked, they are, each in its turn, carefully picked with an orange thorn, and thrown into a vessel containing a sauce of lime-juice and salt. This is for the purpose of cleansing them from viscid fluid they may have imbibed from the palmiste. Notwithstanding this discipline, the worms retain their vitality till they are deprived of it by the culinary process. The simpler mode of dressing them is to spit a number of them together on a piece of stick or a long orange thorn, and roast them before the fire in their own fat. The general mode, however, is by frying them, with or without sauce; and when dressed in this manner, they form a most savory dish.

Groogroo worms are considered great delicacies in some parts of the West Indies, chiefly in those whose inhabitants are of Spanish or French origin. The good old planter at his table presents you with a dish of worms with as much pride as an epicure in England introduces you to cod-sounds, eels, or high venison. Nor does it appear that there is any peculiarity in the taste of those who relish the insects; because it very frequently happens, that the stranger who manifested on his arrival the greatest disgust at the idea of eating worms, becomes immediately converted into an extravagant lover of them.

It may appear strange, that, in the tropics, especially, where nature provides so abundantly for the wants of man, such creatures should be resorted to as articles of consumption; but while we are shocked at the idea of eating worms, the West Indian consumer in his turn expresses surprise that human beings can use things which resemble snakes so much as eels, and pronounces it to be the height of uncleanliness to eat frogs, as some of the continentals do. Indeed, the groogroo worm is by no means more repulsive in appearance than any of the unprepossessing creatures which are so highly prized. It would be a difficult matter to decide on the merits of the many extraordinary things which the taste of man, in its morbid cravings, has discovered and converted into luxurious use; and the philosopher finds himself at last driven to take shelter from his own unanswerable inquiries behind the concluding power of that most true, but somewhat musty proverb: "De gustibus non est disputandum."

Much Labor on Little Land.

The Farmer's Companian, in an article on small farms, marks out the following course for the farmer of small capital to pursue:—

You have 100 acres clear, 50 of which you keep as pasture and for meadow. Make up your mind to work only 25 acres; the other 25 being put down to clover and timothy, as you best can. You have manure enough in and about your farm for six acres. This year, haul that on your land, plow it, and put in corn, with a little ashes, and, if you can get it, slacked lime or plaster to every hill. Plow twice as deep as usual; and drag twice as long, with a long-toothed drag, till the land is like a garden. If you have got 35 bushels of corn to the acre before, we can warrant you now 70 or 80; for you cultivate and hoe the corn twice as much likewise. You double your crop at a very little increased cost. Having no more manure, you must depend on deeper plowing and better dragging for the other 10 acres for this year; not forgetting to sow a little more seed than usual, if it is oats or barley. In the fall, sow wheat where the corn was, with the same care; and next spring, manure the next six acres for corn. Yes, you may manure 10 or 12 acres; for you have had 25 more acres for hay, or oat straw cut green for fodder, and can keep 25 more cows through the winter; and knowing the value of the manure—that it is as important to you as the very soil itself—you will take much better care of it.

Thus, every two or three years, all your land will get a dressing of manure, and every year you will have a different crop on it. Every year it will improve, and you grow rich, with about half your work. But after a while sow a few acres of this land with clover and timothy, and break up as much of your old grass. You will get double the crop of hay on the new piece, and a good crop of grain on the old piece. In one word, of all men in the world, a small farmer should work a small piece of land; work it thoroughly well; keep all the stock he can to make manure; keep the manure dry; and he will not be a small farmer long. We have tried it and we know it.

Men of Our Time.

O. W. Holmes, the gentleman that "never dares to write as funny as he can," is forty-three. William Howitt is fifty-seven; he published verses at the age of thirteen. Humboldt is eighty-three. Leigh Hunt is sixty-eight. Fitz Green Halleck, fifty-seven. Washington Irving, son of an eminent New York merchant, is sixty-nine years of age; in his nineteenth year he began to contribute to his brother's paper, the "Morning Chronicle." Douglass Jerrold, forty-seven years of age, is the son of the manager of the Sheerness theatre; the sea was his first love, and for a short time he served as a midshipman on board of a man-of-war. G. P. R. James is about fifty years old; it was Washington Irving who first recommended him to a career of authorship. Sheridan Knowles, sixty-eight years old, is the son of a famous Irish schoolmaster, who was a cousin to Richard Brinsley Sheridan. Mr. Knowles wrote his first play in his twenty-first year; his plays are thirteen in number; he now enjoys a government pension of two hundred pounds a year. Lamartine is sixty-two; his father was a major in the French cavalry, under Louis XVI. Abbott Lawrence is in his sixtieth year. Henry W. Longfellow, forty-five years of age, is the son of Hon. Stephen Longfellow. Portland, Me., is the birthplace of the poet; he was appointed Professor at Cambridge in his twenty-eighth year. Macaulay, the son of a wealthy African merchant, is fifty-two years of age; his essay on Milton was written in his twenty-sixth year, for the Edinburgh Review. Macready is fifty-nine; his father was a theatrical manager. Herman Melville is the son of an importing merchant of this city; he is thirty-three years of age; his grandfather was one of the Boston tea-party; he began his wanderings in his eighteenth year, as a sailor before the mast; he is author of seven popular works. Metternich is seventy-nine. Ike Marvel, thirty years of age, is a native of Norwich, Conn., a graduate of Yale, and a resident of New York. J. K. Paulding, whose collective works fill seventy-five volumes, is seventy-three years of age; he is a native of Dutchess Co., in this State. Prentice is a Yankee, born at Preston, Conn., forty-eight years old. He has been editor of the Louisville Journal since 1831. Prescott, the historian, is in his fifty-sixth year. Powers, the sculptor, is fifty-seven; his parents "were plain country people, who cultivated a small farm" in Vermont. Seward is fifty years old. Talfourd, fifty-seven. Tennyson, son of a clergyman, is forty-five. Thackeray, born at Calcutta, is forty-one. Ticknor, sixty-one. H. T. Tuckerman, thirty-one. Victoria is thirty-three years of age; "she has," says our author, "a large and rapidly increasing family, which seems the distinguishing mark of the Hanoverian dynasty." [Home Journal.

Gardening.

Blackwood for February has a leading and excellent article on the subject of Gardening, from which we extract a few sentences:—

"The Poets, blessings on them! have done more to awaken a love of nature and of flowers, and to cherish a taste for floriculture, than all the professional horticulturists. We like to see a taste for simple, modest flowers. We have a dear friend who has set his affections on the cowslip. He has long borders verged with it, and sloping banks covered with it. How the pets do sport with one another! and what pretty freaks they play—of which they seem quite conscious—in timidly turning aside from your ardent gaze their bright emblems of primrose, pink and purple!

"We are continually told by certain sapient economists, that they do not care for a garden, and do not possess one, because they find it cheaper to buy their fruits and vegetables. Who doubts it? The pleasure of gardening depends not upon economical considerations. The fascination is in the very art of cultivation—in the very growing of your own fruit and flowers, and watering their opening blossoms—in nursing the sickly, and rejoicing over the strong—in culling a well-chosen boquet for the adornment of your cara sposa! Is there no pleasure in being able to send well-ripened grapes or peaches to a sick neighbor who has them not—in bestowing a cap-full of rosy-cheeked apples on rosy-cheeked boys—in inviting the children of the village to partake of your gooseberries—in sending, at the close of a severe winter, a hundred cauliflower plants to the minister of the parish? Is there no pleasure in exchanging rare flowers—in getting and giving floral gifts? Does your heart not leap up when the first snow-drop—bold chider of lingering winter, and adventurous invader of his reign—shows its welcome face on the green? Is there no transport when the seedy hollyhock bursts on your astonished vision in unexpected beauty? Thousands there are, who are doomed by dire necessity never to have a garden of their own; but those who can and ought, and yet have not, for the sake of cheapness and from motives of a mean economy, ought to be banished to some desert wilderness, where the green earth and nature's flowers may not waste their sweetness on them."

New Field for Forgery.

On the 9th ult., Gov. Seymour received from Auburn two sets of papers—one signed by Dr. Briggs, Physician of the Prison, setting forth that a young man named Francis B. Edymoin, convicted of burglary in the 2d degree, in Tioga Co., in October, 1852, and sentenced to the Auburn State Prison for five years, was consumptive, and a fit subject for executive clemency; this paper also stated that his conduct had been of the most exemplary character. The other paper, containing the same recommendation, was signed by Mr. Pomeroy, the Agent, the Warden, the keepers of the prison, and the Chaplain.

The Governor, on reading these papers, forthwith forwarded a pardon for the young man to the agent, and he was suffered to take his departure almost immediately. Subsequently, the agent, Mr. Pomeroy, being called to Albany on business, inquired of the Governor the cause for the pardon of young Edymoin. The Governor replied that he had the best of causes—papers containing the strongest recommendations, duly signed by the officers of the prison, and among them himself. Mr. Pomeroy expressed his surprise at this statement, and upon looking at the papers pronounced them forgeries—at least so far as he was concerned. On his return to the prison, he found the names of the other officers had also been forged.

The manner in which the papers were drawn, as an imitation, was good, while the penmanship, especially that purporting to have been done by Dr. Briggs, was a very exact counterfeit. Edymoin had been employed in the office of the prison, as a clerk, and was known to be very shrewd. In this capacity he had the opportunity of ascertaining the manner in which the business in which he was about to engage was done, as also to familiarize himself with the handwriting of the officers of the prison.

Edymoin has since been arrested in Albany. He is represented as a very genteel and bright-looking young man, aged about 26 years. Before his conviction in Tioga County he had served a six months term in the Erie County Penitentiary. While confined in that prison, he nearly made his escape by stealing the keys from the pocket of the keeper.

The papers which were forwarded to the Governor, are now in Auburn. They consist of letters—the first from Dr. Briggs, representing Edymoin to be lying in the Hospital, in the last stages of consumption. Another from the Chaplain, Mr. Warren, endorsing this statement, and others from the Agent, Warren, and other officers about the prison, recommending his pardon. In addition to these, were letters purporting to be written by Edymoin's relatives and friends, saying that they were ready and willing to remove him at their own expense, and urging his pardon.

Remarkable Power of Memory.

Facts compel the writer to believe, that the powers of the memory are bounded only by the extent of its cultivation. Of the extent of its natural capabilities, he has the highest ideas. Indeed, he regards its powers as almost infinite. Innumerable facts tending to establish this conclusion, he has witnessed and experienced. On requesting the South Boston omnibus drivers to do errands in Boston, he observed that they took no memoranda, yet committed no errors, though they often do a score of errands at a trip. The second time I went to the Boston Post-Office, the delivering clerk, without looking over the letters or papers, said there was none for me. I requested him to look, which he did, meanwhile remarking that it was useless, but found none; and scores of times, the moment he saw me, responded that there was something or nothing for me, without my being able to detect a single mistake. To be able thus to remember whether or not there was something for any of those thousands of citizens and strangers continually applying, requires an extraordinarily retentive memory; and yet every reader might have attained, probably can yet acquire, one quite as efficient. Mr. Worthen, baker, Manchester, N. H., serves three hundred customers, about two-thirds of whom take more or less every morning; but he sets down nothing till he returns home, after having visited one-half of them; yet he forgets not a loaf. A man in Halifax, Nova Scotia, can tell at once the name and age of every inhabitant in town, young and old. After delivering a lecture at Clinton Hall, on the improvement of the memory, one of the audience stated that an acquaintance of his, a cattle drover of New York, who could neither read nor write, after having sold out large droves to different butchers, kept their number, price, and every thing in his mind, and could go round months afterwards, even after having bought up and sold out several other droves, and settle from memory, without ever having been known to forget any thing. Those who think this too marvelous for belief, will find it abundantly confirmed by converging and collateral evidence and experience. The Gaboon merchants accomplish by memory what is still more extraordinary. The fact is remarkable in itself, and furnishes a practical proof of the correctness of this doctrine of improving memory illimitably by its exercise, that all those who can neither read nor write have astonishing memories—several hundred per cent. better than others. Of this fact, any reader can easily find illustrative examples. The reason is, that such, unable to record their business, are compelled to remember it, and thus strengthen this faculty. Indubitable and universal fact compels the belief, that the human mind is constituted and capacitated, provided the body were kept in the right state, and this faculty disciplined in the best manner, to recall every event of life.

Dwarf Fruit Trees.

Within "our day and generation," science, applied to agriculture, has found out how to dwarf certain trees, and obtain fruit from them much earlier and on smaller spaces of ground than formerly. Pears engrafted on quince, cherries on mahaleb, and apples on paradise stock, become small trees, that may occupy places in front yards and other localities on small premises, and yield fruit very soon. The fruit itself is as large as that grown on large trees. And nothing is handsomer than a shrub apple or pear bush under the windows of a house, hanging full of large and beautiful apples and pears. They need not much more room than a currant bush, and may be planted out in the garden in rows almost as near together. Ordinarily, on the old system, we had to wait many years before we could have a pear, or even an apple, from trees of common size; but now you may have fruit in a year or two after the stock is large enough to receive the scion, and the dwarf will bear thirty or forty years. Of course, they are not so long-lived as the great undwarfed trees, nor do you obtain as large a harvest from such small standards; but they bear as liberally according to their size, and the fruit may all be easily gathered by hand. Dwarf pear trees are becoming very common. Few villagers or citizens who have a door-yard or garden are now without some of them.

Skin Diseases.—For some eruptions on the face, borax is an excellent remedy. The way to use it is to dissolve an ounce of borax in a quart of water, and apply this with a fine sponge every evening before going to bed. This will smoothe the skin when the eruptions do not proceed from an insect working under the cuticle. Many persons' faces are disfigured by red eruptions caused by a small creature working under the skin. A very excellent remedy is to take the flour of sulphur and rub it on the face dry, after washing it in the morning. Rub it well with the fingers, and then wipe it off with a towel. There are many who are not a little ashamed of their face, who can be completely cured if they follow these directions.

VARIETY.

A young man was driving a horse which was in the habit of stopping at every house on the road-side. Passing a country tavern where were collected together some dozen countrymen, the beast, as usual, ran opposite the door in spite of the young man, who applied the whip with all his might to drive the horse on. The men at the porch commenced a hearty laugh, and some inquired if he would sell the horse. 'Yes,' replied the young man, 'but I cannot recommend him, as he once belonged to a butcher, and stops wherever he hears calves bleat.'

True happiness is of a retired nature, and an enemy to pomp and noise. It arises, in the first place, from the employment of one's self, and in the next, from the friendship and conversation of a few select companions. False happiness loves to be in a crowd, and to draw the eyes of the world upon her; she does not receive any satisfaction from the applause which she gives herself, but from the admiration which she raises in others.

A laughable story of some carrier pigeons is told in an Antwerp newspaper. The editor of a celebrated journal published in that city, sent a reporter to Brussels for the King's speech, and with him a couple of carrier pigeons, to take back the document. At Brussels he gave the pigeons in charge of a waiter, and called for breakfast. He was kept waiting for some time, but a very delicate fricasee atoned for the delay. After breakfast he paid his bill, and called for his carrier pigeons. "Pigeons!" exclaimed the waiter, "why, you have eaten them!"

We seldom meet a happier epigram than that by Horace Smith, one of the authors of Rejected Addresses, on Maria Edgeworth:—

"We every-day bards may 'anonymous' sign—
That refuge, Miss Edgeworth, can never be thine;
Thy writings, where satire and moral unite,
Must bring forth the name of their author to light.
Good and bad join in telling the source of their birth;
The bad own their Edge, and the good own their Worth."

A man famous for hunting up enigmas philosophized thus:—What strange creatures girls are. Offer one of them good wages to work for you, and ten chances to one if the mother can spare any of her girls—but just propose matrimony, and see if they don't jump at the chance of working a lifetime for their victuals and clothes. A queer way of estimating things.

One cannot help asking why, among the thousand plans devised for rescuing poor Avery at Niagara Falls, some one did not think to throw a rope across the stream from the tree tops on either side, let down a basket, and swing him clear from the water. It could easily have been done, and with the suspension bridge in sight of the crowd, it seems strange that it was not thought of.

Union Academy.

C. ROLLIN BURDICK, A. B., Graduate of Rochester University, Principal.
Mrs. H. A. BURDICK, Preceptress.

This institution, located at Shiloh, Cumberland Co., N. J., three and a half miles from Bridgeton, the county seat, and thirty-eight miles south from Philadelphia, will open its first term for the year 1853-4, on Wednesday, Aug. 23, continuing 14 weeks.

The officers, feeling grateful for past favors, and confident of giving satisfaction, solicit a large attendance for the coming year. The teachers flatter themselves that they can give satisfactory instruction in all the branches usually taught in Academies. Young gentlemen and ladies preparing for College, can here fit themselves for an advanced standing, and thus save considerable expense. A competent Pianist will be secured.

Good Board can be had at the Boarding Hall, or in private families, on reasonable terms.

Terms.—Tuition, settled in advance, from $3 50 to $5 00. Incidentals, 25 cents. Piano music, $10 00. Drawing, crayoning, landscape painting, and painting in water colors, $2 00 each.

Other competent Teachers will be employed to assist in the various departments, as occasion may require.

Calendar.

The ensuing academic year is divided as follows:—

First Term commences August 31, 1853; closes Dec. 6, 1853.

Second Term commences Dec. 8, 1853; closes March 21, 1854.

Third Term commences March 23, 1854; closes June 27, 1854.

Information.

The Trustees deem it justice to say, that, having adopted a radical change of policy, by which they relieve the Faculty from all pecuniary responsibility, they design to place the School upon a firm and permanent basis, and give it a character of respectability among the first grade of Academies in our country. Grateful for past favors, they are determined to extend their sphere of usefulness, and thus command a greater degree of respect, and a still more liberal patronage from the public.

Discipline.

It is the policy of our Board to teach young men and young women to govern themselves; while at the same time it is expected that our Faculty will aim, in the most prudent and efficient manner possible, to secure that systematic order in all their exercises, which shall prepare students for the responsible duties of active life. While we cultivate the intellect, it shall be our aim also to develop those nobler faculties of the soul, which shall prepare the young to become useful and influential members of society.

This Seminary is confidently commended to the public as a first-class Institution, supplied in an eminent degree with all the facilities of education usually found in the Colleges and Universities of this country. It is provided with ten departments of Instruction, having an able and experienced Instructor at the head of each, thus giving such a division of labor as can alone secure the highest ability in conducting each department. Students can here complete an entire course of collegiate education, or be prepared for usefulness in mechanical, agricultural, or commercial pursuits, or for entering immediately upon professional studies. The Teachers' Department supplies the public with at least one hundred and fifty experienced teachers of common schools annually, and the Department of Elementary and Agricultural Chemistry affords the young farmer all the facilities desirable in the best agricultural schools. Having recently completed another spacious and elegant edifice for a chapel and recitation rooms, and being now engaged in extensive enlargements and alterations for the accommodation of a much larger number of students than hitherto, the Trustees express their intention that the high character which this Institution has acquired, for thorough instruction, for strict moral and social training, and the best of educational advantages at a very moderate expense, shall be fully sustained. The location, on the N. Y. and Erie Railroad, two miles from the Alfred depot, is romantic, retired, and one of the healthiest in the world. Circulars, &c., gratuitous, on application to Prof. W. C. Kenyon, or to Rev. N. V. Hull, Pres. of Trustees, Alfred Center, Allegany Co., N. Y.

AGITATION ESSENTIAL TO REFORM.

The power of truth is irresistible. Truth does not, however, make its impression upon the public mind with the momentum of an Alpine avalanche, but rather moves like the swelling tide of the ocean, gradually yet effectually accomplishing its purpose, and by its inherent power establishing its sovereign supremacy.

Reform is the development and application of truth to the progress of human society. Through the potency of reform, the golden sunshine of learning has chased the gloom of ignorance and superstition away back into the shades of oblivion. Reform has established freedom and equal rights upon the ruins of despotism, and is even now kindling in the Old World the glowing fires of liberty beneath the very altars of tyranny. It has supplanted monarchies by the introduction of democracies, and, as a crowning triumph, has secured a wide dissemination of Christianity. In a word, reform has unrobed the world of barbarism's dark enshrouding mantle, and having borne it safely through the refining fires of moral, social, and political revolution, to day it appears clad in the golden garb of civilization—the brilliant ensign of a glorious destiny.

But this reformation has not been achieved in a moment. It has been the labor of ages. This significant fact teaches us, that no great moral truths, embodied in reform, with all their resulting consequences, are ever universally adopted at the moment of their introduction. The mind does not generally embrace truth on its first presentation. The beautiful imagery of fine wrought conceptions, drawn in its support, may entrance the soul; and its power, pictured in strains of enchanting eloquence, may touch the sympathies; but its continued contact with the mind will alone convince the judgment. Though its devotees, assisted by the fervor of enthusiasm, may secure its momentary reception, by the exhibition of its inherent excellencies, in the ideal representations of its realities, it will never be adopted as a standard truth, until its application has become seen, and its influence on the progress of society becomes manifest.

Hence there must be some principle, by which these reforms are sustained, and carried from their incipient stages through a long series of progressive gradations, in which opponent views must be met and vanquished—skepticism supplanted by clear and philosophic evidence—and prejudice, its chief antagonist, subdued—until it bear universal sway. This principle, which is the prime operating agent in all reform, and in which we recognize the summary of its philosophy, is agitation. Just as the rumbling cataract of Niagara, thundering in its solitude, gradually wears its base of solid adamant away, as Erie's waters dash down their waves over its deepening steep, so truth, by its continued agitation in the mind, gradually imprints its impress there.

Truth gains its ascendancy by the continued action of countless minute impressions. This action is fitly illustrated by the sculptor, who commences carving the crude marble with a single stroke of the chisel. That single touch does not complete the statue; but with myriad successive ones, by slow degrees, he brings out the outlines of his ideal image, until with a master hand he produces a perfect imitation of nature's symmetry.

It is a true principle of philosophy, that the action of any property is secured only by the action of its elements; hence, as one of the component parts of reform consists in the impression of truth, or in summary agitation, so it progresses and triumphs only through the agency of this motive cause. The most triumphal proof of this position is recorded in the fact that the last century has witnessed the introduction of nearly all the reforms which have been accomplished through human agency since the day when Greece was the world's sole repository of learning, and Rome her only laboratory of science and art, simply because within this intervening period the fires of truth were never kindled, and the principles of truth never agitated. Hence ages rolled down the stream of time, enveloped in the gloom of moral, social, and political night. But when the rays of truth gleamed along that darkened horizon, and roused her devotees, the world woke from that sleep of error, just as the door-mouse of the ivied tower, having slept the winter away, is energized by the warm sunshine of spring, and its dormant body invigorated with life anew. Why, we might as soon expect oceans of liquid lava to burst from earth's subterranean vaults, without her internal fires ever having been kindled, as to look for a reform accomplished without the operation of its prime, constituent element, agitation. Agitation is to reform just what flame is to the conflagration; and the hero in the strife, mantled with the panoply of right, may ever rest sure of final victory, as long as he shall keep those flames brightly glowing.

And yet the world, even at the present day, as though insensible of this, the source from whence has sprung this age of light—this era of knowledge and equal rights—denounce agitation, and denominate the agitator a fanatic, even while they unconsciously reap the reward of his labors. They strive to hush the still small voice of truth, unfolded in reform, and cry, "Its agitation will ruin the cause." Did Wilberforce ruin the cause which he espoused? Ere ye respond, think how he wiped out the stain of slavery from England's civil code. Did Luther overthrow the Reformation by agitation? Let the millions who have enjoyed the religious freedom which he secured, respond. Did our forefathers defeat the struggle for independence by agitation? Aye, respond ye, as ye rejoice in the full fruition of the liberty which their immolation on the altar of freedom procured. Oh, the glorious heritage of an agitator's fame! How noble the appellation to him who thus labors for the good of humanity—despised while he lives—his memory revered when he dies.

But the contest is not yet ended. Present reforms are to be completed, and new emanations of truth will introduce others. Even now, inspired by the teachings of the past, I seem to see, with a prophetic eye, a generation which shall rise up in the decaying footprints of their ancestors, among whom oppression shall be unknown, and from whose history the stain of human servitude shall have long since been effaced. Away in the dim future, I behold, too, no curse of inebriety existing. I view the practical substituted for the ideal, and learning united with labor; and I see a nation who seem to regard commerce only as an opening avenue to the introduction of christianity, and whose highest and noblest destiny is to "fear God and work righteousness."

Oh, ye revered agitators of the past—ye parent shades of reform—as ye survey with earnest solicitude the triumphant progress of those truths, whose incipient fires ye yourselves have enkindled, come, come stooping from your celestial habitations, and animate those who, through the will of Heaven, are to be the agents in establishing this millennium of truth, and inspire them with a holy zeal for the noble consecration. IMMORTALITY—SPIRIT-RAPPING, &C.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

While looking over your paper of July 21st, I noticed a communication from the pen of R. F. Cottrell, with the above caption. Mr. C. commences by asking you a few questions about "spirit-rappings," "the soul's immortality," and the "millennium;" and then, to convince you how firmly he stands opposed to spirit manifestations, he adds, "If you ask me how I know that the spirit-rappers are liars, I answer, The Bible says, 'the dead know not any thing.'" Now, ought not Mr. C. to give better testimony that all spirit-rappers are liars than the passage referred to? The passage quoted by no means stands as a proof that all spirit-rappers are liars, for spirit-rappers admit the truth that "the dead know not any thing." Not only do they not know any thing in relation to things that "pertain to this life," or "things that are done under the sun;" but it is evident that they "know not any thing"—neither "under the sun" nor over the sun; for the passage emphatically says, "The dead know not any thing." And why? Simply because they are dead. The spirit rappers do not claim that the body, after death, knows any thing; for the Bible plainly teaches the doctrine that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10. This I conceive to be the true and the only meaning of the passage that Mr. C. quotes to prove that spirit-rappers are liars.

Now, if Mr. C. intends to throw out the doctrine that the soul, or the spirit of man, goes down to death, or lies in the grave, and "knows not any thing," he should disclose it plainly. The only inference that I can draw from his application of the text is, that he embraces the doctrine, either of the annihilation of the soul, or that it goes down to death with the body, and "knows not any thing," which, it seems to me, is a much more dangerous doctrine to embrace than that spirit-rappers may sometimes tell the truth.

Now, if you ask me how I know that the spirits of men know some things after death, I answer, The Bible says, "And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom; and he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me," &c. Luke 16: 23—24. Mr. C. will observe, from this case, that men after death do know something, for this man knew that he was in hell, and that he was tormented; he also knew how to cry for mercy; he knew that he wanted water to cool his tongue; and if we look a little further into the conversation between the rich man and Abraham, we shall find that others beside the rich man knew something; for Abraham reasons the case, and shows him how unreasonable his petition is. In the 27th and 28th verses, the rich man says, "I pray thee, therefore, that thou wouldst send him (Lazarus) to my father's house, (for I have five brethren,) that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment." Now he knew that his father had a house, and the five brethren spoken of no doubt were still in this life, and "under the sun," for, it seems, that their future destiny was not yet sealed, else he would not have had fears that they would come to that "place of torment." Again, Abraham's answer is positive proof, I think, that they were still in this life, for he says, (verse 29,) "They have Moses and the prophets." And now hear a thing that "knows not any thing," (if Mr. C. is correct,) reason a question concerning things "under the sun." "And he said, Nay, father Abraham; but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent. And Abraham said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." If more was necessary to prove the doctrine I would advocate on these points, the Scriptures are full, and "so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein." D. F. RANDOLPH.

AMOS LAWRENCE ON TOBACCO.

Rev. George Trask, a clergyman of Massachusetts, has been for some years carrying on a warfare against Tobacco, in all its forms. Hon. Amos Lawrence, lately deceased, was one of the most wealthy merchants of Boston. His benevolence was almost without bounds. He bestowed immense sums in relieving the distressed, aiding the unfortunate, and promoting the public welfare—thus setting a noble example for the wealthy to imitate. About a year ago, he wrote the following letter to Mr. Trask, whom he denominates "Uncle Toby."

VENERABLE UNCLE TOBY,—When I was a school-boy, like other little fellows, I was anxious to be 'manly' as the larger boys who 'chewed;' and by the advice of one took a 'quid,' and kept it in until I was very sick, but did not tell my parents what the matter was; and from that time to this (fifty-five years or more) I have never chewed, smoked, or snuffed! But I served customers as a country store-boy more than six years, and so much an epicure of tobacco in all its forms did I become, that I could not have made myself a better judge if I had made the study of it a profession; in short, I enjoy the smell of it to this day as much as any man can its use; and to this abstinence from its use, and of rum, 'under God,' I owe my present position in society. So much for my Anti-Tobacco habits. Further, I have always given a preference, for more than forty years, to those persons I have employed that I knew avoided Rum and Tobacco, and my experience confirms me in the opinion, that this has been true wisdom; a preference is a profit, and the mass of those enjoying this preference will succeed in their pursuit. In the twenty-five years of my active oversight of business, no one of the pupils in our mercantile business failed; while within a less period, thirty-eight out of forty of the young men in a large mercantile concern within 'gun shot' failed. Among those who served in A. & A. Lawrence's store, are now many gray-headed and rich old men, among the most respectable merchants in this country, and who are truly 'merchant princes,' and are honored as such; therefore, I may well advise all lads to keep clear of Rum and Tobacco slavery; thus ensuring for themselves a preference, all other things being equal.

God speed you in your good work, venerable and truthful Uncle Toby. So prays

AMOS LAWRENCE.

THE HAPPY MAN.

The Commonwealth makes the following extract from a recent sermon by Rev. Theodore Parker, of Boston. The original of the picture is understood to be a highly esteemed resident of Newton:—

"The happiest man I have ever known is one far enough from being rich in money, and who will never be very much nearer to it. His calling fits him, and he likes it, rejoices in its process as much as in its result. He has an active mind, well filled. He reads and he thinks. He tends his garden before sunrise every morning—then rides sundry miles by the rail—does his ten hours' work in the town—whence he returns happy and cheerful. With his own smile he catches the earliest smile of the morning, plucks the first rose of his garden, and goes to his work with the little flower in his hand, and a great one blossoming out of his heart. He runs over with charity, as a cloud with rain; and it is with him as with the cloud—what coming from the cloud is rain to the meadows, is a rainbow of glories to the cloud that pours it out. The happiness of the affections fills up the good man, and he runs over with friendship and love—connubial, parental, filial, friendly, too, and philanthropic besides. His life is a perpetual 'trap to catch a sunbeam'—and it always 'springs' and takes it in. I know no man who gets more out of life; and the secret of it is, that he does his duty to himself, to his brother, and to his God. I know rich men, and learned men—men of great social position; and if there is genius in America, I know that; but a happier man I have never known!"

A POINTED SERMON.

Many a discourse of an hour's length is not half as impressive as the following from an eccentric English divine:—

"Be sober, grave, temperate."—Titus ii. 9.

I. There are three companions with whom you should always keep on good terms:

1. Your wife.
2. Your stomach.
3. Your conscience.

II. If you wish to enjoy peace, long life, and happiness, preserve them by temperance. Intemperance produces:

1. Domestic misery.
2. Premature death.
3. Infidelity.

To make these points clear, I refer you:

1. To the Newgate Calendar.
2. To the hospitals, lunatic asylums, and workhouses.
3. To the past experience of what you have seen, read and suffered, in mind, body and estate.

Reader, decide! which will you choose? Temperance, with happiness and long life; or Intemperance, with misery and premature death? [Harper's Magazine.

THE IVY IN THE DUNGEON.

BY CHARLES MACKAY.

The ivy in a dungeon grew,
Unfed by rain, uncheered by dew;
Its pallid leaflets only drank
Cave-moistures foul, and odors dank.

But through the dungeon grating high
There fell a sunbeam from the sky;
It slept upon the grateful floor
In silent gladness evermore.

The ivy felt a tremor shoot
Through all its fibers to the root;
It felt the light, it saw the ray,
It strove to blossom into day.

It grew, it crept, it pushed, it clomb—
Long had the darkness been its home;
But well it knew, though veiled in night,
The goodness and the joy of light.

Its clinging roots grew deep and strong,
Its stem expanded firm and long,
And in the currents of the air
Its tender branches flourished fair.

It reached the beam—it thrilled, it curled;
It blessed the warmth that cheers the world;
It rose toward the dungeon-bars;
It looked upon the sun and stars.

It felt the life of bursting spring;
It heard the happy skylark sing;
It caught the breath of morns and eves,
And wooed the swallow to its leaves.

By rains and dews and sunshine fed,
Over the outer walls it spread;
And in the day-beam waving free,
It grew into a steadfast tree.

Upon that solitary place
Its verdure threw adorning grace;
The mating birds became its guests,
And sang its praises from their nests.

Would'st know the moral of the rhyme?
Behold the heavenly light! and climb;
To every dungeon comes a ray
Of God's interminable day.

TROUTING.

BY HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Where shall we go? Here is the More brook, the upper part running through bushy and wet meadows, but the lower part flowing transparently over the gravel, through the grass and pasture grounds near the edge of the village, where it curves and winds and ties itself into bow knots. It is a charming brook to catch trout, when you can catch them, but they are mostly caught.

Well, there is the Candy brook. We will look at that. A man might walk through the meadows and not suspect its existence. The grass meets over the top of its upper section and quite hides it; and below, through that iron-tinctured marsh land, it expands only a little, growing open-hearted by degrees, across a narrow field; and then it runs for the thickets—and he that takes fish among those alders will certainly earn them. Yet, for its length, it is not a bad brook. The trout are not numerous, nor large, nor especially fine; but every one you catch renews your surprise that you should catch any in such a ribbon of a brook. Still farther north is another stream, something larger, and much better or worse, according to your luck. It is easy of access, and quite unpretending. There is a bit of a pond some 20 feet in diameter, from which it flows, and in that there are five or six half-pound trout, who seem to have retired from active life and given themselves to meditation in this liquid convent. They were very tempting, but quite untemptable. Standing afar off we selected an irresistible fly, and with long line we sent it pat into the very place. It fell like a snow-flake. No trout should have hesitated a moment. The morsel was delicious. The nimblest of them should have flashed through the water, broke the surface, and with a graceful but decisive curve plunged downward, carrying the insect with him. Then we should in our turn very cheerfully lend him a hand, relieve him of his prey, and, admiring his beauty but pitying his untimely fate, buried him in the basket. But he wished no translation. We cast our fly again and again; we drew it hither and thither; we made it skip and wriggle; we let it fall splash, like a surprised miller; and our audience calmly beheld our feats.

Next we tried ground bait, and sent our vermicular hook down to their very sides. With judicious gravity they parted, and slowly sailed toward the root of an old tree on the side of the pool. Again changing place, we will make an ambassador of a grasshopper. Laying down our rod, we prepare to catch the grasshopper; that is in itself no slight feat. The first step you take at least forty bolt out, and tumble headlong into the grass; some cling to the stumps, some are creeping under the leaves, and not one seems to be in reach. You step again; another flight takes place, and you eye them with a fierce penetration, as if you could catch some one with your eye. You cannot, though. You brush the grass with your foot again. Another hundred snap out, and tumble about in every direction. At length you see a very nice young fellow climbing a steeple stem. You take good aim and grab at him. You catch the spire, but he has jumped a safe rod. Yonder is another, creeping among some delicate ferns. With broad palm you clutch him and all the neighboring herbage too. Stealthily opening your little finger, you see his leg; the next finger reveals more of him; and opening the next you are just beginning to take him out with the other hand, when out he bounds and leaves you to renew your entomological pursuits. Twice you snatch handfulls of grass, and cautiously open your palm to find that you have only grass. It is quite vexatious. There are thousands of them here and there, climbing and wriggling on that blade, leaping off from that stalk, twisting and kicking on that vertical spider's web, jumping and bouncing about under your very nose, hitting you in your face, creeping on your shoes, and yet not one do you get. If any tender-hearted person ever wondered how a humane man could bring himself to such cruelty as to impale an insect, let him hunt for a grasshopper in a hot day among tall grass, and when at length he secures one, the affixing him upon a hook will be done without a single scruple, as a mere matter of penal justice, and with judicial solemnity.

Now, then, the trout are yonder. We swing our line to the air, and give it a gentle cast toward the desired spot, and a puff of south wind dexterously lodges it in the branch of the tree. You plainly see it strike, and whirl over and over, so that no gentle pull loosens it; you draw it a jerk up and a pull down, you give it a series of nimble twitches; you coax it in this way and solicit it in that way in vain. Then you stop and look a moment, first at the trout and then at your line. Was there ever any thing so vexatious? Would it be wrong to get angry? In fact you feel very much like it. The very things you wanted to catch, the grasshopper and the trout, you could not; but a tree, that you did not want, you have caught fast at the first throw. You fear that the trout will be scared. You cautiously draw nigh and peep down. Yes, there they are looking at you, and laughing as sure as trout ever laughed. They understand the whole thing. With a very decisive jerk you snap your line, regain the remnant of it, and sit down to repair it, to put on another hook, catch another grasshopper, and move on down stream to catch a trout.

Meantime the sun is wheeling behind the mountains, for you are just at the foot of the eastern ridge of Mount Washington, (not of the White Mountains, but in Massachusetts and Connecticut.) Already its broad shade begins to fall down upon the plain. The side of the mountain is solemn and sad. Its ridge stands sharp against a fire-bright horizon. Here and there a tree has escaped the axe of the charcoalers, and shaggerly marks the sky. Here and there through the heavens are slowly sailing continents of magnificent fleece mountains—Alps and Andes of vapor. They, too, have their broad shadows. One you see cast upon yonder hill far to the east, while the base is radiant with the sun. Another cloud-shadow is moving with stately grandeur along the valley of the Housatonic, and if you rise to a little eminence you may see the brilliant landscape growing dull in its sudden obscuration on its forward line, and growing as suddenly bright upon its rear trace. How majestically that shadow travels up those steep and precipitous mountain sides; how it swoops down the gorge and valley; how it moves along the plain.

But now the mountain shadow is creeping down into the meadow. It has crossed the road where your horse stands hitched to the paling of a deserted little house. You forget your errand. You select a dry tufty knoll, and lying down you gaze up into the sky. Oh! those depths. Something within you reaches out and yearns; you have a vague sense of infinity—of vastness—of the littleness of human life, and the sweetness and grandeur of divine life and of eternity. You people that vast ether. You stretch away through it and find that celestial city beyond, and therein dwell, oh! how many that are yours! Tears come unbidden. You begin to long for release. You pray. Was there ever a better closet? Under the shadow of the mountain, the heavens full of cloudy cohorts, of armies of horsemen and chariots, your soul loosened from the narrow judgments of human life, and touched with a full sense of immortality and the liberty of a spiritual state. An hour goes past. How full has it been of feelings struggling to be thoughts, and of thoughts deliquescing into feeling. Twilight is coming. You have miles to ride home. Not a trout in your basket! Never mind, you have fished in the heavens, and taken great store of prey. Let them laugh at your empty basket. Take their raillery good naturedly; you have certainly had good luck.

But we have not yet gone to the brook for which we started. That must be for another tramp. Perhaps one's experience of "fancy tackle" and of fly-fishing might not be without some profit in moral analogies; perhaps a mountain stream and good luck in real trout may afford some easy side-thoughts not altogether unprofitable for a summer vacation. At any rate it will make it plain that often the best part of trout fishing is not the fishing. [Independent.

COLLEGES AND SEMINARIES.

Rev. Mr. Tarbox, at a religious meeting in Boston, gave the following statistics relative to the present state of our Colleges and Theological Seminaries:—

There are, said he, 120 Colleges and other Literary Institutions in the country, having upwards of 10,000 students, and, if we include those in a preparatory course, intending to pursue a collegiate course, the number swells to 20,000.

In New England there are 13 Colleges; 8 of these are Congregational, 3 Baptist, 1 Episcopalian, and 1 Methodist.

At the Bowdoin College there are at present 152 students, 37 of whom are studying for the ministry.

At the Waterville College there are 86 students, 46 of whom are professors of religion, and 18 preparing for the ministry.

At the University of Vermont there are 123 students, 25 of whom have the ministry in view.

At the Williams College there are 237 students, 71 of whom are preparing to enter the ministry.

At Amherst College there are 187 students, 77 of whom are upon a theological course of study.

At Harvard there are 319 students. The number preparing for the ministry had not been returned, but it was fair to presume that the proportion was fully equal to that of other Colleges.

At Yale, 446 students, 70 studying for the ministry.

At the Wesleyan University, 103 students, of whom 35 have the ministry in view.

There are in all our New England Colleges, 2,163 students, of whom, as far as reported, 358 are studying theology; the actual number is probably much greater. About one-third are professors of religion; of these, about one-half are preparing for the ministry, which is considerably less than has been the case in former years; many students enter the ministry some time after leaving College, so that somewhat over one-sixth of the graduates become ministers of the gospel. About 65 converts are reported since the last anniversary; in the Western Colleges, out of New England, the number is somewhat over 300.

The state of things among us is entirely different from that in the largest part of Europe. Our Colleges are more like schools of piety, and their tendency is more in support of the Church than the Literary Institutions of Europe. There is something in the noble dignity of purpose, of useful aim, in the College course in this country, which contrasts strongly with the frivolous and petty ambition for superiority, and for refinement of learning, in the ancient Institutions of the Old World.

There were in Maine, in 1851, 225 churches and 166 ministers; in 1852, there were 227 churches and 155 ministers.

In New Hampshire there were, in 1851, 178 churches and 165 ministers; in 1852, 184 churches and and 152 ministers.

In Vermont, in 1851, 196 churches and 164 ministers; in 1852, 199 churches and 156 ministers.

In Massachusetts, in 1851, 467 churches and 422 ministers; in 1852, 461 churches and 406 ministers—a deficiency in the reports.

In Connecticut, in 1851, 267 churches and 220 ministers; in 1852, 273 churches and 232 ministers.

In Rhode Island, in 1851, 24 churches and 22 ministers; in 1852, 25 churches and 20 ministers.

THE RIGHT KIND OF PREACHING.

It was a beautiful criticism made by Longinus upon the effect of the speaking of Cicero and Demosthenes: He says, the people would go from one of Cicero's orations, exclaiming, "What a beautiful speaker, what a rich, fine voice! what an eloquent man Cicero is!" They talked of Cicero; but when they left Demosthenes, they said: "Let us fight Phillip!" Losing sight of the speaker, they were all absorbed in the subject; they thought not of Demosthenes, but of their country. So, my brethren, let us endeavor to send away from our ministrations the Christian, with his mouth full of the praises—not of "our preacher," but of God; and the sinner—not descanting upon the beautiful figures and well-turned periods of the discourse, but inquiring, with the brokenness of a penitent heart, "What shall I do to be saved?" So shall we be blessed in our work; and when called to leave the watch-towers of our spiritual Jerusalem—through the vast serene, like the deep melody of an angel song, Heaven's approving voice shall be heard,

"Servant of God, well done!
Thy glorious warfare's past;
The battle's fought, the victory's won,
And thou art crowned at last."

[Dr. Clark's Sermon.

THE EXTEMPORE SERMON.

One of the most eminent preachers of the present day related to me, some time since, a very interesting fact.

He had prepared with much more than usual care a Sunday evening sermon, which he was on his way to deliver to a very crowded audience in his own church, when his attention was arrested by half a leaf of a religious tract or book, which he stooped down and picked up. What it was, he never could learn, but a passage of Scripture, and an incidental remark which followed it, took a firm grasp of his mind, and suggested a long train of striking and original thoughts, which so fully occupied his heart, and excited such strong feelings, that he found it absolutely impossible to return to the subject which filled the manuscript in his pocket.

As he passed along, he offered an ejaculatory prayer for Divine guidance, and entered his pulpit fully satisfied that it was his duty to extemporize a sermon. He did so, specially directing the attention of the congregation to a train of instructions fitted to a semi-skeptical mind which he thought might possibly be appropriate to some of his hearers, and closed with a most solemn appeal to such persons on the vast importance of examining truth in its own spirit, and of becoming immediately decided for God.

As he left his pulpit, some of his senior brethren said to him, "Most assuredly, sir, this was a message from God." "I hope it may prove so," was his reply; "indeed, I believe that it will, though I had no idea of either text or sermon when I left my own house," and related to them the facts we have stated.

A few weeks passed on, when a young lawyer called upon him, saying, that he hoped the freedom taken by an entire stranger would be pardoned, but that a few weeks ago, he had strolled idly into his church, when, by the blessing of God, he had been relieved from a struggle of a skeptical character, which had long kept him in a state of indecision, but this sermon had entirely revolutionized his heart and life, and that even before he had united with a church, he had arranged to renounce the bar and prepare for the pulpit. That young man has been for nearly twenty years past a most eloquent and successful minister of Jesus Christ. Did not the finger of God point out the duty of preaching at least that one sermon extempore? [Christian Watchman and Reflector.

WE SHALL HAVE A REPORTER THERE.

Thus remarked a young friend thoughtlessly, as he was about to leave home to attend a social ball, given in a country village. My heart responded with a deep and lively interest to his assertion, as I thought of the immortal souls who would gather there, thus to employ the fleeting moments in mercy allotted them to prepare for eternity. A reporter was there A report was written, which must finally be made.

A report of what? Of every thought, word, and deed. Of violated vows to live for Christ, and not for the world. Of paternal vows solemnly made, and now forgotten, as parents, with their children, measure of time, precious time, to the "sound of the viol."

Where is the report written? On memory: to be traced by conscience, as it shall wake from its slumbers, and recall wasted opportunities, abused mercies, slighted admonitions, loud warnings, when death is at the door.

Where will the report be read? At the bar of God. [Am. Mess.

CHINA.

The subjoined letter from Mr. Carpenter to the Missionary Board, will be read with much interest. It gives the "latest intelligence."

The reported Christianity of the leaders of the Rebellion receives credit, to some extent, with our missionaries, although Bro. C. is of opinion that much fanaticism adheres to their movements. But who could reasonably expect it to be otherwise? Whence could the Revolutionists have derived the instruction, that would render them intelligent Christians? Even under the best of tutorage, converts just emerging from the depths of idolatry do but "see men as trees walking;" and it ought not to be supposed, that those whose notions of Christianity have been so crudely formed as those of the Revolutionists have doubtless been, would be any thing but disciples of the roughest character.

But whether the Revolutionists deserve to be called Christians, or not, we think that their success is more to be desired than deprecated. It is not at all probable, that the overthrow of the present Tartar dynasty would be followed by any form of government worse for the Chinese, or more unfavorable to the introduction of the Gospel into the heart of the empire. The present state of things is almost as bad as it can be.

It was rumored, some time since, that the Russian Autocrat was intending to offer his services, to assist the Chinese Emperor in putting down the rebels. The rumor may have had no real foundation, notwithstanding the Czar is fond of interfering in the affairs of other nations. But whether it had or not, the attention of the Czar is now likely to be taken up a little nearer home, and we may hope that the Celestials will be allowed to manage their own affairs in their own way.

In the mean time, it is well for Christians, and particularly for the people of our own denomination, to inquire what their duty is in view of the present crisis. We thank God that we have even two missionaries, and their wives, on the ground, to take advantage of such openings as may be afforded them. Why was it, that we were moved to send them there some six years ago, so that by the time of the revolution they might be qualified to act the part to which they would be called? Was there no Providence in this? And why have their lives been so mercifully preserved, and their health maintained, amid all the vicissitudes to which they have been exposed? Other missionaries have fallen around them; some victims to the climate, some drowned, and many compelled to abandon the field and return home. Yet upon ours no serious sickness has fallen, no important interruption to their labors has occurred, and they are still where they first located themselves, ready to suffer for the truth's sake. Surely, we have much reason to bless God for his goodness to them, and to us, and to ask whether there is not, in all this, something which looks like a call upon us as a people to go up and possess that land. T. B. B.

SHANGHAE, June 1, 1853.

* * * On the 29th of April last, I dispatched a letter of two sheets, by overland, containing extracts from my journal from day to day since my previous date. But the sad news came yesterday, that the steamer Larriston, which took that mail, was lost on its way to Hong Kong; and not only the mail, but every thing on board, and about thirty lives, were lost.

About the middle of last month Bro. Wardner sent a letter by overland; and I put in a very hasty note, in which I said we should try to get to Nankin as soon as possible. We have gone so far as to make arrangements for a trip to Chung Kaung; but, in the evening before the boat was to start, the Mandarin forbid it to proceed. We were to have had a free passage. The only safe way of getting there, at present, is to go in a steam ship-of-war.

As my letter of April 29th is lost, I must repeat a sketch of what I then wrote. But it can be nothing more than a sketch, for it is now about 11 o'clock, A. M., and this must be off at 3½ P. M.

Since February 16, the date of my letter sent by the ship Mandarin, I have tried to preach about fifty times. About half of the time it has been in the chapel, to congregations which would average about twenty, and half of the time in the great Tea Garden connected with the temple of the god of the city. Here my listeners have averaged about one hundred. It is now rather too warm to occupy that place frequently. If I had not met with some encouragement, I should not have pursued this course to the same extent. But although I have been cheered on by the attention given by the crowd, yet I have not often recognized the same person twice, especially in the Tea Gardens.

If, in my haste, I should recapitulate some things contained in Bro. Wardner's letter of two weeks ago, you will know how to excuse the matter. The month of April was pretty full of excitement to us all, both natives and foreigners, and May has in some respects been equally so. In the former part of April there was so much apprehension of the approach of the Revolutionists, that the native population of Shanghae moved the greater part of their property out of the city; and many of the women and children, as well as old men, retired to country places. The officers of the foreign ships of war, together with the civil authorities, determined within what limits they would prepare to afford protection, and those without those limits (principally missionary families) were invited to move in, and volunteers were called for. A portion of the merchants, and also of the missionaries, enrolled themselves. It became a personal and practical question with each of us to settle, whether, in case of an attack from the revolutionary army upon the foreign community, we would take up arms in self-defense. I made up my mind to trust in God, and rely upon other weapons than powder and lead, or steel.

But the excitement produced by this question had scarcely died away, before we had another from a different source. On the evening of the 14th of April, at about 11 o'clock, we were aroused from our slumbers by the reeling to and fro of the house, another fearful work of God. Springing upon my feet, I opened a window, and, in the darkness of the night, the combined sound of millions of tiles, as they were grating against each other from a thousand roofs, can be better imagined than described. The first shock was succeeded by four more that night, and two the next day. The next night found us in snug quarters on ship-board, where we remained nearly a week.

Altogether, we have had more than a dozen shocks. On the 24th we had one that made my book-case rattle against the wall. Next day we took up quarters in the house of Bishop Boone, (who is now in the United States,) where we remain to the present time. This move was partly in consequence of the earthquakes, partly on account of the political state of the country, and partly on account of the approaching hot season. Dr. Boone's house is so situated, that, in case of earthquake, if we can get out, there is no danger from falling walls. In case of an attack, it is convenient to remove to ship; and in the hot season, it is much more airy and cool than any house can be in the city. But I go into the city almost daily, meeting the teacher there.

I had sent Tong into the country, to teach a school, and see what he could do by way of extending the truth in the neighborhood. Owing to various circumstances, I was unable to go and see him, till I found myself in want of his services; then went and visited the school and people, and dismissed the business. His pupils were very young. How much good he had done (besides conciliating the good will of the neighborhood) towards extending the truth, I could not tell very definitely. On my going, the neighbors crowded into his school room to see me, and listened to my talk.

Tong and I have been engaged for the last few days in getting out a tract on the Sabbath question, designed particularly for the Revolutionists, who are said to keep the seventh day, while their calendar marks the Sundays as the worship days. It may be that they keep the Sabbath by mistake, intending to keep Sunday. It will not, probably, be many weeks before there will be free access to them. The tract I have been preparing, is designed to confirm them in their present practice of Sabbath-keeping, (supposing them to be in the observance of the seventh day,) and at all events to give them our views of some of the most important points of this controversy. I hope to have it ready in a week.

Independently of this question, however, viewing things on the scale of both duty and privilege, our hearts would bound at the prospect of a speedy acquaintance with these strange Revolutionists, and a permanent residence among them in the heart of the country. And with ecstacy of joy would we hail the coming of another couple, burning with a holy ardor for the work that is opening up for us in China. Long have you, and long have we, been praying for the demolishing of the idols of China, and a hearty recognition by this great people of the God that made them.

But the time is short; our movements are too slow, and the earth is waxing old. Perhaps it is owing to the disgust of the Almighty for the deformed Christianity that has been brought by foreigners, and perhaps it is out of a compassionate regard for their long-cherished prejudices against foreigners, (a prejudice not altogether without foundation,) that God has in a measure taken the work away from us, reserving it more unmistakably to himself, to whom belongs all the glory of its accomplishment. At all events, by a strange and astounding providence, he has raised up, in the heart of the country, and almost independent of foreign aid, a power which is doing what the combined efforts of Christendom were found inadequate to do. At the approach of this power, the idols of the land vanish like mist before the blazing sun, and the name of the Great Creator and his Law are brought up before the notice of the whole empire, in a manner not to be soon forgotten or despised.

Some fanaticism adheres to the Revolutionists, and perhaps more than we dream of; but all this may yield to more ample instruction. But the eighteen provinces are not likely to be soon consolidated again into one empire; for in a variety of places parties are rising in rebellion against the Emperor, and also independently of each other. Already do we hear of this from the Southern Horan and the Northern Horan, from Shansi, from Fukien, and in the western portion of the empire amongst Mahommedans.

It is impossible to say whether tea, to any considerable extent, will be shipped from Shanghae the present year or not, but the prospect is not bright. If the trade be not resumed, the selling of bills of exchange here will be a very dull business. At the present time, the rate of exchange is ruinously bad, viz. 6s. 6d. on the dollar.

We hear that some ships are on their way from New York, and are expected here soon. The vessels belonging to the Japan expedition have left, except the Plymouth.

The books brought here from Nankin are translated by Dr. Medhurst, and shed some light on the much-controverted question as to a genuine word for God, god and gods, in this language. For although they (the Revolutionists) use Waung Shangte as a title of the Supreme Being, they unmistakably use Skin as the genuine word, that can be applied to the true God, and to false gods, as Elohim and Theos were. But Medhurst, wearing the straight jacket he had made for himself, translates Shin Spirit, and then, as it would make nonsense (as he used to tell Dr. Boone) in certain places, so he explains under a parenthesis by writing (God) or (god.)

But my time is exhausted.

Yours in Christ, S. CARPENTER.

Accompanying the foregoing came a few lines from Mrs. Carpenter, which we take pleasure in laying before the readers of the Recorder. Alluding to the revolutionary movement, she says:—

Can you imagine, dear brother, the excitement consequent upon the state of things in which we live, and how intimately we all feel ourselves connected with the elements around us? Could you see how desolate our dwellings have all seemed for the last few weeks; our valuables, (i. e. our indispensables,) packed up for a speedy flight, or deposited at the Consul's for safe keeping; schools dismissed, (at one time nearly all were so;) our neighbors in crowds fleeing from the city for protection, and all the inseparables from such movements constantly before our eyes; you would have felt, that the "romance of missions" was not all imaginary. We are quiet now, but unsettled, and must remain so until there is a better state of things around us. While these things are going on, imagine how much our gloom must be increased by the sad news from our late departed missionary friends. Mrs. Jenkins, (so yesterday's mail says) died near St. Helena; Mr. Byers within five days sail of New York; and Mrs. Taylor still in decline. O, the perils of a missionary's life! Yet are we not called upon, particularly on their behalf, to weep for the living, and not for the dead? Dear brother, shall we not be still more earnestly remembered by you all, than we have ever been?

Since the foregoing was in hand, we have received an interesting letter from Mr. Wardner, dated the 19th of May. We copy that portion of it which relates to the movements of the Revolutionists.

Since Nanking has been threatened and taken by the Insurgents, the Taoutai has frequently appealed to foreigners to take Shanghae under their protection, and has been very eager to charter their war vessels to go against the rebels, and has sent false proclamations into the interior to intimidate the enemy. Mr. Meadows, the interpreter in the British Consulate, found one posted up between Loo-chow and Nanking, in which the Taoutai asserts, that "the barbarian braves, with the first detachment of more than ten war steamers, had gone against the enemy, and that they were so filled with hatred towards them, and were so eager to exterminate the rebels, that they bore all the expenses themselves." The Taoutai has purchased several merchant vessels, at great prices, and fitted them up for service, rather than use Chinese junks. In these things he has very emphatically acknowledged the superiority of foreigners.

Another result which will be quite sure to follow this revolution, and a very desirable one, will be the opening of the Interior to foreigners. If the Imperialists succeed, they cannot well teeboo Nanking again to foreigners, after all their efforts to get them there to serve their purposes. If the Insurgents succeed, then a new treaty will be formed; and it is not likely, that one more stringent than the present will be acceded to.

But these are not all. The Lord is Commander in Chief in this movement, and is guiding matters in such a way as to show proud man that all things are under His control, and that the glory belongs to Him alone. Gov. Bonham, with Her Majesty's war-steamer Hermes, has lately paid a visit to Nanking, for the purpose of ascertaining the true state of affairs, as no reports coming through Chinese hands could be relied on. The news they brought back is most thrilling, and produces great excitement, as you will probably see by the North China Herald.

It is truly wonderful, that a body of obscure men from the Interior, so little acquainted with foreigners and their religion, should start with the Bible as their standard, and attempt to revolutionize their nation, religiously as well as politically; and that, from a mere handful, they should so soon be able to defy the combined forces of so great a nation. The more so, since the religion which they adopt is so much despised, and since they most emphatically discared the religion of their own nation, although their whole success (humanly speaking) depended upon public sympathy and volunteers to their standard.

What would appear to be the work of a century, seems now about to be accomplished at a single stroke. What is best of all, they appear to be thorough Protestants, and anti-idolaters of the strictest order. They acknowledge but one God, the Creator of all, to whom alone divine honor is due; and that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of men. Their Leader, whom they call "Tae-ping-wang" (Prince of Peace,) though he considers himself divinely commissioned, forbids by an edict the application to himself of the terms Supreme, holy, &c., as has always been customary among the Emperors of China. Such titles (he says) belong to God alone. The Ten Commandments compose their moral code, which they style the "Heavenly Rules," and they strictly enforce their observance.

What they have accomplished, they attribute wholly to the power and grace of God. With proud humility, and with glistening eyes, they point back to the fact that, at the beginning of their enterprise, some four years ago, they numbered only one or two hundred, and that, but for the direct help of their Heavenly Father, they never could have done what they have done. "In Quang-See," said they, "when we occupied Tang-Gan, we were sorely pressed; there were only some two or three thousand of us. We were beset on all sides by much greater numbers. We had no powder left, and our provisions were all spent. But our Heavenly Father came down, and showed us the way to break out. So we put our wives and children in the middle, and not only forced a passage, but completely beat our enemies. The Imperialists say we use magical arts. The only magic we have used is prayer to God."

The officers of the Hermes were treated with great cordiality. Horses were furnished, and they were permitted to ride through the city and country at pleasure.

They (the Insurgents) destroy all the idols they meet with, punish adultery and opium-smoking with death, and prohibit the drinking of wine, smoking tobacco, gaming, &c. Lucky and unlucky days, charms, enchantments, fortune-telling, sooth-saying, and ancestral worship, are all discarded. "On funeral occasions," say they, "no Budhist ceremonies are to be employed. Having placed the body in a coffin, put on mourning, and conducted the funeral to the place of burial, presentations of animals, wine, tea and rice, should be offered up to the Great God, accompanied by the following prayer: 'I thy unworthy son (or daughter) kneeling down upon the ground, present my supplications to thee the Great God our Heavenly Father. There is here present the soul of thy unworthy servant, such an one, who on a certain day, month and hour, departed this life. Having placed the body in a coffin, put on mourning, and conducted the funeral to the place of burial, I reverently present animals, wine, tea and rice, offering them up to the Great God our Heavenly Father, beseeching thee of thy favor to admit the soul of thy unworthy servant, such an one, up into heaven, to enjoy abundant happiness with thee. I also pray thee, the Great God our Heavenly Father, to regard and support me, thy unworthy son or daughter, granting peace to every member of my household, both great and small, warding off all kinds of fear, causing all demoniacal influences to retire, and every thing to happen according to our wish, accompanied by great prosperity and bliss, through the mercy of our Saviour and Elder Brother, the Lord Jesus, who redeemed us from sin. I also pray thee, the Great God our Father in Heaven, that thy will may be done on earth as it is in heaven. That thou wouldest look down, and grant this my request, is my heart's sincere desire."

"When the coffin is closed, the mourning put on, the body carried out to the place of interment, and lowered down into the sepulchre, all should cry out with a loud voice, saying, 'In obedience to the command of the Great God, our Supreme Lord, in obedience to the command of the Saviour of the world, the Lord Jesus, and in obedience to the command of the Celestial King, the Sovereign Director of the Great Doctrine, we pray that every kind of fear and dread may be removed far away, and demoniacal influences be compelled to retire. May every thing happen according to our wishes, and we obtain great prosperity and bliss.'"

"Every seventh day is to be observed as a day of worship, and for thanking the Great God for his goodness. Every time that the four days of the twenty-eight constellations, called Heu, Fang, Sing and Maou, occur, is to be observed as a day of worship."

The last is from an Almanac for 1852, and points out Sunday for the Sabbath. But the officers of the Hermes assert, that at Nanking they found them keeping the seventh day as the Sabbath. It would seem that there must be some mistake somewhere, or else that they have changed their practice since that book was published. Time will prove.

Within a few days after the return of the Hermes, the Rev. Mr. Muirhead started for Nanking, by the overland route, but was obliged to return. And Rev. Dr. Taylor started in a boat, by way of the River Yang-tz', but I learned yesterday that, when he got as far as Ching-kong-foo, he found piles driven across the river, so that no boat of any kind could pass. Whether he will attempt any other course, or return, is not known. I have conditionally engaged a passage on the same boat that took him, when it returns; and it was expected two or three days ago. It may not be possible to get there now, and may not be prudent to attempt it, as in all probability they are having warm times there. But if Mr. T. succeeds, why cannot I?

Before closing, I wish to quote a few remarks from one of their books:—

> "The true God of Heaven is one God,
> But men in general are ignorant, and walk in error.
> When you bow down to images of clay, wood and stone,
> We beg to ask, how long have you parted with your reason?
> Do not say that to comply with Heaven is to follow foreigners,
> For the generality of mankind are stupid and disobedient.
> Think of the reverence displayed for the Deity by Thang and Wan,
> And courageously break through the Devil's barriers.
> Comply with Heaven, and be happy; disobey and perish.
> What is the use of disputing about minor matters?
> You are none of you the children of Budhist idols.
> Why do you not then repent, and strive to get to Heaven?"

As might be expected at this stage, their religious views are mixed with superstitious notions. But they have light enough to show them the road to heaven, which is infinitely better than heathenism. It seems as if I could almost hear His voice, as it once spoke, "Say not ye there are four months, and then cometh the harvest? Behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest." But where are the reapers? O, where? If Christians were as ready to work as God is to bless their labors, how soon would idolatry be banished from the earth!

As soon as possible, we ought to have one or two mission families in Nanking, which will probably be the capital if the new Emperor succeeds. One or two more should be in readiness to proceed to Honan, as soon as the way is opened. But where are the men, and who will send them?

P. S.—Since writing the above, I learn that Mr. Taylor has returned, and that about one hundred foreigners have gone in a fleet of ships to Ching-kang-foo, in the employment of Taoutai against the Insurgents, of which the latter have knowledge, and have offered large rewards for their heads. About six hundred Canton men, dressed in foreign uniform, and armed with foreign weapons, are also among the Imperialist land forces at that place, who are taken to be foreigners by the enemy, as was intended. This is a game to involve foreigners in the struggle.

In consequence of these things, Mr. T. thought it not prudent to go on shore; but he succeeded in getting as far as Silver Island, a little this side of "Ching-keang," which is in possession of the Insurgents, though he saw none of them. But he found a few priests, with whom he left a quantity of books for the patriots, of which they seemed very glad, as they thought they would recommend them to their favor. From this Island he saw the suburbs of the city of Ching-keang in flames, fired by the Insurgents, to get it out of the way. When he left, he brought away some fragments of the gods that formerly presided there.

Mr. T.'s teacher, a convert, and a native of Nanking, went to that place a short time before the Hermes did, and I am told that he brought back word, that the Insurgents are Sabbatarians.

THE CHINESE REBELLION.

Every thing relating to the Chinese rebellion continues to be interesting as well as strange. The London Times of August 2d, says that the movement of the disciples of Tai-ping-wang, which is interpreted to mean 'the Prince of Peace,' has nowhere been effectually resisted by the Imperialist troops, and at every point on which the Mandarins and the Mantchoo authorities have been attacked, they have been routed and overthrown. The British Plenipotentiary in China proceeded, toward the end of April, in her Majesty's steamer Hermes, up the Yang-tse-kiang, to confer with the chiefs of the rebellion, and to announce to them the neutrality of the British Government. The object of this expedition not being at first clearly understood, the Hermes was repeatedly fired upon from the forts along the river, but she succeeded in making good her voyage without loss of life. As Sir George Bonham approached Nankin, a singular indication was seen of the sudden change effected in the religious opinions of the Chinese, for the river was strewn with the floating fragments of wooden idols, like the figure-heads of ships scattered from a wreck. Shortly afterwards the interpreters went on shore, and a letter from Sir George Bonham was communicated to the Chinese chiefs, in which he appears to recognize their claim to the title of sovereign authority. The natives visited the ship freely, and great cordiality and eagerness to trade seemed to prevail. The interpreters succeeded in obtaining copies of some of the religious books circulated among the new sect, and it is impossible to doubt that they are derived from the Old and New Testaments, with some slight adaptation to the manners of the Chinese Empire. Thus, in the commentary on the seventh commandment, we are informed that smoking opium is to be considered as included in the crime of adultery. The prayers and thanksgivings to be used by the faithful in the various occasions of life are expressly offered "through the merits of our Saviour and heavenly brother, the Lord Jesus, who redeemed us from sin." The form of praise is evidently taken from the Christian doxology; the observance of the Sabbath is enjoined, and the whole dispensation of the Old and New Testaments is set forth in a poem or psalm, called the "Trimetrical Classic," which is one of the most singular productions we can remember to have perused. In point of morals and language, the conduct of the new sect is described as extremely decorous, and strikingly different from the usual habit of the Chinese.

A letter of Bayard Taylor to the N. Y. Tribune, dated May 15th, says that the rebels still held Nanking, Chin kiang-foo, and all the river between. The imperial troops were becoming disgusted with the struggle, and were inactive, if they had not already begun to retreat. There was very little excitement at Shanghae, either among the Chinese or the foreign residents. The former had very generally returned to their homes and opened their shops in accordance with the Taoutai's commands.

The U. S. sloop-of-war Plymouth was to remain at Shanghae, and not accompany the Japan Expedition, as expected. The American mercantile houses had addressed a letter to Commissioner Marshall, asking that they should not be left defenseless, exposed to any emergency that might arise. Commodore Perry, therefore, had detached the Plymouth for the present from the Japanese Squadron. The Commissioner had as yet received no answer from Pekin with regard to his reception; and if none should come within two or three weeks, he would probably proceed to the mouth of the Pai-ho, in the Yellow Sea, and communicate directly with the Capital. The Expedition to Japan was to sail from Shanghae on Tuesday, May 17, and though its immediate destination was not known, it was supposed that it would rendezvous at the great Loo Choo islands, there to await the Saratoga and Powhattan. A rumor was in existence that the Japanese had fortified their shores and stationed war-junks to prevent the entrance of the strangers into their waters, but this was regarded as a piece of Chinese exaggeration, it having come through Celestial mediums. The Expedition would probably not be able to remain in the Japanese waters longer than the beginning of the typhoon season, in August, when the coasts of the islands become dangerous, and in case that, in spite of the resolution and energy of Com. Perry, nothing had been accomplished by that time, the purposes of the enterprise would have to be postponed till another season.

BURMAH AS A MISSION FIELD.

Rev. Eugenio Kincaid writes from Rangoon, March 18, 1853, to the Christian Chronicle, that they have baptized 84 converts since July. He says:—

"If there is one field more hopeful than another—more ready to the harvest than another—it seems to me, that field is Burmah. One thing I know, here is a vast field open to our efforts, and there is an extraordinary readiness to hear. To me, it seems clear that God designs to save this nation. I cannot doubt, if the apostolic plan was adopted and carried out, in preaching the things of the kingdom of God, churches would spring up along our pathway in every city and district over the land. But if we will take our own way regardless of Christ's command and apostolic example, and sit down and work in a very narrow circle, then we cease to be evangelists. Why should we not expect to evangelize Burmah within the next twenty or twenty-five years? Is there any thing extravagant in thinking that it can be done? A few such men as Paul, and Barnabas, and Timothy, and Silas, would, I am quite sure, do the work—the fact that God gives the increase, is the reason why it could be done, if the heaven-appointed way was adopted. The modern plan of renovating the world by tracts, and books, and schools, must be abandoned. As means for evangelizing the nations they are worse than useless. They cannot precede the ministry of the Word and be harmless; they will follow and be useful. 'Go ye therefore, and preach the Gospel to every creature.' No wisdom of man can improve on this plan."

EFFECT OF READING NEWSPAPERS.—Rev. Dr. Daniel Baker, of Texas, says he has traveled through a great many States, mixed with the people, conversed at the country fireside, and preached in the open forest as well as in the thronged city. Where he found newspapers he found intelligence, people whom he could talk or listen to with pleasure, and among whom his good work prospered. As a general thing, where a newspaper was not taken, he could tell it in the slovenliness of the household, the ignorance of the children, and the difference in civilization between those who do take a newspapers and those who do not; that the traveler in the country will be pleased and entertained by the one, while he will despise the other, without knowing the cause to which the difference is attributable.

THE YELLOW FEVER AT NEW ORLEANS.—During last week the deaths at New Orleans from yellow fever averaged about 200 per day. On Fifth-day, August 15th, the whole number of deaths was 242, of which 227 were from the fever. The distress there is very great, notwithstanding the Howard Association is doing all in its power for the sick, and pecuniary assistance is flowing in from all parts of the country. At Mobile, Natchez, and other southern cities, the fever is raging, and proves very fatal.

MORTALITY IN NEW YORK.—The whole number of deaths in New York during last week was nine hundred and sixty-nine. Of these, 214 were from sun-stroke, to which should be added 15 before reported, making the whole number of deaths from sun-stroke during the recent hot weather 229. The deaths during the same week of 1852, were 524, and of 1849, 469.

THE TRAINER FAMILY.—Several weeks ago an appeal was made for contributions to purchase Emma Trainer, the mother of the colored girl Jane Trainer, about whom so much has lately been said in the New York papers. Up to last Second-day, only $224 75 had been contributed towards the $700 to be raised.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Savannah Republican says: "We understand that Rev. J. P. Tustin, of this city, forwarded to the treasurer of the Southern Baptist Board of Foreign Missions a check for $100—the contribution of the colored Baptist churches of Savannah to the African Mission. This is the amount of their annual subscriptions, though they exceed it some years. As an example of liberality, it might well be imitated by many churches in Georgia, whose members possess fairer complexions and more extensive means."

In Burlington, Vt., there have been remarkable conversions to Protestantism, eight adults in one day having publicly disowned the church of Rome. Two of this number were men of education, sent out as faithful missionaries to the States among the French. By many their lives are thought to be in danger. One of the number was conspicuous as a Bible burner at Champlain, some years ago, who represents his conscience as being a tormentor.

The Montreal Witness states that to the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada, the past year has been one of great prosperity in many respects; that seasons of spiritual refreshing have been numerous, and have resulted in the admission of about 2500 to the membership of the churches, above all that have been removed by death, expulsion, or in other ways.

Rev. A. P. Williams writes to the Western Watchman, under a late date: "I had the pleasure of baptizing Dr. B. B. Bonham, a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, last Saturday. He is now a member of the Sugar Creek Baptist church in Buchanan county, Mo. Brother Bonham is a man of more than ordinary talents, and will prove to be, I have no doubt, a profitable accession to our denomination."

Mr. John Eyre, a member of the parish at Eastville, Northampton county, Virginia, with the most commendable liberality, presented two thousand dollars to the parish for the erection of a rectory; provided the parish would contribute five hundred dollars for the purchase and enclosure of a suitable site. This condition was immediately fulfilled.

The Christian Watchman and Reflector says it is reported, and with what seems to be reliable authority, that the American Bible Union will so far modify its practical aims, as to restrict its operations to the revision of the English scriptures, and in this manner avoid antagonism to the American and Foreign Bible Society.

Two hundred pupils have been instructed, during the present year, in the American Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb at Hartford. Of these there were 38 from Maine, 15 from New Hampshire, 23 from Vermont, 83 from Massachusetts, 6 from Rhode Island, and 30 from Connecticut.

The New York Chronicle states that Rev. Mr. Latham, pastor of the Methodist Wesleyan church, Yorkville, N. Y., has sent in his resignation to the president of the Conference, for the purpose of uniting with the Baptist denomination.

The pious physician, Dr. Kalley, through whose instrumentality mainly the Gospel light was rekindled in Madeira, is now in this country, visiting his humble friends, the exiled Portugese, who, after many troubles, have found a home in Illinois.

The Faculty of the Western Military Institute, at Drumon, Ky., at its commencement on the 23d ult., conferred the degree of D. D. upon Rev. S. Y. McMasters, the rector of St. Paul's church, Alton.

The king of Prussia has, at his own expense, circulated more than two hundred and fifty thousand copies of the Bible among the troops of his army; and these are printed in six different languages.

General Intelligence.

European News.

By the Humboldt at New York, and the America at Halifax, we have one week later dates from Europe.

The Eastern difficulty is within a few days of being settled, either for peace or war. The public generally look on the state of affairs as less satisfactory. The present position of the question stands thus:—Until the 10th or 12th of August, the Czar's final answer to the ultimatum of the four powers, (Austria, France, England, and Prussia,) cannot be known. If he accepts that ultimatum, his troops must be immediately withdrawn from the Principalities, and the Conference at Vienna, pursuing its arrangements, will conclude a Treaty to protect Turkey in all time coming. If the Czar refuses the ultimatum of the four powers, or evades a reply, (which will be considered equivalent to refusing it,) the allied fleets will be ordered to the Bosphorus, if not further, and active measures will be taken by France and England to maintain the integrity of their ally. The question, therefore, is on the point of solution for peace or war. The choice rests solely and wholly in the personal will of the Emperor Nicholas.

The journals of Frankfort of the 30th, say that Austria intends not only to demand reparation from the United States, for the Smyrna affair, but insists that the Porte shall immediately procure the extradition of Koszta.

St. Petersburgh letters say that when the Czar heard of the Koszta affair, he advised Austria to settle it as easily as possible, and do anything rather than give the United States a pretense for interfering in the affairs of Europe.

At Laodicea, a Turkish mob had attempted the life of the Russian Consul. Druses and other mountaineers were arming. In other parts of the Turkish Empire, great confusion and disorder prevailed.

Cholera is on the increase in Persia, and advancing toward Tabreez.

The Plague had broken out at Khorassen.

The Duchess Olga, of Wurtemburg, daughter of the Czar, is in London, where she has been received with distinction.

The London Times is severe on the opening of the Crystal Palace. Its chief bitterness lies against Mr. Pierce for being behind time, while Her Majesty was punctual to the minute on the original occasion in London.

The cholera continued its ravages at Copenhagen. The total number of cases, at the latest dates, was 4,700, of which 2,500 had proved fatal.

The Pawtucket Railroad Calamity.

The Coroner's Jury in the case of the persons killed by the collision on the Providence and Worcester Railroad, Aug. 12th, found as follows:—

"The said collision was the immediate result of the culpable carelessness, inexperience, and want of judgment of Frederick W. Putnam, the conductor of the Uxbridge train, in leaving the station at Valley Falls, when he had, by his time, but four minutes to reach the Boston switch, which we say was a disregard of the Railroad Company's orders and instructions; in not providing himself with a suitable and correct watch, his watch proving to be two minutes behind the true time, and yet it had been set by the Company's clock at Providence the night before the collision took place.

"We blame the managers of the road for appointing so young and inexperienced a man as Mr. Putnam to be conductor of the Uxbridge train, one of the most difficult, if not the most difficult train to manage on the road, and on which was involved the greatest risk of human life.

"We blame the managers for not ascertaining that every conductor was provided with a suitable and correct watch to run their trains by, and for not ascertaining why the Uxbridge train, since it has been under the charge of Mr. Putnam, had almost invariably been behind its time, and applying the remedy.

"We say that the train from Providence, in which was the President and Superintendent of the Railroad Company, with an experienced Conductor, should have started from the Boston switch the very second the signal was given; by so doing it might have reached in the one minute which was delayed a point on the road where it would have been in sight from the Valley Falls Station, and the great calamity would probably have been prevented; which delay, we say, is attributable to the Conductor of the Providence train permitting Engineer Freeman and the brakemen to be absent from their places when the signal to start was given.

"Finally, we say that the whole management of the trains is bad.

"There is no necessity of crowding the trains so near upon the time of the train from Boston—that the special rule in regard to the trains at this point is insufficient, and that some signal north of the curve, and in sight of the Valley Falls station, should have been used to warn the Uxbridge train of the approach of the train from Providence. The use of such signals would have prevented this sad catastrophe.

Singular Suicide.

From the Manchester (N. H.) Daily Mirror, Aug. 15.

At about 8 o'clock last evening, (Sunday, Aug. 14,) two young ladies, operatives in the mill, committed suicide by drowning; the particulars of which, so far as we have been able to gather, are as follows:—

One of them, was Miss Catharine B. Cotton, of Pownal, Me., aged 22; the other, Miss Clara C. Cochran, aged 19, a native of New Boston, but who lately had a home with a brother at Hopkinton. They roomed together at No. 24, Manchester Corporation, this city, and have frequently expressed a purpose to drown themselves; but their friends had no apprehension that such was their design. For a few days previous, they had talked freely of so doing, and communicated their intention to a room-mate, but still without creating any alarm. As they left their boarding house late in the evening, however, the lady rooming with them followed and watched them. They proceeded hand-in-hand, and with great apparant cheerfulness, to the bridge crossing the upper canal, leading to the Manchester Mill—stopped together upon the stone wall of the canal just above the bridge, and together leaped into the water. The act was seen by one or two persons, and the alarm was instantly given, though ten minutes elapsed before either was taken out. In that time, the body of Miss Cotton was recovered—that of Miss Cochran, having floated down the canal, was not recovered for some time after. All efforts to resuscitate them failed. Miss Cochran for some days previous had been very much depressed and low spirited.

Their whole proceedings were marked by great coolness and deliberation. Both of them left letters to their friends, announcing their purpose, and giving directions in regard to the settlement of their affairs and the disposal of their effects. Miss Cochran, we understand, was to come into possession of several thousand dollars at 21 years of age. Various rumors are afloat in regard to the cause of this rash act. From all we can learn, it is to be ascribed in both cases to the grief of disappointed love.

Fugitive Slave given up in Cincinnati.

A negro named George McQueery, alias Wash, was brought to Cincinnati on the evening of Aug. 15, from Piqua, claimed by Henry Mills, of Kentucky, as a fugitive slave. The colored people gathered in large numbers round the Galt House, where the fugitive was guarded by the United States Marshal and a posse of police, and exhibited much feeling, but dispersed upon being assured that the prisoner should have a fair trial.

Next morning the fugitive was brought before Judge McLean, in the United States Court, when the case was heard. The evidence was decidedly in favor of the claim of Mr. Mills, the fugitive having confessed being his slave.

The attorneys for the defense seem to have relied upon the unconstitutionality of the law. Judge McLean, in answer to objections raised by counsel for the slave, decided that the Fugitive Slave Laws of 1793 and 1850 were constitutional; that no State had the power to pass a law preventing fugitives being delivered up to those to whom they owed service; that no proof was necessary before the Supreme Court that slavery existed in the State whence the fugitive escaped, as it should be taken for granted that a Supreme Judge knew the laws of all the States; that States could not be compelled to give up fugitives by a law of Congress, if the provision in the Constitution did not do so; that slavery can only exist by the authority of law, and as it so exists in the Slave States, said law not being an infringement on the Constitution, the Free States are bound to recognize it in delivering up fugitive slaves from these States, upon clear proof that they are such.

Reformed Dutch Home Missions.—The following is an abstract of the annual report, showing the results of the Dutch Home Missionary Society's operations during the year ending June 1st, 1853:—

"Seventy-six feeble or new churches and missionary stations have been added. Eight churches have been organized by reason of the aid granted. Seven new houses of worship have been built by congregations aided. Five churches have given notice that they need no further aid. Fourteen new churches and missionary stations have been established and assisted. About five hundred persons have been received, on confession of their faith, into churches aided. Over three hundred and fifty have been received into the same on certificate. Between sixty and seventy Sunday-schools have been in operation in these during the year. About three thousand children and youth have been taught in them the Word of Life. Nearly nine hundred dollars have been raised by these churches and stations for domestic missions. Besides this, they have collected fifteen hundred dollars for benevolent purposes generally. A number of them, which have been aided but a short time, will need assistance but a little longer."

City and Country.—A letter from Burlington, Vt., makes refreshing allusion to the pleasures of life in the country, from which we copy as follows:—

"When I stroll over a cultivated farm, wade through sweet clover fields more than knee deep, wander over the green pastures, drink the pure water of the bubbling spring, see the fields of ripe wheat bending under the gentle breezes, or falling before the skillfully handled cradle; hear the rustling of the luxuriant corn leaves as the warm wind sweeps over them; smell the new made hay, more sweet than the perfumes of 'pouncet-box,' and watch the healthy cows as they march along in single file in the well-trodden path at set of sun, with glossy hair, and fine round bellies, with fresh grass well lined, and udders distended with rich milk, to yield their sweet treasures to the farmer's cheerful wife and her fair daughters—I feel in all their true force the charms of a country life, and can duly appreciate what the 'Bard of Avon' once put into the mouth of the honest and simple shepherd. 'Sir, I am a true laborer. I earn that I eat, get that I wear, owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness, glad of other men's good, content with my lot, and the greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze and my lambs suck.' What mortal so demented as to be willing to exchange such a sweet and honest life for the cares and perplexities of the great city's Mayor, or for the 'stealings-in' even of the fat Alderman? Is it not strange that so many will pass by such a life, and crowd our cities, where thousands breathe impure air, and even suffer for the want of good and wholesome food?"

A Curious Book.—Mr. Jefferson made an original book out of the New Testament, an account of which is given by him in a letter to John Adams, dated October 13th, when Mr. J. was seventy years old. He took two copies of the New Testament, and cut out the sayings of the Saviour, rejecting every verse which was not evidently his; these he pasted into a book, and his compilation is described as covering forty-six pages. He wrote to John Adams, that this arrangement had placed before him "the most sublime and benevolent code of morals ever offered to man."

Eld. S. S. Griswold, expecting to spend a few months in Jefferson Co., N. Y., requests his correspondents to address him at Stowell's Corners.

The exhibit of the earnings of the Watertown, Rome and Cape Vincent Railroad, for six months, ending July 31, 1853, shows an excess over the corresponding six months of last year of $47,110 03.

Virginia, Nov. 1–4, Richmond.
New Hampshire, Oct. 5–7, ——.

Earthquake in Venezuela.—Advices have been received from Porto Cabello, giving the particulars of the destructive earthquake which took place at Cumana on the 15th of July. The first shock of the earthquake was so violent, that although it continued its vibrations only two minutes, it destroyed in that short space of time every house but one in that principal part of the city, called Puente Arriba. Many of the inhabitants of the portion which contained the dwellings of the more opulent, were buried in the ruins. This catastrophe seems to have put a sudden end to the war; for 600 soldiers in the barracks were among the victims, together with almost all the officers of the revolution. The utmost consternation naturally prevailed among the survivors, and it is said that a respectable ecclesiastic was sent to General J. F. Monagas, who was preparing his troops to march against Cumana, offering to submit, and asking for assistance for the sufferers. It is added, that these requests were assented to, and that he immediately sent one of his brothers with a supply of provisions and men. The earthquake was felt in Barcelona, and destroyed three large buildings, including the barracks, just after 700 soldiers had left them. All along the coast of Venezuela shocks were felt, but no mischief was done.

The Leviathan Steamship.—The Portland (Me.) State of Maine says: Mr. Betts, the great railway contractor, is a Director in the Eastern Navigation Company, who are constructing the Leviathan Steamship, for the purpose of facilitating ocean navigation. The other head of this Company is the Earl of Yarborough, and the names of Mr. Peto, and others of equal note, are also associated with Mr. Betts in the direction. This Company has laid the scheme for a monster steamer, whose dimensions are given as follows: length 673 feet; breadth 80 feet; out to out of wheel-houses 120 feet; depth of hold from combings of main deck 60 feet; power of engines 6,000 horse. Her decks present an area of 1½ acres of surface. The ship is being built by Scott Russel, Esq., the greatest naval architect of England, and is constructed in separate compartments, made water-tight, so that in case of her bow or stern breaking off, she would still be able to float in separate pieces. Halifax is regarded as the most suitable port for this new move in ocean navigation. The steamer is to sail from Milford Haven, where she is now building—or from Holyhead Harbor, which promises eventually to become the great steamship terminus of the British Isles.

SUMMARY.

On Monday, the 26th ult., there was laid across the Ohio River, on the New Orleans and St. Louis line, about one mile below Paducah, a monster telegraph cable, said to be the longest in America and the largest in the world. The cable is four inches and a quarter in circumference, fourteen hundred and forty yards in length, and weighs eleven thousand pounds. The wire in this cable is iron (No. 9,) and is covered by three coats of gutta percha, and these by three coats of coarse Osnaburg, saturated with a composition of non electrics; the whole is encased by eighteen wires of the size of the center one, and secured by a wire of the same size as the others, running spirally.

A clan of villains, numbering about twenty, among whom are several doctors and other men of standing in the community, banded together for the purpose of robbing, &c., has been discovered in the Southern part of Indiana, where they have been committing depredations for some time. A fellow named Daniel Rickets, who was leader of the band, has been arrested and committed to jail. A robbery had been committed, and from some cause, not stated, suspicion rested on a Dr. Smalley and a student in his office named Harrison, both of whom were missing. They were pursued, and the student taken at Indianapolis, who, to save himself, exposed the whole gang and all their operations and purposes.

Miss Gilmour, daughter of a widow in New York, was killed on Sunday, Aug. 14, by lightning, in the village of Canterbury. The circumstances of the case were quite novel. She was standing under the telegraph wire, which crosses the lawn in front of Mrs. Cunnigham's house, where she was boarding. The wire hangs within some ten feet of the ground; there was no rain at the time, though the storm was raging at a distance. The lightning, it is supposed, struck the wire more than a mile distant, followed its course, shattering all the posts, some to splinters, and a portion of the current was diverted so as to kill the deceased.

An Apothecaries' National Convention will soon be held in Boston. The object of the organization is to encourage young men to more thoroughly qualify themselves for the duties of the business. It is believed that a higher degree of knowledge and skill in medicals, and the branches of science with which they are connected, is required, and that the Convention, by combining unanimity in action from representatives of all sections of the country, will be able to put in operation such measures as will aid to bring so desirable an object about.

On Thursday night, John Harlen, a resident of Hamilton Av., Brooklyn, while laboring under delirium, caused by liquor, seized an axe and raised it for the purpose of striking his wife, when he himself fell down dead upon the floor.

We learn from the Newark Advertiser, that the Bank Commissioners, having made a Report to the Chancellor that they had made an official inspection of the "Traders' Bank" at Cape May, and "Bank of America," Cape May Court House, and have reason to believe that the said Banks are not carrying on the business of banking in a bona fide manner, the Chancellor issued an order to the said Banks to show cause on Monday, the 15th instant, why the said associations should not be declared insolvent, &c.

Intelligence is brought of a Newport vessel, iron laden and bound for Quebec, having foundered on the Banks. The crew and passengers—three of the latter being females, one of whom died—took to the boats, and after great privations for nine days, being reduced to the greatest extremity from want of food, they were picked up by a French vessel and carried into San Antonio, whence they were taken by a Colonial cruiser to Lance au-Loup, to procure a passage to Canada.

A letter dated Kenosha, (Wis.,) Wednesday, Aug. 10, 1853, says, Having lately passed through Southern Wisconsin, and Northern Illinois, I hesitate not to say, that the crops generally present a better appearance this season than for several years previous. Winter Wheat has been partially injured by the rust, but spring grains are fine, both in quantity and quality. Corn and potatoes look very promising, and if fair prices are sustained this fall, the farmers of Wisconsin will again stand erect. The Wheat crop is now mostly secured, and a large proportion of Oats harvested.

Accounts from Newfoundland to August 10 state that the ship Charles Clark, from Hamburgh to Quebec, with 118 passengers, was lost, after having been 56 days at sea, at Freshwater Point, near Trepassey Bay, on 28th July, and five passengers perished; the rest had reached St. John, Newfoundland, where a subscription had been raised to furnish them with clothing, and a reward offered for some miscreants who plundered their property.

Rev. John A. Butler, formerly a resident of South Boston, but now a missionary of the American Board at South Africa, lately had a narrow escape from death. While crossing the river "Umkomazi," on horseback, his leg was seized by a crocodile who pulled him from his saddle. Clinging to the mane of his horse with a death-hold, they floundered into shallow water, when the natives on the shore beat off the crocodile. Mr. Butler received five gashes from the teeth of the monster.

The Memoir of the Life and Labors of the Rev. Adoniram Judson, D. D., the father of American Baptist Missions in India, by the Rev. Dr. Wayland, President of Brown University, is to be published in two large duodecimo volumes of 1100 pages in all; containing a portrait from an engraving on steel, in the highest style of the art. It is advertised to be ready in September next. Price two dollars.

A dispatch dated Buffalo, August 18, 1853, says: The new Sandusky steamer Mississippi collapsed a flue last night, when twenty-five miles out from Buffalo, instantly killing a fireman, and seriously scalding two others. An alarm of fire spread among the passengers, and general consternation prevailed; but the fears were quieted after a while, and the boat returned to Buffalo. The accident is supposed to have been caused by a flaw in the iron of the flue.

The Government have purchased, for $530,000, the property in Wall-street, New York, next the Custom House, at present occupied by the Bank of the State and the Bank of Commerce, for the purpose of an Assay Office, under the act of the last Congress. This property was bought within a few years at $187,000, and resold to the present occupants at $240,000.

A dispatch dated Cumberland, Md., Saturday, Aug. 20, 1853, says: Cholera broke out in this place on Wednesday last, and fourteen deaths have since occurred from it. It is now subsiding, and the few cases under treatment are perfectly manageable. The disease was caused by an overflow of the small canal running through the lower part of the town. Many families have left.

The vessels of the United States Japan Squadron are assembling in the harbor of Shanghae. The principal and evident object of the expedition is the establishment of American settlements and coaling stations in the China Seas, for the protection and encouragement of our rapidly increasing Eastern trade.

Illinois reports are about like Wisconsin. In the Rock River region, as a general thing, it is conceded, the yield of wheat will be much larger than that of any year for the last five. Corn also looks exceedingly well, and we should judge there was more planted, by one fourth or one third, than in any previous year. The weather, so far, has been very favorable for vegetation.

A gentleman in New Haven has caught in his garden, since the 10th day of June, with twenty-four wide-mouthed bottles, partly filled with molasses and vinegar, three bushels of flies, bugs, millers, &c. The bottles were hung upon his garden fence. During the first seven days, the amount of flies, &c., caught, was forty-two solid quarts.

Over a thousand Americans were recently gathered in the hotels at Montreal. They had so far exceeded all calculations made for them by the hotel keepers, that "colonization" became necessary, and crowds were obliged to lodge in the steamboats lying at the wharves.

The epidemic at New Orleans has reached a fearful hight. The deaths during the week ending Aug. 13, were 1,518; equal to nine thousand in the City of New York. Of the 1,518, no less than 1,277, or more than 84 per cent., were from yellow fever.

Rev. M. B. Anderson, President of the University of Rochester, and recently Editor of The New York Recorder, has received the honor of LL. D. from Waterville College, Me., of which he was for many years a Professor.

On Sunday, Aug. 14, there were 270 deaths at New Orleans, of which 235 were from Yellow Fever. This is equal to about 1,500 a day, or ten thousand five hundred per week, in a population equal to that of New York.

Wisconsin never had such a year for good crops since it was settled. Wheat and oats are large and heavy, and corn tall and healthy. A great deal of hay has been cut, and farmers are still busy at that work.

By a law of the last Legislature of Connecticut, a fine of $100 is imposed upon any Bank in that State, for every fractional bill it shall issue—and a fine of $20 upon any person in the State who shall circulate any such bill, of that or any other State, after the first day of September.

Peter Van Zandt, a soldier in the Revolutionary War under Wayne, died at the residence of George V. Miller, in Lodi, Seneca County, at the advanced age of 96. He retained his mental faculties to the last.

The cost of completed railroads in the United States, Jan. 1, 1853, was $272,700,000, and of those in progress, $220,000,000, making an aggregate of capital invested of $592,770,000—of which the New England States have $131,940,000 in completed roads.

Nature has built us for a particular sphere, and has given us more of talent for that than any other. She has made the same difference in head-soil as in earth-soil. Each will produce something peculiar to itself if allowed.

If we scrutinize the lives of men of genius, we shall find that activity and persistence are their leading peculiarities. Obstacles cannot intimidate, nor labor weary, nor drudgery disgust them.

Letters received from Calcutta state that Capt. Hatch, of the ship Concordia, died there of cholera. The disease was subsiding, but at one time the deaths had reached 700 per day.

The earnings of the New York Central Railroad for the month of July have not been publicly reported, but the increase over the corresponding month of last year is said to be 35 per cent.

On several of the hot days of week before last, thirty horses per day dropped dead in the streets of New York. A good many of these were omnibus horses, driven by cruel drivers until they fell dead in the traces, from being overloaded and overworked.

It is reported that the authorities of New Orleans, unable to provide decent burial for the victims of pestilence, have resorted to the ancient custom of burning the dead.

Norton's Literary Gazette says that never before, probably, were so many American booksellers and publishers abroad, at one time, as at present.

Why do post-office stamps resemble idle children at school? Because they require to be well licked to make them stick to their letters.

The potato rot has appeared all over the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland.

An epidemic resembling Yellow Fever was at last accounts committing fearful ravages in the Capital of Guerredo.

The Albany Knickerbocker lately received a letter inquiring, among other things, whether pig iron was petrified pork.

It is said that Mr. John Dykes, a compositor upon the the Boston Daily Chronicle, has fallen heir to an estate of $30,000.

The earnings of the Erie Railroad for the first ten days in August indicates a gross business for the month of $400,000.

It is stated, upon the authority of The Genesee Evangelist, that Rev. Dr. Cox is about to remove from Brooklyn to Oswego.

MARRIED.

In Petersburgh, N. Y., on the 8th inst., by Rev. Azor Estee, Mr. William Briggs, of Troy, to Miss Edna Lewis, of Petersburg.

At Jericho, N. J., on the 23d, ult., by Eld. D. Clawson, Florian Joseph Wiesler to Gatharine Buhten.

On the 16th of August, by Eld. P. S. Crandall, Mr. Benjamin C. Maxson, of Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., to Mrs. Nancy Coon, of Ceres, McKean Co., Pa.

DIED.

In Brookfield, Madison Co., N. Y., Aug. 12, Widow Betsey Green, aged 75 years. Mrs. Green experienced religion in early life, and although she had never made a public profession of it; yet, such was her affection for and trust in the Saviour, that her friends feel that their loss, though great, is her eternal gain.

At Roads, on the 9th inst., John Sutton, in the 61st year of his age.

At Marlboro, N. J., on the 15th inst., Widow Amy Ayars, in the 84th year of her age. For the last two years she had not had her reason. She professed religion in early life, and was esteemed a worthy member of the church many years before her derangement. She selected the following words to be used at her funeral: "Weep not for me, but for yourselves and your children." D. C.

In Portsmouth, R. I., on the 8th of August, Mrs. Lucy Almy, wife of David Almy, and daughter of the late Dea. Daniel Babcock, of Hopkinton, aged 52 years. Mrs. Almy professed religion in early life, and connected herself with the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church of Hopkinton, of which she remained a member until her death.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Titsworths & Dunn, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U S. and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

Stonington Line, for Boston,

PROVIDENCE, NEW BEDFORD, TAUNTON, and NEWPORT. Inland Route, without change of cars or detention.

The steamers C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. J. M. Lewis, in connection with the Stonington and Providence, and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, (Sundays excepted,) from Pier No. 2 N. R., first wharf above Battery-place, at 5 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M., or on the arrival of the train which leaves Boston at 5½ P. M.

These steamers are unsurpassed for strength, safety, speed, comfort, and elegance. The officers are experienced and attentive.

The natural advantages of this route are superior to any other; being shorter and more direct, the trip is more pleasantly and expeditiously performed, while passengers can always rely on reaching their destination in advance of those by either of the other routes.

The COMMODORE, from New York—Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. From Stonington—Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

The C. VANDERBILT, from New York—Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. From Stonington—Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.

N. B.—Passengers on arriving at Stonington proceed immediately per steamboat train to Providence, Boston, Taunton, and New Bedford, or by accommodation train from Stonington at 6 30 A. M.

A Baggage Master accompanies the steamer and train through each way.

The steamer PERRY leaves Providence for Newport at 9 A. M., and 6 P. M., daily, except Sundays.

For passage, berths, state-rooms, or freight, application may be made at Pier No. 2, N. R., or at the office, No. 10 Battery-place.

Miscellaneous.

Daniel Webster's late Residence.

A correspondent of the Boston Daily Advertiser gives an interesting account of a recent visit to the farm of Mr. Webster, from which we copy the following extract:—

"Everything at the house at Marshfield, is just as Mr. Webster left it. There is no one living in the house except the one or two servants who take care of it; but it does not have the desolate air of a vacant establishment. One almost expects to see some of the family come forward to give the cordial welcome which always greeted visitors there. We went through the house. We paused a few moments in silence, in the room in which the great statesman breathed his last. We seated ourselves in the beautiful library, the shelves, of which are still loaded with books, and the walls adorned with the well-known pictures.

The farm is carried on under the same superintendence and in the same manner as formerly, the general directions and supplies being furnished by Mr. Paige, in behalf of the trustees. It is thought important to ascertain whether it will sustain itself, and how much income, if any, can be realized from it. It thus presents the same general appearance as formerly.

We walked across part of the estate to the grave. It lies, as you know, just at the edge of the old burying-ground, where repose the remains of some of the old Pilgrims, on a rising ground which overlooks the ocean. The mound of earth which covers the tomb, bears a slab of marble with the simple inscription "Daniel Webster." In front are the small monuments to Mr. Webster's first wife, and the children. Two other monuments, one with the names of two of Mr. Webster's children who died in infancy, and two of Mr. Fletcher Webster's children, and the other with the epitaph which he directed for himself, are ready. All these things were either arranged by Mr. Webster himself, or since his decease, in accordance with his own specific directions. The epitaph has been engraved upon the marble, line for line, precisely in accordance with his request.

Small Cattle.

A writer for the New York Tribune notices some of the great and small cattle on exhibition near the Crystal Palace. From his article we clip the following notice of several small specimens of the bovine race:—

The first we will notice are two, a Bull and Heifer, of the sacred cattle of Burmah. The Bull is 32 inches high, 46 inches long on the back, from horns to tail. The latter is very slim, with a heavy black bush nearly sweeping the ground; legs slim, with hoofs like a deer; ears thin and soft; horns like a small common bull, wide spread, and dark colored. Just at the point of intersection of the neck with the shoulders, rises a hump, 6 inches high, 10 long, and 4 thick at the base. The color of the body is a curious gray, somewhat like a gray deer; the face white, with black ring around the eyes, and dark nostrils; the hump, feet, and extremity of the tail nearly all black. The hair short and rather stiff. The Heifer is 30 inches high, and proportionably smaller than her mate, with much shorter horns. Her color is that of a red gray deer, with scarcely a white spot about her. The male is supposed to be six years old—the female we judge is not so old. They were imported into Boston, and brought to this city within the last three or four weeks.

Another equally great curiosity, and almost equally small cattle, may be seen along side of another pair of great Oxen. This is a Shetland Cow, 8 years old, 31 inches high, gray black color, one lop horn, and in all appearance a perfect miniature of our common Cows. She gives about 7 quarts of milk a day, when fresh, and has one calf—a half-bred Devon—by her side, of the same hight, and somewhat heavier, 20 months old, which sucks the dam, and at the same time gives milk herself, about a quart a day; of course, without ever having had a calf. It is said this would be a good breed of Cows for keeping in cities, and on ship-board, as they need much less room and food than larger animals, while they give milk enough for a small family. These Cattle are owned by Jas. Bicknell, of Erie County, who has also three very curious Sheep, of the Bakewell breed, of the ages of 2, 4 and 6 years, which have never been sheared, and the fleece upon the oldest one is estimated to weigh 35 pounds; the live weight of the Sheep being 335, and the wool three feet long, which seems to twist naturally into ringlets resembling carded rolls.

Men and Women Boarders.

Under the title of "Mrs. Grumble's Soliloquy," Fanny Fern contributes the following to the Musical World and Times:—

"There's no calculating the difference between men and women boarders. Here's Mr. Jones, been in my house these six months, and no more trouble to me than my gray kitten. If his bed is shook up once a week, and his coats, cravats, love-letters, cigars, and patent-leather boots, left undisturbed in the middle of the floor, he is as contented as a pedagogue in vacation time. Take a woman to board, and (if it is perfectly convenient) she would like drapery, instead of drop-curtains; she'd like the windows altered to open at the top, and a wardrobe for her flounced dresses, and a few more nails, and another shelf in her closet, and a bench to put her feet on, and a little rocking-chair, and a big looking-glass, and a pea-green shade for her gas-burner. She would like breakfast about ten minutes later than your usual hour; tea ten minutes earlier; and the gong, which shocks her nerves so, altogether dispensed with. She can't drink coffee, because it is exhilarating; broma is too insipid, and chocolate too heavy. She don't fancy cocoa. 'English breakfast tea' is the only beverage which agrees with her delicate spinster organization. She can't digest a roasted, or a fried dish; she might possibly peck at an egg, if it were broiled with one eye on the watch. Pastry she never eats, unless she knows from what dairy the butter came which enters into its composition. Every article of food prepared with butter, salt, pepper, mustard, vinegar, or oil; or bread that is made with yeast, soda, milk or saleratus, she decidedly rejects. She is constantly washing out little duds of laces, collars, handkerchiefs, chemisettes and stockings, which she festoons up to the front windows to dry; giving passers-by the impression that your house is occupied by a blanchisseuse; then jerks the bell-wire for an hour or more, for relays of hot smoothing-irons, to put the finishing stroke to her operations. She is often afflicted with interesting little colds and influenzas, requiring the immediate consolation of a doze of hot lemonade or ginger tea; choosing her time for these complaints when the kitchen fire has gone out, and the servants are on a furlough. Oh! nobody knows, but those who've tried, how immensely troublesome women boarders are! I'd rather have a whole regiment of men boarders. All you have to do is, to wind them up in the morning with a powerful cup of coffee, give them a carte blanche to smoke, and a night-key, and your work is done."

A Story of Suffering at Sea.

On the 25th of February last, the schooner S. R. Soper, Capt. Samuel Soper, sailed from Provincetown for a cruise in the Atlantic Ocean for whales. Nothing unusual happened until about the last of July, when one morning a school of whales was discovered. Three boats were immediately lowered, each containing five men, and commanded by the captain, first mate, and second mate. The second mate killed the first whale, and towed him to the ship. The other whales then started off, pursued by the boats of the captain and mate. This was in longitude about 77 and latitude about 34. They continued the pursuit, and finally the captain fastened to and killed a forty-barrel sperm whale. By this time, night began to set in, and no vessel was to be seen from the boats in any direction. This was rather startling, as they had no provisions or water on board, but upon consultation they concluded to stick by the whale until morning, in the hope that with returning daylight they should be able to find their vessel. When morning broke, the horizon was anxiously scanned, but no vessel was to be seen.

All that day was spent in cruising round after her, and at night another consultation was held. They had compasses, but no time, and the captain ordered that during the night they should each go in a certain direction, and meet in the morning. The mate, Mr. Samuel Genn, of Provincetown, states that he followed these directions carefully, but when morning dawned, the captain's boat was not to be found. He spent a portion of the next day in searching for the captain, but finding his efforts vain, and that his crew were beginning to suffer dreadfully for food and water, they being in an open whaleboat, without protection from the fierce heat of the sun, he concluded that it was best for him to shape his course for the nearest land, which he did by steering a N. N. W. course. They had a sail, but it was not of much use. Their sufferings from this time cannot be described. But once they saw a vessel. She was at some distance, and the sea was very rough, so that the mate deemed it impossible with safety to steer for her; and as those on board did not see the boat, they witnessed her disappearance with the feeling that their last hope was leaving them.

It now began to blow severely, and the mate was obliged to rig a "drug" with his oars and whaling lines, with which he was enabled to lie to without danger. When the gale ceased, he again put sail on the boat, but the crew were almost at the last gasp of suffering; their lips were black, and death seemed to stare them in the face. For the last twenty hours, so great were the pangs of thirst that they began to drink salt water, which generally brings on delirium and death in a short time. At the end of the sixth day they made Cape Fear, and went ashore, reaching Beaufort, N. C. Mr. Genn and one of the crew, Cornelius Price, of Boston, worked their passage in a vessel to New York, and reached this city on Sunday last, and are now at Provincetown. What has been the fate of the captain and the five men in his boat is unknown. They may have discovered the vessel, or they may have reached the shore. If they did not, they have probably all perished. There was a short rain one day while they were on board the boat, but they had no means to catch it. The second mate and five men are on board the vessel, and she is, therefore, probably safe, and will probably arrive at some Atlantic port in a few days. The face of the mate still bears the impress of the terrible sufferings he has undergone, in parched and blackened lips, and sunken and death-like features. [Boston Traveler.

Escape of a Convict.

On Saturday last we visited Sing Sing, where we learned that a convict escaped from the State Prison the day previous in a very ingenious and skillful manner. James Dunn, the convict in question, although but twenty years old, has served one term in the prison, and had been but a few months returned on another sentence, which was for life. He worked in a weaver shop, and managed to procure strips of India Rubber cloth, with which he made a tube, some six feet long and water-tight. To one end of this he attached a bag of the same material, and shaped like a duck. During the forenoon of Friday he left his shop and managed to elude all the vigilant keepers until he reached the river, where he threw off and secreted all his clothing, and with his India Rubber life-preserver plunged into the water. Sinking to the bottom, he kept one end of the tube in his mouth, while the bag floated upon the surface, through which the air passed to supply respiration. In this manner he went some distance from the shore, and drifting with the tide he passed the guards and keepers, and all the men employed along the prison docks, the railroad, Robinson's dock, the Farmer's dock at the lower landing of the village, Mansion House dock, and up to Colyer's dock, a distance of half a mile. At this point some part of his pipe gave way, and he had to rise to the surface and swim ashore. Here he found a number of men and boys who were astonished to see a stranger swimming from a bay four miles wide at midday, and under the burning sun of one of the hottest days of the season. On gaining the shore he remarked with perfect composure, that he had "won the bet!" Some one inquired where his clothes were. He pointed to the upper landing, and remarked that he had "left them up there when he went in." He then started up the railroad track, and meeting a Mr. Fowler, he pointed to a person still further north and inquired of Mr. Fowler "if that man had a bundle of clothing?" He received a negative answer, when he replied that "he had stolen his clothes while he went in swimming," and then started off a few hundred yards, when he left the road, and entered Gen. Van Wyck's grove. Soon after he was observed crossing the yards and fields toward the Dale Cemetery, in the same condition in which he left the river, since which he has not been seen. Early History of a Suicide.

From the New Orleans Delta.

Franklin Gray, who committed suicide a few days ago, by throwing himself before the cars at Rochelle, near New York City, and whose case, from his domestic relations, appears to excite great sympathy in the North, is very well known in the West and South. He lived at Helena, Arkansas, and kept an indifferent drinking house, with a room for faro and other games. He was a professional gambler, and having been detected in some tricks at faro, by which he had attempted to defraud a respectable gentleman of Phillips County, Arkansas, out of a considerable sum of money, the citizens becoming enraged, demolished the groggery, tore down the building, and obliged him to leave, without his coat, at midnight. He went to San Francisco, and, by the successful tricks of his trade, accumulated a large fortune, and turned up in Washington, about a year ago, as the millionaire Col. Gray, one of the merchant princes of San Francisco. He stayed at Brown's Hotel—had a fine suite of rooms—dressed superbly—effulgent with brilliants and diamonds of the first water. He was not long in making a decided sensation in that diplomatic city.

He soon acknowledged the beauty and charms of his present wife, whom he had met at one of the weekly soirees at Brown's Hotel, where the wealth of Col. Gray obtained for him a facile entree, and, through the influence of disinterested friends, he laid at the feet of the young lady's mother, his diamonds, money, and rent-roll. The bait was too tempting to be rejected. The engagement became the topic of public conversation. The lady's mother was cautioned against the connection, but the rent-roll won the day. The wedding took place in the church, and was a grand affair. Senator Gwin gave away the bride. The magnificent trousseau of diamonds, with which he presented his bride, was displayed to the public gaze, and it is feared that many a fair maiden sighed because she was not the fortunate recipient of Col. Gray's vows and money.

About nineteen years ago, Franklin Gray married the widow of a respectable lawyer of North Carolina, much his senior, but a showy and intelligent lady. It was the same Mr. and Mrs. Gray who were mixed up in the rumored attempt to poison with champagne Gen. Santa Ana, when a prisoner, after his capture at San Jacinto. He came to Arkansas from Texas, and lived in that State from 1837 until this affair at Helena. Often wretchedly poor, and eking out a living by the precarious result of his profession, his wife, who heartily abhorred their means of existence, became dissatisfied, and Gray and herself quarreled and separated. Gray became rich, and married the beautiful Miss French, without having a divorce, and the first Mrs. Gray went to New York and threatened a prosecution for bigamy against her legal husband. His will in favor of his second wife will be legally tested by the party claiming priority as wife.

Extraordinary Discovery.

On Monday last, says the Zanesville (O.) Times of July 16, whilst some hands on the Cincinnati, Wilmington and Zanesville railroad, at Cusack's Mill, about five miles south of this city, were quarrying stone, a human skeleton was found embedded in rock, on a bluff bank on the south branch of Jonathan's Creek, thirty feet from the surface. A small fissure in the rock of perhaps two inches in width, opened to the resting place of these remains, which, in all human probability, may have been deposited there centuries ago. The rock contained an identation of the greater part of the body, as perfect as though moulded of potters' clay. From the hip to the foot, particularly, this sarcophagus was as complete as carving could have made it. The proportions, curvatures, &c., of the limb were distinct and regular, and indicated that the skeleton had been that of a person of full size.

How, and at what period of the world, these remains were deposited where found, furnishes a wide theme for conjecture, as well as a subject for the discussion of geologists. The rational probabilities are that at some very ancient period this body had been washed from the creek into the bank of the stream, and that the continual deposit of sand around it formed into rock, which has been increasing for ages, as ages only could have formed the immense amount of very hard sand-stone which surrounded it.

This discovery establishes what past history has heretofore entirely failed to establish, to wit; the phenomenon of a human skeleton within a body of solid rock. We have no hesitation in believing, from the appearance of the rock, that at one period the portion surrounding this body was entire and solid, but that the undermining of the rock by the stream, or some great convulsion of nature, had opened the fissure which existed when these remains were discovered. Toads and other reptiles have frequently been found embedded in solid rock, but history gives no account of the discovery of human remains in such situation.

We saw this skeleton, and the rock from which it was taken, the day after it had been discovered. The bones were in a good state of preservation.

New Printing Machine.

In turning over the leaves of the Report on Patents for the year 1852, we met with the following brief notice of a very interesting improvement in Printing Presses:—

"The invention consists in the introduction of conical inking and impression cylinders. The form is screwed on a revolving disk, either vertical or horizontal in its revolution; the form passes under the inking rollers and under the printing cylinders to receive the impression, so that one impression is made at each revolution of the form. The conical impression cylinder receives the paper under a clamp hinged to the cylinder, and the clamp is returned at the proper moment to deliver the sheet."

The inventor of this simple but ingenious press is Mr. John G. Nicolay, of Illinois, quite a youth. Being a practical printer, but in his remoteresidence never having seen a machinepress, he thought a great deal on the subject, and at length matured the invention, the originality of which obtained for it a patent. We saw him often here during the time his application was before the Patent Office, and were as much pleased with his modesty and intelligence as with the ingenuity of his invention, which appeared to us to furnish a press at once simple, efficient and cheap. [National Intelligencer.

Important Regulations for Steamboats.—The Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steamboats held a meeting at Pittsburgh on the 1st inst., and continued by adjournments up to the 5th. They adopted resolutions, says the National Intelligencer, directing the inspectors to again call the special attention of owners of steamers to the importance of having, where practicable, a steam pipe from the boilers to convey steam into the hold, for the more effectual extinguishment of fires; also, that shoulder-straps be attached to life-preservers, or other means used for preventing them from getting into an improper position, to the hazard of life; that printed notices be posted in all state-rooms or berths, informing passengers where the life-preservers may be found, and the manner of using them; that fire hose be either constantly connected with the pumps, or placed in a convenient and conspicuous position therefore; that explosive articles be conveyed only in secure metal-lined chests, and that materials which ignite by friction be kept at a safe distance from explosives; together with other regulations of a more technical description, but extremely useful and requisite.

Premiums for the Young Ladies.—P. T. Barnum has offered the following list of premiums to be competed for at the Fair of the Fairfield County Agricultural Society, at Stamford, Ct., on the 6th, 7th and 8th of October, by ladies under twenty-one years of age. There are seven premiums for horseback riding, ranging from $25 to a gold pencil, open to unmarried ladies under twenty-one, from all parts of the State; three premiums for butter, three for cheese, three for bread, five for darning, and four for shirt making, which are to be competed for by the young ladies of Fairfield County only. No fee will be required from any person competing for any of the Barnum premiums. Young ladies intending to compete at horsebrck riding will please send their names to John H. Sherwood, Secretary Fairfield County Agricultural Society, by or before the 15th of September.

A Barber in Luck.—The New Haven Palladium states that the Emperor of Hayti caused, through an agent, an advertisement to be inserted in a New York paper, inquiring for the whereabouts of a colored man, whose name was given, setting forth that he would hear something to his advantage on making himself known. The person has been found, and proves to be a very intelligent man and capital barber, in Bridgeport, where he has been for some years doing a good business. He appears to be the second cousin of the Emperor, who wishes the barber to reside in Hayti, accept a dukedom, or some other high office in the realm. It is said that the fortunate individual is so much of a Yankee that he doubts whether he shall accept the offer. Nevertheless, he intends to make a voyage to Hayti, and see how things look there.

It's What You Spend.—"It's what thee'll spend, my son," said a sage old Quaker, "not what thee'll make, which will decide whether thee's to be rich or not." The advice was trite, for it was Franklin's in another shape: "Take care of the pennies and the pounds will take care of themselves." But it cannot be too often repeated. Men are continually indulging in small expenses, saying to themselves that it is only a trifle, yet forgetting that the aggregate is serious—that even the seashore is made up of petty grains of sand. Ten cents a day even is thirty-six dollars and a half a year, and that is the interest of a capital of six hundred dollars. The man who saves ten cents a day only, is so much richer than him who does not, as if he owned a life estate in a house worth six hundred dollars.

VARIETY.

The Hartford (Ct.) Republican is responsible for the following: "We heard the other day a good and true story of a Connecticut parson. His country parish raised his salary from $300 per annum to $400. The good man objected—for three reasons. 'First,' said he, 'because you can't afford to give me more than $300. Second, because my preaching isn't worth more than $300. Third, and last, because I have to collect my salary, which heretofore has been the hardest part of my labors among you. If I have to collect an additional hundred it will kill me!'"

A Sioux warrior, it is said, passing a daguerrean gallery in New York, stopped suddenly and leveled his gun at the show-case hanging outside. He had discovered the daguerreotype of Hole-in-the-Day, his mortal and hereditary Chippewa enemy, and mistaking it for the original, was after his scalp with a sharp knife.

King George II., having ordered his gardens at Kew and Richmond to be opened for the admission of the public, during part of the summer, his gardener, finding it troublesome, complained to him that the people gathered flowers. "What!" said the monarch, "are my people fond of flowers? Then plant some more."

A penny at five per cent., simple interest, for eighteen hundred years, amounts to seven shillings and seven-pence halfpenny, but at compound interest, it would be a larger sum than could be contained in six hundred millions of globes, each equal to the earth in magnitude, and all of solid gold.

Truth never shuns the light; it asks no shield, wants no panoply; it courts inquiry, and answers every honest question; like virtue and beauty, it is lovliest when unrobed; like its great author, it needs no sword of power or priestly robe to give it force and vitality in the execution of its mission.

Whoever plants a tree or a shrub, or lays a public walk, or helps convert an unsightly ditch of water lazily working its way within ragged banks, into objects on which the eye loves to rest, is a public benefactor.

During the year 1852, of 89,135,729 railway passengers in Great Britain, 216 were killed and 485 injured. During the same year, in the State of New York, of 7,440,653 passengers, 248 were killed and 268 injured.

The new stone church, at Pittsfield, is to be used for the worship of God alone, by a vote of the society. The Springfield Republican inquires if this cuts off the use of it for the display of new bonnets and dresses, and the critical examination thereof?

There is said to be a pork and lard shop somewhere, that has a sign stuck up inside, "No whistling allowed while sausages are lying on the counter."

Union Academy.

C. ROLLIN BURDICK, A. B., Graduate of Rochester University, Principal.

Mrs. H. A. BURDICK, Preceptress.

This institution, located at Shiloh, Cumberland Co., N. J., three and a half miles from Bridgeton, the county seat, and thirty-eight miles south from Philadelphia, will open its first term for the year 1853–4, on Wednesday, Aug. 23, continuing 14 weeks.

The officers, feeling grateful for past favors, and confident of giving satisfaction, solicit a large attendance for the coming year. The teachers flatter themselves that they can give satisfactory instruction in all the branches usually taught in Academies. Young gentlemen and ladies preparing for College, can here fit themselves for an advanced standing, and thus save considerable expense. A competent Pianist will be secured.

Good Board can be had at the Boarding Hall, or in private families, on reasonable terms.

Terms.—Tuition, settled in advance, from $3 50 to $5 00. Incidentals, 25 cents. Piano music, $10 00. Drawing, crayoning, landscape painting, and painting in water colors, $2 00 each.

Hon. LEWIS HOWELL, President.

Calendar.

The ensuing academic year is divided as follows:—

First Term commences August 31, 1853; closes Dec. 6, 1853.

Second Term commences Dec. 8, 1853; closes March 21, 1854.

Third Term commences March 23, 1854; closes June 27, 1854.

Information.

The Trustees deem it justice to say, that, having adopted a radical change of policy, by which they relieve the Faculty from all pecuniary responsibility, they design to place the School upon a firm and permanent basis, and give it a character of respectability among the first grade of Academies in our country. Grateful for past favors, they are determined to extend their sphere of usefulness, and thus command a greater degree of respect, and a still more liberal patronage from the public.

Discipline.

It is the policy of our Board to teach young men and young women to govern themselves; while at the same time it is expected that our Faculty will aim, in the most prudent and efficient manner possible, to secure that systematic order in all their exercises, which shall prepare students for the responsible duties of active life. While we cultivate the intellect, it shall be our aim also to develop those nobler faculties of the soul, which shall prepare the young to become useful and influential members of society.

This Seminary is confidently commended to the public as a first-class Institution, supplied in an eminent degree with all the facilities of education usually found in the Colleges and Universities of this country. It is provided with ten departments of Instruction, having an able and experienced Instructor at the head of each, thus giving such a division of labor as can alone secure the highest ability in conducting each department. Students can here complete an entire course of collegiate education, or be prepared for usefulness in mechanical, agricultural, or commercial pursuits, or for entering immediately upon professional studies. The Teachers' Department supplies the public with at least one hundred and fifty experienced teachers of common schools annually, and the Department of Elementary and Agricultural Chemistry affords the young farmer all the facilities desirable in the best agricultural schools. Having recently completed another spacious and elegant edifice for a chapel and recitation rooms, and being now engaged in extensive enlargements and alterations for the accommodation of a much larger number of students than hitherto, the Trustees express their intention that the high character which this Institution has acquired, for thorough instruction, for strict moral and social training, and the best of educational advantages at a very moderate expense, shall be fully sustained. The location, on the N. Y. and Erie Railroad, two miles from the Alfred depot, is romantic, retired, and one of the healthiest in the world. Circulars, &c., gratuitous, on application to Prof. W. C. Kenyon, or to Rev. N. V. Hull, Pres. of Trustees, Alfred Center, Allegany Co., N. Y.

The Sabbath Recorder.

☞ Among the recent converts to the Bible Sabbath in Wisconsin, is a foreign gentleman, formerly a Lutheran minister, who is represented as a ripe scholar and a devoted Christian. He was baptized by Eld. Varnum Hull, and is now, we believe, a member of the church in Albion. In our recent visit to that region, several papers written by him were placed in our hands, one of which we give below, and others will probably appear hereafter. The manuscript comes to us in perfect order for the printer; and we think the articles will be relished none the less for the occasional idiomatic expressions they contain.

SPIRITUAL LIGHT, FANATICISM, AND LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE.

In all undertakings of man, he ought, as a guide, to have light in his reason, and in the heart a propensity to follow that light. God himself has provided, that the reason should not be without guidance, and the will not without inclination for motives. God has done still more; he has given us that feeling we experience, by the name of Conscience. Though this feeling may not always exalt itself a judge of the light, it judges absolutely of digressions from that light.

The guide God gave to us, as men, is Reason. We feel this only in its faculty and operations. Its object is to direct the heart. But the heart is a disobedient subject. The Conscience was therefore given as a guardian of the heart.

In the external things which encompass us, reason extends its faculties much farther than the eye. It determines immeasurable distances, and concludes from facts known to facts unknown. It measures powers and effects, causes and consequences. But, with all its power, it must acknowledge its limitation. It calculates the return of the comet, but the essence of the dust which is trampled upon by the feet is a mystery, whose shell it has not yet been able to penetrate.

In all the interior proceedings of man, which relate to his higher welfare—his peace, his hope, his desires and most important wants—the reason offers him its guidance. But when it has peregrinated all its fields, some questions always remain, which the reason leaves wholly unanswered. A kind of gloominess, which stops with possibility—an anticipation, which but little satisfies—is all the harvest our soul gathers, although this soul is created so that it aspires after certainty.

God has even provided for this our want. He has given us, as Christians, his sacred Word, as a guide, where our reason leaves us doubting, without power and without restoration. May we watch ourselves for that error to put the guidance of the word of God in opposition with that of the reason; for the guidance of both are given by the same hand. A greater light is not opposed to a smaller. An intellectual light and a spiritual light are only separated by the quantity and efficacy.

Spiritual light is gathered from the gospel, which is called the law of Christ. No other fountain is shown unto us. God has, through Christ, given this light unto mankind, sighing beneath the burden of misery. The reason has a right to examine it, the will to refuse it; but the conscience does not conceal the responsibility. What more should God do?

Those who unknowingly live in darkness, God only judges; those who live in open transgressions, bear their judgment in their own conscience; those who confide themselves exclusively to the guidance of reason, without disturbing others' peace, without corrupting others' innocence by their example, and without recruiting followers for infidelity by ensnaring arguments—those stand or fall to their own Master.

Those who gather a spiritual light from the doctrine of the gospel, must watch carefully, that their own spirit does not insensibly insert any thing that is either above or against what the Spirit of God operates by the Word. All the merciful purpose of God with his word about the doctrine of redemption, is to create a spiritual man of the carnal. But it is here necessary to know what the Scriptures call a spiritual man. He is a spiritual man who, roused by his soul's experienced and acknowledged higher wants, has searched for peace and found it through the redemption of Jesus Christ, without carnal security for the past, without stubborn temerity for the present, and a hope without a claim of merit for the future. He who is such in Christ, is a new being, or, as the Scripture calls it, a new creature. But even in this situation we always remain men, not without carnality, but raised above the carnal mind; not without insidious temptations, but by and through faith victorious over the attacks of our carnal inclinations; not without trials, but in the trying hour steadfast through the power of God's word, experienced of and kept in the heart. It is the power of God which so secures our hearts, and it is the gospel of Christ that bears this peace to the heart.

But if we look for spiritual light beyond the word of the gospel in an immediate spiritual guidance; if we think of a spirit beyond the word; if we trust in a supernatural influence, contrary to the promises of God and his revealed will about our guidance—the light itself will then become darkness, and the guidance, not of God, but of ourselves. We have some rules by which the light may be tried. The same word that gives us the pure light, gives us even its true marks.

So says the word: "Who is a wise man, and indued with knowledge among you? Let him show out of a good conversation his work, with meekness of wisdom. But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, and devilish; for where envy and strife are, there is confusion and every evil work. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy." James 3: 13, 17. This is the stamp of light, and it deceiveth not. Hereby can those who exalt themselves of their spiritual light, and call themselves spiritual men, know if they are guided by truth or error.

But now the question is, If they have right to claim liberty of conscience. Certainly they have. So long as the error abides inactive within their conscience, the civil law has no authority over their belief, but the duty of the church is to enlighten, admonish, and with gentleness correct them. So long as the error does not break out in crime, it cannot be subject for the criminal code. The Christian society (the church) has taken another plan against errors. It provides itself with Christian teachers, meetings for worshiping God, public and private institutions for good instructions, &c. What those things cannot reform, the dread of the law cannot. The sword must leave the conscience undisturbed.

But it is different when the error comes forward in open action, contrary to laws enacted by the community of the country. When seeds of discord and crimes are sowed in the hearts of ignorant and innocent members, then it belongs to the civil power to stretch forward its arm, not to violate consciences, which even in their error have their sacred rights, but to restrain and check the eruptions of the erroneous conscience, for which every member of a community has an equal right to be protected. The conscience has an inalienable right to liberty—it is resposible before God alone; but crime has no liberty—it is responsible even unto God and man.

THE WORK TO BE DONE—NO. 3.

2. We may expect all this—yea, more—because God can make every event that transpires among the nations answer the great purposes he has in view. They are all calculated to bring about those external and internal revolutions, in destroying tyranny, idolatry, and heresy in the earth. They have produced similar effects in regard to individuals, and they will produce similar effects in the final conversion of the nations of the earth. Haughty despots must and will cease to rule. Crowned heads must and will be brought low. The time will come when the strong will no longer oppress the weak. The poor will have the gospel preached to them, and they shall be "rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom." Popish tyranny is the most cruel and despotic, because it enslaves the mind; yet its strength and power are rapidly waning, notwithstanding the rapid increase of papists in America by emigration. Soon they may look to the nations of Europe in vain for protection, for their kingdoms and their churches must and will be overturned, for "the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

3. Finally, God has expressly promised to do these things, by the use of and through the instrumentalities we have mentioned, the Holy Spirit being the great and efficient agent. There are many promises which we might bring to our aid; but we will notice only a few of them:—

"Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themlseves, and the rulers take counsel against the Lord, and against his Anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision. Then shall he speak to them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure. Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thy inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

"The Lord said unto my lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool."

"Rule thou in the midst of thine enemies."

"The people shall be willing in the day of thy power."

"I saw in the night vision, and behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him; and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, that shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

These predictions stand; they can not fail; they are connected with the veracity of God; and sooner will his throne crumble, than his word, that has gone forth out of his mouth, not be fulfilled. He will overturn, overturn, overturn it, until He shall come whose right it is, and he will give it him. Some of us have just passed the meridian of life; some are aged indeed, having passed their three score years and ten; and what remarkable changes have they passed through! Some of them have been pleasing and encouraging; others have been painful and productive of much sorrow. How fearfully has death reigined in our midst, and taken some whom we believed were designed for great usefulness in overturning, and accomplishing the work of God. Alas! how limited is our knowledge in the mysteries of the plans of God's working! We are often asking ourselves the question, Who, who are to fill their places, and stand, as they have stood, in the front of the battle, and fall, as they have fallen, with their armor on?

In taking a view of our past history, we may with much propriety ask ourselves the question, What have we done? Astonishment takes hold of us; and we can but say, Lord, have mercy upon us; forgive us the past, and give us grace to be more faithful in the future. The nations of the earth are now passing through a very important crisis, it is not for us to predict or to know what will be the final issue. The Bible predicts important changes, that will result in the advancement of God's glory; but the true interpretation of prophecy cannot be known until it is fulfilled. May the speedy manner in which Satan's kingdom and dominion are to be overturned, awaken among us a becoming and corresponding zeal for God and for his church, that her gifts may be multiplied, her graces revived, and each, through a becoming zeal, "show forth the praise of Him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvelous light." There must be a willingness on our part to make a sacrifice in some degree commensurate to the importance of the work that is to be done; and, without this, although the world will be subdued, and He will overturn, overturn, overturn it, yet we shall not be partakers of the spoil.

W. B. GILLETT.

SHILOH, N. J.

THE STORM OF 1703.

For one hundred and fifty years past, an annual sermon has been preached in the Baptist meeting-house, Little Wild street, London, on the twenty-seventh of November, in commemoration of the extraordinary storm of Nov. 27, 1703, which was considered the most terrific tempest throughout Europe, which the world has known since the universal deluge. Its moral lessons were considered so important that a member of the church left a sum of money, the interest of which should be appropriated forever to support a sermon on each anniversary of the event, which is usually delivered by some of the most eminent ministers in the British metropolis, and has obtained the name of "The Storm Sermon." Several of them have been printed.

The late Dr. Samuel Stennett, a pastor of the Little Wild street church, and author of the hymns which bear his name, in his printed sermon on the subject, in endeavoring to account for the storm, says, that "having most probably taken its rise in America, it made its way across the western ocean, and collecting confederate matter in its passage over the seas, spent its fury on those parts of the world, whither this army of terrors was principally commissioned." A strong west wind set in about the middle of the month, the force of which increased every day till the 27th. On the 24th the storm commenced, which reached its height three days afterwards. The violence of the wind produced a hoarse, dreadful noise, like one continued peal of thunder; and the excessive darkness of the nights added greatly to the horror of the scene.

Many lives were lost, especially in London, not a few meeting death in its most terrific forms. And great indeed was the loss of property. In London and its vicinity, more than eight hundred dwelling-houses were laid in ruins, above two thousand chimneys fell to the ground, and "the lead which covered the roofs of one hundred churches, was rolled up and hustled in prodigious quantities to great distances."

Nor was the devastation less throughout the country. In one extensive plain on the banks of the Severn, not less than fifteen thousand sheep were driven into the river and drowned; and in the county of Kent alone, more than two hundred and fifty thousand trees were torn up by the roots.

The ravages of this awful storm were at sea still more tremendous. It was computed that not less than three hundred ships were entirely destroyed, among which were fifteen of the British Royal Navy, containing more than two thousand seamen, who "sunk as lead in the mighty waters." The whole loss of property was estimated at four millions of pounds in money, of lives about eight thousand, and of cattle without number.

Towards the evening of the twenty-seventh, it pleased God gradually to abate the severity of the storm, till it became an entire calm; and men left the retreats in which they had taken refuge, to view "the desolations which God had made in the earth." It will be readily supposed that this was done with a variety of feelings, in accordance with their different characters. In many cases, those who had been most filled with terror and confusion, having had their fears removed, dreadfully perverted its moral tendency, and proved that "let favor be showed to be wicked, yet will they do wickedly." Shakspeare's plays of the Tempest and Macbeth were twice acted in the week succeeding this awful event, and one of them exactly a week after the storm had arrived at its greatest fury. On the whole, however, the general impression was salutary, and He who brought the stormy wind out of his treasures, caused it to fulfill his word. Royal authority appointed a day of humiliation and prayer, and the sense of the nation was expressed by immense crowds of all classes who attended public worship on that solemn day. Many reviewed with humble gratitude the deliverances which God had wrought for them. [Watch. and Reflect.

THINK OF JESUS.

Doth sorrow's shadow hover o'er thee?
Then think of Him!
Is toil, and care, and pain before thee?
Then think of Him!
Think of Him on earth descending,
'Neath thy sins and sorrows bending,
With thy griefs his bosom rending—
Oh, think of Him!

If morning's light to joy awaken,
Oh, think of Him!
Should evening find thee lone, forsaken,
Still think of Him!
Should Time's hand of friends bereave thee,
And thy brightest hopes deceive thee,
Think of One who will not leave thee—
Oh, think of Him;

When stormy passions rise within thee,
Oh, think of Him!
When earthly pleasure lures to win thee,
Then think of Him!
Though the cup of anguish draining,
Cease thy wearied soul's complaining;
See the Lamb in glory reigning!
And fly to Him!

THE CHRISTIAN TRAVELER.

BY A CANADIAN MERCHANT.

Having tarried a few days in a beautiful village of the West, I embarked in a vessel which was crossing one of the great lakes. Three other individuals had taken passage, and night coming on found us waiting for a breeze.

About 9 o'clock, as the sails were hoisted, another passenger came on board. When we had cleared the harbor, he entered the cabin, and seemed to suppose that he was alone; for we had all retired to our berths. The lamp was burning dimly on the table, but it afforded sufficient light for me to discover that he was young. Seating himself beside it, he drew a book from his pocket and read a few minutes. Suddenly, from on deck, was heard the voice of the captain uttering oaths, terrific beyond description. The youth arose, laid his book on the chair, and kneeling beside it, in a low whisper engaged in prayer. I listened attentively, and though his soul seemed to burn within him, I could gather only an occasional word, or part of a sentence, such as "mercy," "dying heathen," "sinners," &c. Presently he seemed in an agony of spirit for these swearers, and could scarcely suppress his voice while pleading with God to have mercy on them. My soul was stirred within me. There was a sacredness in this place, and I was self-condemned, knowing that I also professed the name of Jesus, and had retired with my fellow-passengers to rest, not having spoken of God, or committed myself to his care.

Early in the morning I was awakened by a loud voice at the door of the companion-way—"Here! whose tracts are these?"—followed by other voices in threats and imprecations against tract distributors, Bethels, temperance societies, &c.

I thought of the young stranger, and feared they would execute their threats upon him; but he calmly said, "Those tracts, sir, are mine. I have but a few, as you see; but they are very good, and you may take one, if you wish. I brought them one board to distribute, but you were all too busy last night." The sailor smiled, and walked away, making no reply.

We were soon called to breakfast, with the captain and mate. When we were seated at the table—"Captain," said our young companion, "as the Lord supplies all our wants, if neither you nor the passengers object, I should like to ask his blessing on our repast."

"If you please," replied the captain, with apparent good-will. In a few minutes the cook was on deck, and informed the sailors, who were instantly in an uproar, and their mouths filled with curses. The captain attempted to apologize for the profanity of his men, saying, "It was perfectly common among sailors, and they meant no harm by it."

"With your leave, Captain," said the young stranger, "I think we can put an end to it."

Himself a swearer, and having just apologized for his men, the captain was puzzled for an answer; but after a little hesitation, he replied, "I might as well attempt to sail against a head wind as to think of such a thing."

"But I meant all I said," added the young man.

"Well, if you think it possible, you may try it," said the captain.

As soon as breakfast was over, the eldest and most profane of the sailors seated himself on the quarter-deck, to smoke his pipe. The young man entered into conversation with him, and soon drew from him the history of the adventures of his life. From his boyhood he had followed the ocean. He had been tossed on the billows in many a tempest, and visited several missionary stations in different parts of the world, and gave his testimony to the good effects of missionary efforts among the natives of the Sandwich Islands. Proud of his nautical skill, he at length boasted that he could do any thing that could be done by a sailor.

"I doubt it," said the young man.

"I can," answered the hardy tar; "and will not be outdone, my word for it."

"Well, when a sailor passes his word he ought to be believed. I know a sailor who resolved that he would stop swearing, and he did so."

"Ah!" said the old sailor, "you have anchored me. I'm fast—but I can do it."

"I know you can," said the young man, "and I hope you will anchor all your shipmates' oaths with yours."

Not a word of profanity was afterwards heard on board the vessel. During the day, as opportunity presented itself, he conversed with each sailor singly, on the subject of his soul's salvation, and gained the hearts of all.

After supper he requested of the captain the privilege of attending worship in the cabin. His wishes were complied with, and soon all on board, except the man at the helm, were assembled. The captain brought out a Bible, which he said was given him in early life by his father, with a request that he would never part with it. We listened as our friend read Matthew's account of Christ's crucifixion and resurrection; and then, looking round us, he said, "He is risen—yes, Jesus lives; let us worship him."

It was a melting scene. Knees that seldom bowed before, now knelt at the altar of prayer, while the solemnities of eternity seemed hanging over us. After prayer we went on deck and sung a hymn. It was a happy place—a floating Bethel. Instead of confusion and wrath, there were peace and solemnity. We ceased just as the setting sun was flinging upon us his last cheering rays.

The captain, deeply affected, went into the cabin, lit his lamp, took his Bible, and was engaged in reading till we had retired to rest.

After this, for three days, we regularly attended worship, and had much interesting conversation on various subjects; for there was nothing in the religion of the young stranger to repress the cheerfulness of social intercourse. From his familiarity with the Bible, his readiness in illustrating its truths and presenting its motives, and from his fearless but judicious and persevering steps, we concluded that he was a minister of the gospel. From all he saw he gathered laurels to cast at his Master's feet; and in all his movements aimed to show that eternity was not to be trifled with. A few hours before we arrived in port we ascertained that he was a mechanic.

Before we reached the wharf, the captain came forward, and with much feeling bade him farewell, and declared that he was resolved to live as he had done no longer. His wife, he said, was a Christian, and he meant to go and live with her; and added, "I have had ministers as passengers on my vessel, Sabbath days and week days, but never before have I been so touchingly reminded of the family altar where my departed parents knelt." As we left the vessel, every countenance showed that our friend had, by his decided, yet mild and Christian faithfulness, won the gratitude of many, and the esteem of all.

We soon found ourselves in a canal boat, where were about thirty passengers of various ages and characters; and my curiosity was not a little excited to learn how my companion would proceed among them. The afternoon had nearly passed away, and he had conversed with no one but myself. At length he inquired of the captain if he were willing to have prayer on board.

"I have no objection," said he, "if the passengers have not; but I shan't attend."

At an early hour the passengers were invited into the cabin, and in a few minutes the captain was seated among them. After reading a short portion of Scripture, our friend made a few appropriate remarks, and earnestly commended us to God.

As soon as he rose from prayer, a gentleman, whose head has whitened for the grave, said, "Sir, I should like to converse with you; I profess to be a Deist; I once professed religion, but now I believe it is all delusion."

"Sir," said the young man, "I respect age, and will listen to you; and, as you proceed, may perhaps ask a few questions; but I cannot debate—I can only say that I must love Jesus Christ. He died to save me, and I am a great sinner."

"I do not deny that men are sinners," said the old man, "but I don't believe in Christ."

"Will you then tell us how sinners can be saved in some other way, and God's law be honored?"

We waited in vain for a reply, when my friend proceeded:—"Not many years since, I was an infidel, because I did not love the truth, and was unwilling to examine it. Now I see my error; and the more I study the Bible, the firmer is my conviction of its truth, and that there is no way of salvation, but through a crucified Redeemer."

As the passengers sat engaged in conversation, one of them at length turned to our young friend, and related the circumstances of a murder recently perpetrated by a man in the neighborhood, while in a fit of intoxication. To this all paid the strictest attention. The captain joined them to hear the story, the conclusion of which afforded an opportunity for the stranger to begin his work. He was the advocate of temperance as well as religion, and had gained some friends to this cause.

"But," said he, at length, "though intoxication occasions an immense amount of crime and misery in our world, I recollect one instance of murder with which it had no connection." He then related, as nearly as I can remember, the following story:

"In a populous city of the East, was a man who seemed to live only for the good of others. He daily exhibited the most perfect benevolence toward his fellow-men—sought out the poor and needy, and relieved their wants—sympathized with and comforted the sick and the afflicted—and though he was rich, unsparing beneficence clothed him in poverty. He deserved the esteem of all; yet he had enemies. He took no part in politics, yet many feared that his generosity was a cloak of ambition, and that he was making friends in order to secure to himself the reins of government. Others feared that his religious views, connected with his consistent life, would expose their hypocrisy. At length a mock trial was held by an infuriated mob, and he was condemned and put to death."

"Where was that?"—"When was it?"—"Who was it?" was heard from several voices.

"It was in the city of Jerusalem, and the person was none other than the Lord Jesus Christ. By his enemies he was hung upon the cross, and for us guilty sinners he died."

Every eye was fixed upon the young man, and a solemn awe rested on every countenance. He opened a Bible which lay upon the table, and read the account of Christ's condemnation and death; the captain nodded to him as a signal for prayer, and we all again fell on our knees, while he wept over the condition of sinners, and, for the sake of Christ, besought God's mercy upon them. Here again was a floating Bethel.

In the morning, the stranger was not forgotten; and he evidently did not forget that there were immortal souls around him, hastening with him to the bar of God. During the day he conversed separately with each individual, except an elderly gentleman, who had followed him from seat to seat, and showed much uneasiness of mind. The realities of eternity were set before us, and the Holy Spirit seemed to be striving with many hearts.

As the mantle of evening was drawing around us, our friend requested an interview with the aged man.

"Yes, yes," he said, "I have been wishing all day to see you, but you have been talking with others."

He acknowledged that he had tried to be a Universalist; and though he could not rest in that belief, he never, until the previous evening, saw his lost condition. "And now," said he, "I want you to tell me what I shall do."

The young man raised his eyes to heaven, as if imploring the Spirit's influences, and then briefly explained the nature and reasonableness of repentance and faith, accompanied by a few striking illustrations in proof of the justice of God in condemning, and his mercy in pardoning sinners.

The old man saw the plan of redemption so clearly that he burst into tears, and exclaimed, "Oh, my soul! my soul! How have I sinned against God! I see it—I feel it; yes, I have sinned all my days."

"But Jesus died to save sinners," replied the young man; "will you, my friend, give him your heart?"

"O yes! yes! If I had a thousand hearts, he should have all," was the answer.

The young man turned away and wept. For some minutes silence was broken only by the deep sighs of the aged penitent. There was something in an hour like this awfully solemn. Heaven was rejoicing, I doubt not, over a returning prodigal. As he stood alone and wept, he reiterated again and again, "Yes, I will serve God; I will, I will." After a time, his feelings became more calm, and lifting his eyes toward heaven, with both hands raised, he broke out in singing—

"There shall I bathe my weary soul
In seas of heavenly rest,
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across my peaceful breast."

And then again he wept, and said, "Yes, O Jesus! precious Saviour!"

The time had come for our young friend to leave us. By his zeal in his Master's service, he had stolen our hearts and each pressed forward to express his friendship in an affectionate farewell.

Such was the influence of one individual, whose unwavering purpose it was to live for God. He felt for dying sinners, and, relying on the help of the Holy Spirit for success, labored for the salvation of souls around him. Will not the reader solemnly resolve, in God's strength, that henceforth, whether at home or abroad, he will make the glory of Christ in the salvation of men the one object of his life! When Christians universally shall do this, we may expect soon to hear the song of Zion float on every breeze—"Alleluia! the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ."

THE LATE JUSTIN EDWARDS, D. D.

A writer in the Boston Traveler gives the following sketch of the life of this distinguished man:—

Dr. Edwards was born at Westhampton, Mass., April 25th, 1787. At the age of seventeen or eighteen, he determined to obtain a liberal education, having previously devoted himself to the labors of the farm. Without the encouragement or assistance of friends, and with only the occasional aid of the minister of the parish, reading the classics under the trees in the day time, as he watched the sheep, and studying at night by the light of a pine knot, he was ready for college in eighteen months. He entered Williams College, distant about forty miles from his father's house, walking to and from his home whenever he visited it, and depending for support upon his own exertions. He graduated in 1810, with the first honors of his class.

His theological studies at the Seminary in Andover, were terminated during the second year of the course, by an urgent call from the Congregational Church in that place, which then embraced the students of the Seminary and of Phillips Academy, as well as the residents of the village. This invitation he accepted, and remained pastor of that church for fifteen years.

In January of the year 1828, having resigned his charge in Andover, to the great regret of his parishioners, he was installed the first pastor of the Salem-st. Church in Boston. Here he remained one or two years, when he was appointed Secretary and General Agent of the American Temperance Society. In this position he labored with great vigor for seven years, traveled extensively over the United States, and by his public addresses, by his letters, reports, and personal intercourse, deeply impressed the public mind with the importance of the cause, and contributed very largely to it signal success.

In 1842, he was elected President of the Theological Seminary at Andover, where he remained about six years. He then entered upon a series of efforts to promote the better observance of the Sabbath, in which he continued seven years, giving annually, as he had before done in the Temperance cause, a valuable report, the substance of which he afterward embodied in the "Sabbath Manual," published by the American Tract Society, and distributed among thousands of families. In the year 1849, he commenced a familiar Commentary upon the New Testament, which he lived to complete. It was published by the same Society, and widely circulated. At the time of his death he was engaged in a similar labor upon the Old Testament, and had nearly completed the Psalms.

His decease occurred at Bath Alum Spring, Bath county, Va., whither he had gone in the hope of alleviating a painful disease which had long subjected him to great suffering, and had exhausted a naturally robust constitution—but which he endured with uncomplaining fortitude, and which could not deter him from continuing, to a very late period of his life, his assiduous efforts for the good of his fellow men.

Money in your purse will credit you—wisdom in your head adorn you—but both, in your necessity, will serve you.

CHINA.

One of the most extraordinary movements of the present age is the Rebellion in China. For more than two hundred years, the Manchu or Tartar Dynasty has governed that vast Empire, with a rule generally supposed to be mild and equitable. The country has certainly been one of the most prosperous and happy of those which are called heathen. The administration of the government has been conducted with considerable vigor, and the people have enjoyed more security of life and property than those of most other heathen countries. And in such a remarkable degree have the industry and resources of the country been developed, that its three hundred millions of inhabitants have generally found a comfortable subsistence, notwithstanding their almost total want of intercourse with foreigners.

Nevertheless, it has been a country of injustice and misrule, of oppression and fraud, of ignorance and crime, of exactions and cruelties and violence—in short, of such violations of equity as could find encouragement only where the religion of the God of heaven is repudiated, and that of hell countenanced. There is no real happiness among the heathen; "their sorrows are multiplied that hasten after another God."

But now, as the time draws near for the Lord to appear in his glory and build up Zion, the nations of the earth are beginning to be shaken. When the Lord rises up to comfort his people, and show mercy to the afflicted, they shall come from the "land of Sinim." Isa. 49: 12. China, the Sinim of Scripture, shall be among the "many people and strong nations" that shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem. Zech. 8: 22. And that the way may be prepared for that event, it would seem that God is now putting in motion a revolution, which not only aims at the subversion of the existing dynasty, but at the complete overthrow of idolatry, with all its attendant cruelties and abominations. The letters of our missionaries, which we published last week, abundantly corroborate what has already been before the public, (though but half credited, as too good to be true,) namely, that the insurgent army is every where setting up its banners in the name of the One True God, and that the symbols of idolatrous worship are broken in pieces as it marches through the land. The Insurgents are said to be not only Christians in profession, but genuine Protestants. Were it a Roman Catholic movement, the French would undoubtedly sympathize in it. But the French Consul at Shanghae denounces it as a conspiracy got up by Protestant missionaries, and the French have all along shown their hostility to the movement, notwithstanding their professed ignorance of its plans and principles, and have endeavored, by sending emissaries among the insurgents in disguise, to corrupt them from their stern Puritan integrity.

No intelligent person now doubts the final success of the Insurgents. Numbering at first only one or two hundred, they have increased their forces as they advanced, till at Nanking they present a well-organized army of eighty thousand men. Wherever they appear, the courage of the Imperialists melts away; and though the latter profess to have performed great exploits, the Insurgents have enjoyed such immunity in all their travel from Quangsi, where they began their march, that they have brought their wives and families along with them, and have them now, with few exceptions, at Nanking. They seem to hold the Imperialists in utter contempt, looking upon them as a set of pusillanimous wretches, whom Heaven has already given into their hands to destroy them.

But whether the final result be the triumph of the present Insurgent Party, or not, it is next to certain that the days of the Manchu Dynasty are nearly finished. Bro. Carpenter's statement, (which we published last week,) that "in a variety of places parties are rising in rebellion against the Emperor, and independently of each other," receives abundant confirmation in the accounts which come from other sources. Amoy is in possession of a party, whose adherents number thirty thousand. One hundred thousand insurgents, at the last accounts, were said to be marching against Canton. Secret associations for the overthrow of the Manchu Dynasty have existed throughout the Empire for a long time. Their members seem to think, that the present is the time for action; so that the greatest Empire of the East, where apparent quietness has so long obtained, now seems in a fair way of being shaken to its center.

The Sabbatarianism of the Insurgents is a feature which we have not seen noticed any where but in the letters of our missionaries. Even with them, the intelligence had not taken a reliable form, and we shall not undertake to make capital out of it. Whatever uncertainty there is on this point, will be dispelled before long. We may say, however, that the thing is not so intrinsically improbable, as might by others be supposed. Not long after our missionaries arrived in China—we think, while they yet tarried at Hong Kong—Mrs. Carpenter was informed by Mr. Gutzlaff, that, according to the researches he had made, the Chinese once regarded the seventh day as the Sabbath. He referred particularly to an ancient manuscript, which had fallen in his way, an examination of which convinced him, that the Saturday was the original Sabbath of that people. This being so, and as the Insurgents declare that their people have been in possession of the Scriptures for two hundred years, having obtained their copy from Pekin, to which place (as they say) the Scriptures had been carried about a thousand years ago, we think it at least possible, that they may have come to the knowledge of the Sabbath in that plain, unsophisticated way, which is far more favorable to the knowledge of the truth, than the scholastic teachings of modern theology. Besides, it should be borne in mind, that the aborigines, who inhabit the mountainous districts of Quangsi, where the Rebellion originated, were never conquered by the Tartars, and have had but little intercourse with the rest of the Empire. So that, notwithstanding the modern Chinese appear to know but little about a Sabbath, it may be that the inhabitants of the districts referred to have retained some traces of the institution, and that they are now, under the guidance of the Scriptures, practicing intelligently what they have always had some knowledge of by tradition.

Apart from speculation, however, the statement of Bro. Wardner, that "the officers of the Hermes assert that at Nanking they found them [the Insurgents] keeping the seventh day as the Sabbath;" also, that "the Rev. Dr. Taylor's teacher, a convert, and a native of Nanking, who went to that place a short time before the Hermes did, brought back word that the Insurgents are Sabbatarians;" gives the intelligence some show of probability.

But our rejoicing is this, that God, in his wonderful providence, is setting in motion what, in all probability, will affect not only the three hundred millions of China, but, to a great extent, the inhabitants of all Asia. Should idolatry be broken up in China, it is hardly possible that the other nations of Asia will long abide in heathenism. And when they shall once begin to move, the derisive question of infidels, 'What good has been accomplished by all the toils and expenditures and sacrifices of modern missions?' will have been answered. For no intelligent person can suppose, that the Protestant Christianity of the Chinese Insurgents is wholly independent of the labors of missionaries.

We give below some farther extracts from Bro. Wardner's letter of May 16th. That portion of it which relates particularly to the rebellion, was laid before our readers last week. That which we now give, touches upon other matters, but will be found quite interesting.

T. B. B.

Extracts from Mr. Wardner's Letter.

Such a commotion, it is said, has never been known in China since the breaking up of the Ming Dynasty. At that time the inhabitants, in many places, were driven to such extremes, that they fed upon their own children, and upon one another. It is to be hoped, that such a state of things may not accompany this struggle; and there is strong reason to hope, that it will work a thorough revolution in the religion of the nation, should the Insurgents succeed.

Ancestral worship has always been in China, to human appearance, one of Satan's undemolishable bulwarks, that has "from the beginning," as the Chinese say, stood in defiance of God's laws, and the efforts of his people. It is practiced from the Emperor to the lowest peasant. The former has temples erected to each of his ancestors, to the seventh preceding generation, whom he worships at the beginning of each of the four seasons, the first of each month, on the anniversaries of their births and deaths; and at the solstices he offers to each a sheep and a pig. Tablets of all preceding generations are collected in one temple, and worshiped together, four times a year. Lower officers and the common people worship, both in their houses and at the tombs, at two stated periods during the year. Once a year a general contribution of ghost money is made for the benefit, and to conciliate the favor, of such as have died friendless or away from home. Without such donations, they say, these ghosts will haunt the streets and by-ways, and take vengeance on those who pass them. Whenever they carry a corpse away to be buried, some ghost money is buried at each bridge, and at each angle of the roads, over which and through which they pass, in order to secure the good will and consent of these wandering spirits. They imagine that, should they neglect worshiping at the tombs, the spirits of the dead will haunt them, hover about their houses, make noises, bring upon them calamities, misfortunes, sickness, scurvy, and perhaps death.

A few evenings ago, our men came in in a fright, saying, they had just heard a spirit pass near by. I got them to describe the noise it made, when they immediately imitated a night-hawk, almost to perfection; but it was hard to convince them that it was one.

Some place the images of their ancestors in their houses, and worship them. Others bury them by the side of their graves, and worship them there; all of which they regard as inseparable from filial respect. It is not easy to convince them that such things are foolish, or useless, as they have the precept and example of Confucius on their side, (whom they regard as the wisest and most perfect man that ever lived,) or as long as they think them capable of afflicting or blessing them.

Infanticide is also practiced to a much greater extent than many suppose. Popular opinion gives parents the power of life and death over their children, at any age, as I have been told by Chinese themselves. Parental affection, they say, is the strongest love there is; and if a child is bad enough to provoke his parents to kill him, he ought to die. I was told, by an eye-witness, of a woman who attempted to drown her son, some eight or ten years old, in broad day-light, and in the presence of many Chinese. When the boy attempted to save himself by catching hold of anything, she would knock him off, and push him under water with her boat's oar, and hold him there. The Chinese who stood by, showed no disposition to interfere; and had it not been for my informant, and one or two English gentlemen who happened to see it, she would doubtless have accomplished her design. She justified herself on the plea of poverty. I have been told by Chinese, that the "Baby Tower," as it is called, near our house, received on an average about three hundred infant bodies annually, and that about one third of these are murdered by their parents. In times of famine, or general distress, the number is greatly increased. There is a district near Ning-po, where all female infants are destroyed as soon as they are born, and the young men go to Ning-po for their wives.

The size of Chinese families is also another sad evidence of the prevalence of this inhuman practice. It is not common to find more than about two children in one family, and very seldom are both girls. The largest family of children I remember to have seen, numbered only five; and it is the only one I know of, of equal size. About ten days ago, an infant daughter was born into the family of our nearest neighbor, only five or six rods distant. The next morning Mrs. Wardner went over, hoping she might be of some service to them, and found the child apparently dying. On inquiry, she was told that, in the night, the father uncovered it, and let it lay till it was chilled through. Mrs. W. plead for the privilege of trying to raise it. The grandmother, only in part, and very reluctantly, complied, saying, "It is of no use, it is nothing but a girl, and very small; if it were a boy, it would be of some profit, but its father is not satisfied with it, and does not want it." Mrs. W., however, did what they would allow her to do, and staid by till it breathed its last. But the grandmother seemed anxious to hurry it out of existence, and would handle it very roughly, press her hand heavily upon its head, &c., and when she saw that breath had left its body, she exultingly exclaimed, "Joy."

The lives of adults even, are but little regarded, except by interested persons. The circumstance communicated in my letter of January is one specimen. A fellow missionary, a few months ago, was passing outside of the south gates of the city, where he saw a man lying in the canal in a dying state, and a large crowd of Chinese stood looking at him. The missionary, coming up, inquired why they did not help him out. The reply was, "Because no one will pay us for it." Said he, "I will pay you." At that, some beggarly looking individuals ran to his assistance. The missionary got a rope, and let it down from a bridge over where he lay, which they tied around him. After they had raised him a few feet, as the rope was old, it broke and let him down again, at which the whole crowd burst into a roar of laughter. After getting him on dry land, the missionary had considerable trouble in getting some one to go and purchase an old suit of clothes for the dying man, as they insisted that it was of no use. He tried in vain to get one to go and inform the district officer, whose business it was to attend to such matters. But they said they should be compelled to pay money if they did, and it was some time before he could even find one who would act as his guide; and when he got one, the fellow evidently tried to avoid conducting him to the right place, and to tire out his patience by taking him from house to house to no purpose. But finally he led him to one of the officer's assistants, to whom he made known his errand, and got a promise that the matter should be attended to, and then returned just in time to see the poor man breathe his last.

One of the overseers in the "Hall of Universal Benevolence" (?) was called on, not long since, to attend to a perishing stranger in the street. On going to the spot, and perceiving that he still breathed, the overseer replied, "He is not dead yet; wait till he dies, and then I will bury him." These are a few among a multitude of facts, which show the moral state of even a civilized heathen nation; verifying the Apostle's words, that the heathen are "without natural affection."

I have sometimes feared our brethren would get disheartened by seeing so many dark pictures of the Chinese character, and so little fruit of missionary efforts. But nothing is impossible with God; and though the seed may lay long buried, it will spring up, and bear fruit. The Lord works mysteriously, and often astonishes his people with unexpected results. Amid all these discouragements in regard to the Chinese, we have not been left without some evidence that the leaven is working. Incidents are constantly transpiring, though trifling, which speak volumes to an observing mind, showing that the opinions and feelings of this people are undergoing a change, and that a brighter day is at hand. They may occasionally be seen wearing foreign articles of clothing, such as shoes, hats, and sometimes a jacket. Foreign umbrellas are becoming much thought of. The new Custom-House built some two or three years ago has glass windows, set in foreign sash, and furnished with venetian blinds. During the drouth last summer, the Taoutai sent a request to foreigners to pray to their God for rain. A few months ago, a man applied to a necromancer for a certain piece of information; the latter, after several attempts, replied that the spirit refused to come because he feared Jesus. Such circumstances may to some seem unworthy of note; but even the displacing of a hair will sometimes indicate the course of the wind.

THE NEW BIBLE HOUSES.

Some two or three years ago the American Bible Society bought a lot of ground in the upper part of New York, on which it has erected a splendid building, six stories high, forming one entire block. The whole complete cost perhaps $200,000, and a part of the first and second stories are rented for enough to pay the interest on a large part if not the whole of the investment. The buildings and lot it had formerly occupied in Nassau-street, were bought by a company of Baptists, who subsequently, in accordance with their original plan, sold about half of the same to the American and Foreign Bible Society, which soon took possession of the rooms of the old Society. Quite recently it has been determined to make a clean sweep of the old Bible House, and replace it with a better structure. We copy the following description of the new edifice from the N. Y. Recorder:—

"The building will be six stories high above the basement; the first story for stores; the second for the Bible Society and cöoperating Societies of the denomination; the third and fourth for offices; and the fifth and sixth probably for manufacturing purposes. The entrance to the upper two stories will be from Theatre Alley. The lot being fifty feet in width, gives room for a wide stairway from the street to the second story, without encroaching on the two stores on the first floor. In the construction of the building, a large amount of iron will be introduced. The front of the first story will be of iron, and all the windows of the building will be provided with iron shutters, made to roll up, so that it will be completely protected against fire from without. At least $15,000 worth of iron will be used, and the entire cost of the building will not be less than $55,000. It is expected the building will pay for itself in ten or twelve years, besides giving the denomination all the room it needs rent free, and then there will be a handsome income to devote to benevolent purposes."

Who can question, that this move of the Baptists, in providing a permanent home for their benevolent societies, is timely and politic? Let others, who would insure the permanence of their organizations, take a lesson therefrom.

Sunday Steamer on the Clyde.

GLASGOW, August 5th, 1853.

Before laying down the pen of the Reporter, it seems needful to note the progress of the Sunday steamer on the Clyde. The case becomes more important in its development. Notwithstanding of the opposition manifested to their landing at several of the coast towns, the number of passengers by the Emperor on her leaving Glasgow last Sunday morning was 450, while the number was considerably greater on her return. The great meeting, and the Guardian's "Defeat" in the City Hall of the previous meeting, has done nothing towards diminishing the number of passengers—for this is the largest number she has carried. Besides this, it appears from the proceedings of our River Trust, at their meeting this week, that the Harbor Master had communicated to the Acting Committee, that it was intended to sail the Emperor on Sundays, requesting instructions as to what he should do in the circumstances. He was directed by the Committee to throw no impediment in the way, but to see that the usual attendance be provided for the maintenance of order. This minute was read in the open meeting of the River Trust, and that without eliciting a remark on the subject from a single member of the Board, although the boat had sailed the four previous Sundays!

In these circumstances, it would have been surprising had no more energetic effort been made by the Church party to suppress the growing traffic. It however formed a subject of discussion in the Established Presbytery of Glasgow, two days ago. A deputation from the Sunday School Teachers brought the matter before the Court; and a motion by the Rev. Mr. Gillan to appoint a Committee to draw up a Remonstrance to the proprietors of the boat, was agreed to. It is to be presented by the Rev. Dr. Burr. We can imagine how the Remonstrance will be received—being aware, as we are, that the principal individual will be ready enough to remind the Rev. Romonstrant, that Sunday has no place in the Fourth Commandment. The discussion in the Presbytery has not yet produced the desired effect, for the Emperor's trip for Sunday first is already advertised.

But the Presbytery contemplate other measures; for they have appointed a Committee to consider what further steps may be necessary to effect a discontinuance of the practice. Mr. Gillan said they must do all in their power to arrest and remove it; and he quoted from the Acts of the Scottish Parliament and of the General Assembly. Dr. Muir stated, that in their archives it would be found that in 1794, the General Assembly obtained the opinion of the then Solicitor General Blair, as to the law relative to Sunday desecration, which the Doctor read:—

"The statutes now in force with respect to the observance of the Sabbath day [Sunday,] appear to me to be insufficient for checking the evil complained of. They are the following:—Act 1661, c. 18; 1672, c. 22; 1693, c. 40; 1695, c. 13; and 1701, c. 11. By these statutes," continued the Solicitor General, "every person guilty of profaning the Sabbath day [Sunday] in any manner whatever is made liable in a pecuniary penalty, to be recovered by prosecution before Sheriffs, Justices of the Peace, or any other Judge ordinary; and the ministers of every parish, the Kirk Session, or the Presbytery, or a person named by them, is entitled to prosecute."

Most of the reverend members of Presbytery on the present occasion seemed disposed to try this mode of promoting Sunday observance, quite oblivious of the fact, that considerable change has taken place in the minds both of the public and of the Legislature since 1794. Let the attempt be now made to enforce all the provisions of all these old statutes, and we may almost predict, that the result will be that they will be wholly blotted from the Statute Book of the land. In answer to a correspondent, "The London Journal," (with very extensive circulation,) said in June last, it would appear that there are "two Sundays in England—an Act of Parliament Sunday, and a voluntary Sunday. Neither of them are binding except on the conscience." This is preceded by the statement that "the question raised as to the opening of the Crystal Palace on Sundays, ought, we think, to be made auxiliary to the settlement—the final settlement—of not only what is Sunday, but whether it is expedient to have a Sunday at all." In the same month, "The Athenæum," the most successful and talented of our London scientific and literary weekly journals, said, also, "Whether Sunday is the true Sabbath, is an open question with chronologists." We pretend not to understand either of these paragraphs, but cite them as evidence that the public mind is hardly in a state for either Curch or State to venture to draw the Sunday bonds closer than our fathers left them. At a large meeting held in Manchester, last week, it was resolved, by a very large majority, to petition Parliament in favor of the Sunday opening of the Crystal Palace.

The Sunday Steamer—Movements in China.

GLASGOW, August 12th, 1853

To all appearance, our Clyde Sunday steamer has overcome the opposition presented, and is already receiving largely of public patronage. Since the Emperor began to be so employed, the weather has been very unfavorable for pleasure seeking; but Sunday last having been a fine day, she left Glasgow with 500 passengers, leaving some hundreds who wished to have accompanied them; and on her return, at each place at which she touched, many who intended to have been passengers to Glasgow were disappointed, from her already having had her legal complement. One of our newspapers, more than usually conversant with the shipping department, says this single Sunday trip will pay the proprietors better than most of the river steamers will for the whole week—the fares on Sunday being much higher than on other days.

The Presbytery's Remonstrance has not yet been presented to the proprietors, and every week is likely to increase the doubts on their part as to the value of the result. On the 9th instant, a meeting was, however, held at Gourock, of those opposed to the steamer, and resolutions about the Sabbath and the Fourth Commandment were, of course, adopted. Gourock is one of the places at which the Emperor has uniformly called; and, on the first Sunday, Major Durroch, the principal Superior of the village, forgetting part of the Fourth Commandment, even according to his own reading of the day named in it, drove down in his carriage to forbid the passengers landing on the quay, thus desecrating the Sunday. He was in the Chair at the meeting referred to, and seems to be zealous in his own way; but the results were not encouraging. It was held in the Established Church, and the speakers, with one exception, were clergymen, and it was intimated from the pulpits on Sunday, both of the Free and Established Churches, as well as by placard; yet the North British Daily Mail says, "The attendance was limited, and was principally composed of ladies."

A stop had very nearly been put this week to the Emperor's desecrating career. On the morning of the 9th instant, between 4 and 5 o'clock, a person was observed by a watchman to go on board, and to leave shortly after. Supposing the individual to be one of the hands of the vessel, the movement attracted little of the watchman's attention; and had not one of the seamen risen early, the steamer would probably have been in another hour at the bottom of the river, having already two feet of water in the engine room—the large sea cock communicating with the river having been turned. If, as is suspected, this was done with the view of promoting Sunday observance, it is not likely to serve the end designed, as public indignation has been awakened at the daring attempt. It prevented the steamer from sailing for one day; but it has also put the police upon the alert to discover the perpetrator of the deed.

In the House of Commons, about a month ago, in answer to a question put by Mr. Miles as to Sunday at the Post Offices, Mr. Wilson, for the Government, stated that, "in consequence of the recommendation of the Commissioners who had been appointed to inquire into the Sunday postal arrangements, instructions had been given, that in every case where the Superiors reported that the nature of the duties imposed on the letter carriers was such as to prevent their attending Divine service, a substitute should be paid to perform those duties at least upon every alternate Sunday." The Sunday work is therefore to be done, and if it be not too great for accomplishment, it is to be done also as part of the duty of the letter carriers; and if burdensome, it is still to be performed by them, except during Divine service on alternate Sundays!

The more recent accounts from China, set forth still more clearly, and in a more remarkable light, the movement in China. Contrary to the very decided opinion of some, that it was of Jesuit origin, it now appears clearly to be of a Protestant character, in so far as it is religious at all. The Jesuits, if they did not leave with them their old idols, would have taught them only to make exchange;—but the insurgents destroy all idols. The Jesuits might have enjoined obedience to the authority of mother church; but the insurgents give the Holy Scriptures, and require subjection to the precepts therein contained—and the translation of Genesis seen in their hands was found to be that of Gutzlaff, the well known missionary. Their "Trimetrical Classic" contains a brief recapitulation of prominent facts and doctrines of Scripture, including the Ten Commandments as "the Heavenly Rules." Giving account of the creation of the world in six days by "the Great God," they enjoin "every seventh day worship, in acknowledgment of Heaven's favor;" and when speaking of His having given to Moses the Ten Commandments at Sinai, it is added, "the celestial law cannot be altered;" and of the Saviour, that "three days after His death, He rose from the dead." Whether the Sabbath-keeping mission in China has been in any degree the means of their instruction, we know not; but at least a good foundation is thus laid for the labors of these brethren, when they have occasion to show that on the subject of the Sabbath Protestants have departed from or "altered" the law, even as Protestants may show that Popery contravenes the law by encouraging idolatry. Whatever evils may mingle with their belief, or whatever may be the shortcomings of their practice, surely there is enough to lead us adoringly to say, The hand of the Lord is there!

THE PALESTINE MISSION.

Once or twice, within a month, we have been asked when the proposed Palestine Mission is to be started, and in what manner it is to be conducted. All the information that we can give upon the subject is derived from the records of the Executive Board of the Missionary Society; from which it appears that the following resolution was passed at a meeting held at New Market, N. J., May 29, 1853:—

Resolved, That brethren J. M. Allen, of Alfred, N. Y., and Wm. M. Jones, of New Jersey, with their wives, be appointed missionaries of this Board to Palestine, and that they be instructed, upon their acceptance of this appointment, to proceed to said field as soon as practicable.

At the meeting of the Board in July, letters were read from Bro. J. M. Allen, to the effect that he is under engagements to the Trustees of Alfred Academy for some two years to come; that said Trustees do not feel called upon, in view of the circumstances of their institution, to release him from those engagements; and that, consequently, it will be impossible for him to comply with the vote of the Board. After hearing these letters, and deliberating upon the subject, the following resolution was passed:—

Resolved, That notwithstanding Mr. Allen's declinature, it is advisable that Mr. Jones proceed to Palestine alone, unless a companion can be obtained in season to accompany him.

Bro. Jones has been engaged since April last in visiting the churches and collecting funds for missionary purposes. For a few weeks past he has been in Allegany County, N. Y., and he is now, we suppose, in Erie County. Whether he has determined in his own mind at what time it is best to start, we are not informed. We presume, however, that he will not leave until after the Anniversary of the Missionary Society at Adams, during the first week in October.

SABBATH DISCUSSION IN WISCONSIN.

BERLIN, Wis., August 15th, 1853.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

As it will probably be interesting to our eastern friends to know how the Sabbath question is managed in this section of Wisconsin, I thought to give them an inkling through the Recorder. To begin, I will say, that some three weeks ago I was invited to lecture on that subject at a place called Bluffton, some five miles from where I live. Notice was given accordingly; and Sunday, August 7th, was the day. A large concourse of people assembled, many more than the school-house would hold, and so we adjourned to the grove, where I had the pleasure of addressing an attentive audience for two hours, in which I reviewed the pretended claims of the first day, weighed them in the balances of the sanctuary, and found them wanting in every respect. Jehovah's Sabbath was also vindicated, and its claims enforced by a "thus saith the Lord."

After my lecture was through, Mr. Cobb, a Wesleyan Methodist minister, rose, and read a paper which he had previously written, in which he attempted to show that the seventh day would be the Sabbath if we only knew which it is, but as time has been lost, the septenary cycle has become deranged, and we know nothing about it. In his closing remarks, however, wishing to put us to shame, he assumed that the seventh day now is four days from the original seventh day, whereas Sunday is only three days from it, so that Sunday-keepers are nearer right than Seventh-day Baptists. After this he went up north and down south, where day and night are of six months duration; said that the earth was round, and turned on its axis every twenty-four hours; subpenaed Gabriel as his witness, (but he did not appear;) challenged the world to confront him, and overturn his position; and then said he objected to Eld. Todd's saying any thing, and sat down.

Of course I paid little attention to his objection, but answered as I thought he deserved. This brought down his wrath upon me, which he exhibited in no very becoming manner. I made no reply, and just as we were dismissed, notice was given that Rev. Mr. Bristol, of Dartford, would lecture on the subject in two weeks.

Yesterday being the day, I went over to hear him; but he did not appear, and Mr. Davis lectured on the subject. He took no new ground, but said that Christ arose on Sunday; that the day had been kept from the time of Christ to the present; that God had blessed the church in keeping first day, which he would not have done if it were wrong; and lastly, that the world was round, and therefore there can be no holy day. He gave liberty, but I had no chance to put in a word, for he and Mr. Cobb disputed till the time was spent, and exhibited considerable of "Adam the first"—so much so, that Mr. C. left the house, muttering as he went.

I confess the scene was somewhat amusing, and I was reminded of two things. 1. What the man said when he saw the hawk and weasel engaged in conflict; and, 2. What our Lord said about a house being divided against itself. Notice was given of another lecture in two weeks. Should you give this a place in your paper, I shall keep you advertised of Sabbath proceedings in this section of the West.

JULIUS M. TODD.

REVIVAL.—A letter dated Adams Center, Jefferson Co., N. Y., Aug. 26, says: There is in this place a most cheering work of grace among the Baptists, under the labors of Eld. Teeple. Between twenty and thirty have been baptized, and the interest is yet on the increase. A remarkable feature of this revival is, that it took the people by surprise, when all hearts were desponding, and spread from heart to heart until the whole community seemed to catch the holy influence. The praise is all the Lord's.

Congregational Association.—The Congregational Association of New York held a meeting at Oswego on the 24th and 25th of August. A committee previously appointed to collect statistics, reported the whole number of Congregational Churches in the State, so far as they had ascertained, 361. Of these, 90 are independent, and 120 are connected with Presbytery. The Committee on appointment of delegates to Foreign Bodies, brought in a report, upon which a debate on the subject of Slavery sprung up, occasioned by a motion to suspend intercourse with the Presbyterian Church. After considerable debate, the motion was put and lost. Motion was then made that the late resolution of the Massachusetts Association, on the subject of correspondence with Southern Ecclesiastical Bodies be adopted as the sentiment of the Association of New York. The following is the resolution:—

Resolved, That in continuing our corespondence with Ecclesiastical Bodies having churches in slaveholding States, this Association, so far from expressing any satisfaction with the practice of slaveholding, desire it to be understood that, in connection with other objects, it is for the purpose of bearing their continued and earnest testimony against the sin of slaveholding, and exerting their appropriate influence in favor of its speedy removal.

The Catholics and Schools in California.—The Roman Catholics of California have stolen the march upon Protestants in the matter of Schools. An old law on the subject provided that the Common Schools should be free from all denominational and sectarian bias, control and influence whatever, in order to a participation in the benefits of the School Fund, and that no school-book of a sectarian or denominational character should be introduced or used in any common school instituted under the act. This law has been repealed, and one adopted which gives the school money in part to support sectarian schools. It seems that the Catholic Bishop addressed a letter to the State Superintendent of Common Schools, containing a report of the Catholic schools, and asking him to use his influence to procure such a modification of the law as would allow these schools to receive a pro rata of the moneys raised for the support of Common Schools. The Superintendent accordingly recommended the measure, and the Committee to whom it was referred drafted a bill, but did not report it till a very short time before the adjournment, when there was not sufficient time for the examination and discussion of the bill; and in the hurry of the last hours of the session, it was passed on the recommendation of the Superintendent, almost without examination.

The Greek Church.—The "orthodox church," to which reference was made in the late manifesto of the Czar Nicholas, is a communion which embraces about seventy million of souls, under rather less than three hundred bishops. There are five patriarchs; that of Alexandria, once the first in dignity, has now only 5,000; the most recent, that of Russia, has, perhaps, fifty millions; that of Antioch, 50,000; and that of Jerusalem, 25,000. Six languages are used in the services of the church, on a large scale. In the Turkish empire, the hierarchy of the communion are jealously controlled by an infidel power, and cannot proselytize, nor even educate freely their own people. In the Russian empire the "orthodox" or Greek church is governed by a standing Spiritual Synod, the members of which, seven or eight in number, are nominated and removed by the crown; nor are any other of the synods of the clergy permitted to meet for deliberation, or to make canons. All the officers or servants of the synod, and those of the diocesan bishops, are nominated, paid and removed, by the civil government, and are under its immediate orders; and all the real and funded property belonging to the church, as well as all educational funds and establishments, spiritual as well as secular, are under the control of the same.

An Example for Others.—It is not often that we are permitted to copy a paragraph the reading of which gives such pleasant sensations as the following, which we find in the Independent:—

"The Broadway Tabenacle Church and Society, at a meeting held a few days ago, took a step which deserves to be chronicled. Something more than a year ago, Rev. Mr. Thompson, the pastor at the Tabernacle, had suffered a failure of health, through his many labors, and severe domestic afflictions, when the congregation generously voted him a furlough of a year, or more as he might need, continuing his salary, and supplying the pulpit during his absence. At a recent meeting, finding that his expenses in traveling, and providing for his children at home, had involved him in debt, notwithstanding rigid economy on his part, they voted, with great readiness and unanimity, to raise for him the sum of twelve hundred dollars, at the same time raising his salary from two thousand dollars a year to three thousand."

Honorary Degrees.—At the recent Commencement of Union College, the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred on the Rev. Henry A. Rowland, and Revs. John Bayne, C. H. Gregory, Isaac Parks, R. S. Storrs, W. W. Arnits, and G. B. Baldwin; and the Honorary Degree of LL. D., on Hon. Thomas J. Oakley, Hon. Samuel A. Foote, Prof. B. F. Joslin, Prof. Amos Dean, and Wm. C. Bryant.

The Board of Dartmouth College conferred the Honorary D. D. on Rev. Israel W. Putnam, Rev. David Thurston, and Rev. Robert Brydon, of Scotland. The Honorary Degree of LL. D. was conferred on George C. Shattuck, M. D., of Boston.

At the late Commencement of Columbia College, New York, the Degree of D. D. was conferred on the Hon. and Very Rev. D. Erskine, Dean of Ripon, England; Rev. Thomas Davis, Bishop elect of S. C.; Rev. Samuel P. Strong, Rector of Bytown, Canada East, and the Rev. Talbot W. Chambers, one of the ministers of the Collegiate Dutch Church in New York. The Degree of LL. D. was conferred on the Rev. Isaac Ferris, Chancellor of the University of the city of New York.

Library of Brown University.—A correspondent of the Christian Watchman and Reflector gives an interesting account of the origin and present condition of the Library of Brown University, from which we clip the following:—

"In so large a library, collected at various periods, and from so many different quarters, there are, as might be supposed, many works of rare worth, and interesting, for the associations connected with them. There lies in the desk at which the writer of these lines is sitting, an old copy of Roger Williams' 'Bloody Tenent Made More Bloody, etc.' It was printed, as the title-page informs us, at London, 'for Giles Calvert, and sold at the Black-Spread Eagle, at the west end of Paul's, 1652,' and was presented to the library by Rev. I. Backus. On the fly-leaf of the book is written, in Williams' own handwriting, the following: 'To his honored and beloved Mr. John Clarke, an eminent witness of Christ Jesus against ye bloodie doctrine of persecution, etc.' The sight and actual handling of such a book, certainly awakens in one's mind a train of interesting reflections."

New Move for Temperance.—At a recent meeting of the New York City Temperance Alliance, the following preamble and resolution were presented, discussed a while, and laid over for further discussion:—

Whereas, The Rum Traffic is now supported by those Churches of our City that admit to membership persons who are engaged in business as Rumsellers or Rum-Landlords; and whereas, the present needs of the Temperance Reform require that the Temperance Public should know who are true friends of the cause—

Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretary of this Alliance be directed to address a circular to all the Clergymen of this City, inquiring if their Churches exclude from membership all persons concerned in the Rum Traffic as dealers or landlords, and report at our next meeting what Churches are free from guilt in this matter, as far as can be ascertained.

The New Orleans Sufferers.—During the early part of last week the yellow fever raged in New Orleans with unabated fatality—its victims numbering over two hundred per day. The reports for the last day or two of the week were rather more favorable. Contributions from other cities for the relief of the sufferers, continue to flow in freely. Over thirty thousand collars have been raised for them in New York, and other cities have shown a proportionate liberality.

California News.

California dates to August 1st were received in New York on the 23d.

Mining prospects were excellent.

The crops do not promise well, Wheat especially having suffered much from rust.

The Squatter difficulty at San Francisco has passed over peaceably; but in the country, great outrages had been perpetrated upon the old settlers by lawless marauders; farms were seized, and the real owners in some instances made to pay for feeding their cattle on their own lands.

A party of mountain Indians, who have been for some time past committing depredations upon life and property in Tuolumne county, lately became so bold and daring in their outrages that the citizens were under the necessity of taking steps to check them. A volunteer company was formed, and chased the savages into the mountain fastnesses.

It has been reported that the company of Rangers commanded by Captain Harry Love, met with the notorious murderer and robber, Joaquin, and six of his equally infamous band, at Panocha Pass, and after a desperate running fight, Joaquin and one of his gang were killed, and two taken prisoners; three managed to make their escape, but one of their horses was killed, and several captured.

European News.

We have one week later news from Europe, but nothing decisive in relation to the Russian and Turkish difficulty.

The Earl of Warwick is dead, aged 75. Warwick Castle, the family residence of the deceased Earl, is well known to tourists who visit the banks of the Avon.

The crops in Ireland are very prolific, but there is a great scarcity of labor in some districts. There is no appearance of the potato rot.

A park and crystal palace are projected at Sutton near Birmingham.

Miss Mary Elizabeth Wormeley, dating from Newport, R. I., publishes a letter in the London Times, appealing to the readers of Uncle Tom's Cabin, for subscriptions in aid of two slaves, in whom she is much interested, and with whom she became acquainted during a recent visit in Virginia.

In Italy, nine persons had been condemned to imprisonment for forty months, on a charge of being members of an evangelical and political society for purposes hostile to the religion and Government of the country.

Forty-three citizens of Milan have been summoned by a note inserted in the Gazette to appear, within ninety days, before the Military Governor to answer a charge of treason. Should they neglect to appear, sentence of death will be recorded against them.

A letter received at Marseilles from Mogador, in Morocco, dated July 12, announces that the Emperor and his son had gained a complete victory over the Kabyles, who had not hitherto acknowledged the Emperor's authority. The victory was dearly purchased with the loss of 500 of the Emperor's best troops, and the loss of the Kabyles was still greater.

From China, advices state that the imperialist army in China was preparing to retake Amoy, but without much chance of success. The insurgent forces were within four days march of Pekin. Canton had not been attacked. Business was very dull, and money very scarce.

Professor Neumann, of Munich, a distinguished scholar of Oriental literature, announces in the London papers, that he has just received from Interpreter Meadows, who was a pupil of his, copies of the religious, political and statistical tracts of the new Chinese dynasty. The religion therein inculcated, he says, is certainly Protestant Christianity, but mixed with some heathenish customs and prejudices.

The Arab ship Faze Kereem, on her passage from Aden to Bombay, with the Bombay portion of the Indian mail, which left London on the 24th June, foundered at sea, twenty miles from Aden. The mails, consisting of 68 boxes, were lost, and 179 out of 190 Arabs and Lascars, who were on board, were drowned.

The American steamship Monumental City was wrecked on the 15th May, on her passage from Port Phillip to Sydney, and thirty-five persons perished.

The London Morning Herald understands that it is in contemplation to fit out another Admiralty Expedition to explore the source of the Niger, with the view of promoting civilization in Africa and opening up new sources of commerce. It is held that the present is a fitting opportunity for another expedition to the Niger, inasmuch as the mortality on the coast of Africa has of late very much decreased.

SUMMARY.

Wm. J. Weir, late a compositor in the office of The Commercial Advertiser, committed suicide on Saturday morning, at an early hour, by hanging himself with a rope to the bedpost, in his boarding house, No. 117 Chambers-st. It appeared, in the evidence taken before the Coroner, that the deceased had formed an unfortunate attachment to a Miss Mary E. Meyers, and the circumstances connected with it, it is supposed, preyed upon his mind, and led him to commit the fatal act. He held at the time of his death over $6,000, belonging to her, in trust, all which, in a note which he left among his papers, he requested should be conveyed to her. She now resides in California.

The Savannah Courier says: "We learn that a distinguished gentleman of this State, who recently visited Europe, has succeeded in organizing a Company, with a capital of ten millions sterling, for the purpose of establishing a more direct route of transportation thence between New York, San Francisco and China. The object of the Company is to construct a railroad direct from Savannah to Pensacola, Mobile and New Orleans, and another from the Gulf to the Pacific. The connections on the Atlantic, the Gulf, and Pacific, are to be made with first class steamers—the time between San Francisco and New York to be reduced to from 15 to 18 days."

We regret (says the Buffalo Commercial) to announce the sudden death of Rev. Levi Tucker, D. D., for several years pastor of the Washington st., Baptist Church of this city, and more recently in charge of the Baldwin-square Baptist Church of the City of Boston. He died on Saturday last, at the residence of Mr. W. G. Lee, his brother-in-law, at Cincinnatus, Cortland County, in this State, aged 49 years. He had just returned from a sojourn in Europe, where he had spent nearly a year past, traveling, to recover impaired health, and was on his way to this city, when a renewed attack of his disease closed his earthly career.

A dispatch dated Cincinnati, Saturday, August 27, says, Three slaves from Virginia, on their way to the South with their owners, having been landed at a wharf in this city yesterday, were brought before Judge Flinn on a writ of habeas corpus, and their liberation demanded under one of the statutes of Ohio, which provides that "all slaves, if brought here by their owners, shall be free." After an excited trial, which lasted till near midnight, the slaves were remanded to the custody of their owners.

A new and very elegant steamer has been contracted for, to run on the Sound, in the Fall River line. She will be thirty feet longer than the Bay or Empire State, and will have three decks and two tiers of staterooms. The Norwich and Worcester line are about to add one or two new and fine steamers to that route. The passenger traffic on the Sound this season has greatly exceeded any previous year.

Grace Greenwood has recently returned from Europe, after an extended tour, and proposes at once to resume her literary pursuits. She will commence a juvenile paper in Philadelphia on the 1st of October, to be sustained by the productions of her own pen and by the contributions of several of our best female writers as well.

The North-Western Fruit Growers' Association, organized for the promotion of improvement in fruits, will hold their third annual meeting on the first Tuesday of October, at Chicago, when it is expected there will be a large number present, and one of the finest shows of fruit ever made in the West.

Colonel Bliss, the son-in-law and formerly Secretary of General Taylor, has fallen a victim to the yellow fever at the South. Mr. Bliss has always been represented as a very brave, gallant and able man. His dispatches from the American army during the Mexican war, will ever be regarded as model compositions of their class.

The ship which conveyed General Wolfe on his expedition to Quebec is still afloat, under the name of William and Ann. She was built in 1759 for a bomb ketch, and was in dock in the Thames recently, sound, and likely to endure for many years yet; she is now engaged in the Honduras and African trade.

The ship Warren White takes out the materials for a church at St. Helena, and a monument to be erected over the grave of Mrs. Sarah Boardman Judson, one of the most devoted of the many noble women who have fallen in the great cause of Christian civilization. On the monument is a tablet in memory of Rev. Dr. Judson.

On Wednesday morning, as Rev. J. J. Woolsey was on his way from Norwalk to the Bible Rooms in this city, in attempting to get on a train in slight motion, at Greenwich, he stumbled, and his right foot was caught under the train and smashed to a jelly. He was conveyed to his house in Norwalk, and in the afternoon the fore part of the foot was amputated, saving the heel.

The acting Governor of Oregon, in June last, was Mr. George L. Curry, formerly of Boston, and known to many as once President of the Mechanics' Apprentices' Library Association.

The members of the Whig State Committee have resolved to call the State Convention at Syracuse, on Wednesday, the 5th day of October.

Charles H. Comstock, Conductor of the train which ran into the drawbridge at Norwalk, was placed on trial for manslaughter on the 24th ult., before the Fairfield County Court, at Danbury. Edward W. Tucker, the Engineer, was to have been tried at the same time, but was not able to appear in Court.

The State Temperance Committee at Trenton have addressed circulars to many officiating clergymen in New Jersey, requesting them to deliver sermons or addresses on the importance of the Maine Law, and the necessity of electing only persons to the Legislature favorable to its enactment.

The steamer Cherokee was burnt at her wharf in New York, on the evening of Sixth-day, Aug. 26. She was fully freighted, and was to sail next day for New Orleans and Havana. The ship was worth $200,000, and was not insured; the cargo was worth $250,000 to $300,000, partly insured. The fire is supposed to have originated from spontaneous ignition.

The deaths in New York last week numbered 514, being 455 less than the previous week. Of the deceased 345 were under ten years of age. The comparatively cool weather of the week was very favorable to health. There is now but little fear of an epidemic this year.

In New Orleans, during the week ending Monday, Aug. 21, there were 1,534 deaths, of which 1,365 were from yellow fever. In three weeks 3,699 died from the fever. Burning tar barrels and firing cannon have been resorted to at New Orleans as a means of purifying the atmosphere.

At the Hanover Bank, in New York, one day last week, the teller paid $912 instead of $9 12 on a check. The man who presented the check pocketed the whole amount. He was overhauled next day, however, and imprisoned for constructive grand larceny.

The daughter of the Rev. Dr. Neale, who was injured by the accident upon the Western Railroad, June 22, has received from the corporation $1,500 in lieu of damages. Her shoulder was dislocated.

A contemplated insurrection of the slaves in Nottaway County, Va., was recently discovered and suppressed. They intended murdering all the white inhabitants.

There is to be a great celebration at New London, on the 6th of September—the anniversary of the storming of Fort Griswold, and the massacre of Groton Heights.

The "Siamese Twins" have arrived in New Haven, and are holding their levees at American Hall.

MARRIED.

In Leonardsville, N. Y., Aug. 18th, by Eld. W. B. Maxson, Mr. Orin Bassett to Miss Susan M. Lamb, all of Plainfield. N. Y.

Aug. 30th. 1853, at Adams Center, Jefferson Co., N. Y., by Eld. J. Summerbell, Mr. Lorenzo Maxson of Alfred, to Mrs. Adaline Bly, of Adams Center.

DIED.

In Petersburgh, Aug. 6th, Widow David Maxson, in the 89th year of her age. She united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Berlin, when about 28 years of age and connected herself with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Petersburgh at the time of its organization, with which she remained in fellowship to the time of her decease. Sister Maxson expressed a willingness to die, and a wish for the time to come when she might leave this world of sorrow and enjoy the rest which remains for the people of God. A. E.

At his residence in Kingston, R. I., August 21st, 1853, Deacon Thomas R. Wells.

He was born in Hopkinton, Oct. 20, 1784. He was the son of Thos. Wells, Esq., by whom he was taught to observe truth and righteousness as the only sure path to happiness. Those parental lessons he ever rigidly practiced. In his early days he sat under the ministry of Elders Abram Coon and Matthew Stillman, ministers he loved and revered as patterns of piety. When a boy, he was tractable and very conscientious, and it was said of him, that he scarcely ever spoke of the faults of others, such was his sense of his own unworthiness. Seldom was he rude, and never boisterous, but pleasant and mirthful, and sometimes satirical—a disposition, however, which, from the kindness of his nature, he but cautiously indulged. He was always meek and humble. If indeed he ever sought the applause of men, he had the prudence to keep it from observation

He united with the Congregational Church in Kingston, in 1821, being the first male member received on profession. Six years after he was chosen their deacon, which office he held until his death, discharging its duties, with peculiar meekness and diffidence, to the letter—caring for the church, looking after the poor, stimulating the brethren to action, and pointing sinners to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world. In fact, he was in every good work, with heart and hand. He was a man of rare and choice gifts, fervent in prayer, simple and pathetic in exhortation—duties discharged at home and abroad.

Deacon Wells was a business man. For a number of years he held the office of Clerk of the County and Supreme Courts, and for twenty-four years successively he was chosen Town and Probate Clerk without opposition, and thirty-five years was he Cashier of the Landholders' Bank; all which duties he discharged with ability and fidelity.

In the church he was one of its brightest ornaments and most faithful servants; in public office, indefatigable; in the neighborhood a peace-maker, kind to all, forbearing to the erring, a faithful friend to the needy, an indulgent father, an affectionate husband, which relation he held successively to three good and kind companions. Thus lived this good man in the same place all the days of his majority. Many were his friends, and few his enemies. He lived beloved, and died lamented. "Great is the breach; who can fill it?" P.

In Deposit, Delaware Co., N. Y., August 26th, 1853, Elijah H. Coon, aged about 44 years. Mr. Coon was born in Brookfield, Madison Co., N. Y., but passed most of his days in West Edmeston, Otsego Co., where he made a public profession of religion, and united with the 3d Seventh-day Baptist Church, and with his companion in life maintained, as we have learned, the walk of a devoted Christian. For the last four years he has been a resident of Deposit. During this period he has gained the esteem of all who knew him. Kind and affable in his manners, he commanded universal respect. And in his death the community at large sustain a very great loss. His sickness—of about five days only—was very severe, it being occasioned by a malignant dysentery, in connection with other complaints, and which the most untiring efforts of physicians and friends could not abate. Two days before his death the writer of this notice called upon him, and took occasion, as he was able to converse, to ascertain his feelings upon the subject of religion. He expressed regret that he had not become more acquainted with Christians, in a religious point of view, though they belonged to different denominations from that to which he had formerly belonged. But his hope and confidence in Christ were unshaken. The day before his decease we called again, and being anxious to know the state of his mind in near prospect of death, asked him if he "felt willing to die?" He replied, "I feel willing to comply with the Lord's will." "Do you feel resigned, then?" "Yes, perfectly," was his prompt reply.

To-day—the seventh day—his funeral was attended by a large and deeply solemn audience, at the Baptist Church; and the occasion improved by a sermon by Eld. L. Morse, from James 4: 7—"Submit yourselves therefore to God." The procession was large; formed by the two fraternities of which the deceased was a member—the order of Odd Fellows and Sons of Temperance, who appeared in "regalia"—and other citizens of the place. All gave the fullest evidence of respect for the memory of the deceased, and heartfelt sympathy for the bereaved circle of relatives.

In his death the community feel that they sustain a heavy loss, and that his family are very deeply afflicted; his companion bereaved of an affectionate husband, his children (eight in number) of a tender father, his aged parents of a dutiful son. But they mourn not without hope. We have reason to believe that their loss is his eternal gain. Levi Morse.

Deposit, August 27, 1853.

Seventh-day Baptist Anniversaries.

THE Eleventh Anniversary of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society will be held at Adams Center, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on Fifth-day, October 6th, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M. The meeting will be opened with a missionary discourse; which will be followed by the reading of the Annual Reports of the Executive Board and other officers, and by addresses, occupying the whole day.

The Eleventh Anniversary of the American Sabbath Tract Society will be held at the same place in the morning of Sixth-day, Oct. 7, commencing at 9 o'clock.

The Fourth Anniversary of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society will be held at the same place in the afternoon of Sixth-day, commencing at 1 o'clock.

On Sabbath and First-day it is expected that there will be preaching, at such times and by such persons as the Church shall appoint. It is also expected, that the Executive Board of the Missionary Society will hold a meeting on First-day.

The Ohio Association.

THE Seventh-day Baptist Ohio Association will hold its next meeting with the Church in Jackson, Shelby Co., Ohio, commencing on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in October next, which will be the 6th of the month. Ministers and brethren from other Associations are invited to meet with us and participate in our deliberations. All such will meet with a welcome reception. Eli Forsythe, Cor. Sec.

North-Western Association.

THE North-Western Seventh-day Baptist Association will meet with the Church in Walworth, Walworth Co., Wis., on the fifth day of the week, September 22d, 1853, at ten o'clock A. M. Introductory sermon by Eld. L. A. Davis or Eld. Varnum Hull.

Clothing Establishment.

THE subscribers, under the firm of Titsworths & Dunn, have opened a Clothing Establishment at No. 22 Dey-street, New York, where they intend to keep constantly on hand, in large quantities and great variety, coats, pants, and vests. Country merchants desirous of introducing ready-made clothing as a branch of their business, may here obtain a supply on the most favorable terms. Individuals who desire to renew their wardrobes on short notice, may here be fitted with complete suits without delay; or, if they prefer it, may select their cloths and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention. An examination of our stock and facilities will, we trust, convince those who give us a call, that they can please themselves at No. 22 Dey-street as well as at any other place in the City of New York.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U. S. and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

Miscellaneous.

The End of Fifty-six Gamblers;

OR,

A Reminiscence of Gambling in Baltimore, during the last Sixteen Years.

Sixteen years since, in the capacity of a gambler of seven year's standing, I visited Baltimore, per agreement with one of the principal gamblers of that city. My acquaintance with the citizens was quite limited; with the gamblers general. I lost no time in cultivating such acquaintances as would prove most valuable to facilitate my movements, and give me a true knowledge of the manners and customs of the Baltimoreans.

Gambling at that time was countenanced by a great many citizens of high standing; many looked upon it as an agreeable recreation, without apparent fear of its evil consequences; and at some of the largest and most fashionable gambling houses might be seen nightly assembled, Judges, Prosecuting Attorneys, Sheriffs, and every grade of officials, down to the night-watch; together with merchants, clerks, bank officers, railroad contractors, exchange brokers, and men of all other respectable callings, including editors and publishers of some of the leading public journals, equally engaged in betting at the game of faro or roulette, drinking wine, and discussing politics. With these classes I formed no acquaintance outside of the gambling house. Many of the most successful Baltimore gamblers were looked upon as men of dignity, and respectable standing in society. I was intimate with fifty-six of this class, who were No. 1's, and aside from gambling, could not be reproached for dishonesty. These were gamblers in the games of faro, roulette, rolling faro, chuckerluck, cock, ring, and dog-fighting, horse and foot racing, thimble playing, &c., &c., combined with card manufacturers, who through their agents, at this time a well-known firm of Exchange Brokers, were represented, supplying the fraternity with marked cards, and discounting the notes of gaming citizens. The principal firm of this kind amassed a large fortune out of this class of victims, and retired from business worth over one million dollars. These men were stool-pigeons for two of the largest gambling houses in Calvert-st., for ten years. They were not addicted to play themselves, unless in a very small way, for the purpose of drawing in customers, and thus preventing suspicion from falling upon them. Many an unsuspecting youth was led by them to these dens of iniquity, to witness the beauties of the Faro Bank, Roulette Table, and enjoy the sumptuous suppers served up at eleven o'clock at night, composed of Terrapin, canvass-back Ducks, Champagne, and other rare delicacies prepared in order to suit the epicurean taste of the most fastidious. For their share they never received less than one-third of the winnings, and, where they discounted the paper of their victims, they received one-half. This soon filled their coffers to overflowing. They retired, disclaiming all acquaintance or association with their former companions in villiany.

But these former associates, both victims and gamblers, where are they? This question cannot be answered by them, nor through any other source than my pen, this side of eternity. Some of them have long since paid the last debt of nature, under the gallows, or by suicide; others have died premature deaths, occasioned by loathsome disease so common to all dissolute men; others are dragging their polluted bodies about the city on wooden legs; others groping their way through life, having lost their sight in fights around the gaming table; others are in the Maryland Penitentiary, or in some prison of a sister State, for murder and other high crime. And these, with the exception of five, are the only remnants of the fifty-six flourishing gamblers of Baltimore, sixteen years ago. Of these five, one alone finds employment in his profession, at his old stand in Calvert-st. He, too, has changed much—the frosts of over sixty winters have whitened his locks. This, with forty years of the gambler's curse stamped upon his brow, makes him truly a marked man.

A few days since he visited my hotel, where he met and recognized another gambler, apparently about the same age. They nervously grasped each other's polluted hands, when the Baltimorean remarked, "Twelve long years have passed since last we met—how great, how sad the change. Many of our friends have gone to their long home." "True," replied the other, tears starting to his eyes "you and I, likewise, will soon follow them." I heard their conversation for a few minutes, they unconscious of my presence. The Baltimorean then invited his friend to his gambling room in Calvert-st., where they could freely discuss matters of the past and present. I felt sick at heart to behold these two old men of sin leaving for the gambling room, as a place of comfort to their depraved natures, as though some joy was still left in that polluted den, which had not only destroyed the peace and happiness of one of them, but thousands of others. They did not reflect upon the sad truth that joy never yet entered within the walls of a gambling house.

The second of the remaining five is a man of about the same age as the former—possessing more of the animal than of the intellectual—and is what even gamblers term low and vulgar. He, at one time in his life, commanded some attention through the influence of a large property which he had accumulated by gambling. But his animal propensities and brutal treatment of his family, together with his expensive mode of living, not only dispossessed him of a great portion of his property, but has settled him low down in that grade of society which is only esteemed by those of similar habits of recklessness. He now consoles himself, so far as in his power, by gambling during the session of the Legislature at Annapolis, and playing swindling games of Faro at Baltimore. This, with an occasional trip to the South, fills up his time.

The third, a relative of the last mentioned, is second to no other man so far as vulgarity and low cunning villainy can be connected. In fact, he is capable of doing anything known in the annals of crime, not requiring deep sagacity or courage. But it is only justice to this fallen wretch that we should here credit his fall to No. 2. Though great the fall may seem, it is nevertheless true, that twenty years since, this man, now so base that crime can sink him no lower, was one of the most respectable Hackmen of Baltimore City! But the league of No. 2 succeeded in accomplishing his fall, and although a near relative, No. 2 considers he has been the means of a great accession to the fraternity. And as an evidence outside of No. 3, he can point to a son of the latter whom the father boasts of having educated in all the branches, (with the exception of Hackmanship,) known to him; showing by his conduct alone, the truth of the language of Dr. Nott, "that the thorough-bred gambler has no heart."

The fourth, now a man about fifty years of age, was at one time of his life considered a man of respectable standing; he was once elevated to the high office of constable, in or near Winchester, Va., and was notorious in that capacity as a THIEF CATCHER. This individual is quite as low in nature as No. 3, with more sagacity. His form is robust, and while in the capacity of thief catcher, he was said to be endowed with all the qualities requisite for success. In his earlier, and we hope more honest days, he might have introduced or imposed himself upon any person prone in the least to credulity. And even yet, although twenty years of successful fraud and crime have made their impress upon his brazen countenance, he with his mock benevolence and extravagant fund of impudence succeeds. His success has been to most of his acquaintances truly an enigma. To the writer nothing is more plain.

Shortly after his constableship in Virginia, in the capacity of a gambler's stool-pigeon and that of a "short card" gambler, he made a successful hit at the gambler's head-quarters, Washington City. His debût was not only successful in winning money, but in winning the heart of a beautiful, accomplished and virtuous young lady, to whom he was wedded. On this unfortunate union, and on it alone, rests the explanation of this man's villainous success. The high standing of his companion gave an impetus to his facilities, and beneath this axe have fallen the fortunes and reputations of some of the most noble men of our land. His success has amassed for him great wealth. He boasts that his expenses are over thirty thousand dollars per annum—that his income is over three times that amount. The truth, alas! is but too obvious. His person, as well as that of his lady, is adorned with a vulgar display of fine jewelry and other wearing apparel, yet he is noted as the most niggardly and tenacious in common dealings.

He, now, with an old convict as a colleague, runs two of these death-saws, in the shape of gambling-houses—one in Washington City, the other in Forsyth-st., Baltimore. At the former, may be seen this Satanic servant on each day, Sunday not excepted, presiding with all the grace and dignity which cultivated impudence has so bountifully bestowed upon him. His customers are members of both houses of Congress, with clerks of every Department of State, officers of both the army and navy, together with every profligate young man of wealth that falls within his grasp, or that of his numerous stool-pigeons. He employs at his two houses from 12 to 20 journeymen gamblers. None of these, and but few of his customers, ever have more than one invitation to visit his residence. This is extended merely to make them feel his station to be an uncommon one—as it truly is, and has been ever since his career took the date as a man of family, having for his companion a lady of excellent merit. Since this unfortunate union, the dark traces of ruin and death have followed close in his wake, not only at Washington and Baltimore, but throughout the land.

But his course of desolation must, like the second, above mentioned, soon find a topmost round, from whence, with double rapidity, will he descend, and when it is too late he will find that his ill gotten wealth and position will have vanished, leaving the slough of corruption for him to wallow in. No gambler or abettor can, with common sense, reasonably expect a better fate, for surely this fate alone can crime secure.

The fifth is about the age of the two first mentioned. He accumulated a large fortune by gambling, then joined the Church, and is now said to be a Christian, but the gamblers fate has followed close upon his heels, showing that neither his wealth nor his Christianity has shielded his grey head from the gambler's curse. It is true he renounced the vice some years since, but his son, an interesting boy, and a thorough-bred gambler, educated and accomplished in all the wiles known to his father, was not satisfied with the sin of gambling, but after having sat at play late one night, arose from the table maddened from the effects of gaming and the brandy bottle, and murdered his own colleage, for which he was tried and sentenced to serve 14 years and 6 months in the Maryland State Prison. And now, it is truly a painful sight to witness that aged reformed gambler, as he wends his way back and forth to that prison, the home of his incarcerated and ruined son, showing that "the way of the transgressor is hard." His age forbids the hope of his ever living to see his son a freeman, and certainly he is doomed to a life of despair until his dying day. But he, like the writer, and all others who have participated professionally in this most ruinous of all vices, must expect the curse of the gambler to fall heavy upon them in their old age. Though they may be rich, they are doomed to sorrow.

Daguerreotypes on Wood.

An important application of the photographic art has been made in Manchester, England, by which the process of wood engraving from Daguerreotypes will be materially economized, both in time and expense. The Manchester Guardian, of July 30, gives the following account of this, probably most recent improvement in the practice of this useful art:—

"Yesterday Mr. Robert Langton, wood engraver and draftsman, of Cross-st., brought to our office some very successful and beautiful specimens of photography, taken by himself, not on metal plates, or on paper, or on glass, but on blocks of box-wood, such as are ordinarily used in his own art for wood engravings. One was a striking portrait of himself; another was a view of the beautiful little Church at Worsley, erected a few years ago by the Earl and Countess of Ellesmere. The latter was comprised within the ordinary dimensions of a circle $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter; and, as the image of the Church is thus reversed, the design, in all its elegant proportions, and reduced to a miniature such as no hand of human artist can ever hope to rival, in its exquisite delicacy of light and shade, and its elaborate minuteness and detail—this photograph, so taken on a block of box-wood, is quite ready for the application of the wood engraver's burin. It is impossible to say how greatly this will advance the process of wood engraving, especially by saving all the preliminary labor of the draftsman; which, in many cases, constitutes the chief element in both the time and the cost attendant on the production of wood engravings of a high class. Even in many of the lower branches of the art, the new application of sun-drawing will be an invaluable auxiliary. For instance, it is an extremely difficult matter to get accurate drawings of machinery, in perspective, mechanical draughtsmen only represent it in plane; and artists are generally found extremely reluctant to employ a large amount of time so unprofitably, as the drawing of a complicated machine in perspective demands. Mr. Langton's daguerreotype can now in a few seconds accomplish what it would require hours for the artist to effect; and in point of accuracy, the instrument must ever have the preference. But great as will eventually be the boon which this new application of photography will confer on the practical art of wood engraving, it may be made more extensively valuable, as a cheap form of producing pictorial objects. By Mr. Langton's process, portraits, landscapes, &c., could be produced on any smooth piece of wood, duly prepared; and thus even wooden snuff-boxes, hand-screens, &c., may be decorated with portraits, or scenes from nature, or copies of works of art, at a cost much less than daguerreotypes on metal plates. Indeed, it is difficult to say where the applications and uses of this new process may not extend. Mr. Langton does not limit his invention to its use in wood engraving, but claims for it an equally useful and valuable application in other directions, in connection with practical art."

Speech of a Camanche Chief.

The Fort Smith Herald furnishes the following copy of the speech delivered by Pa-i-Yokah, a Camanche Chief, at the great Indian Council, recently held on the north fork of the Canadian River, about 350 miles from Fort Smith:—

"The Great Spirit, I have no doubt, is very glad to see so many Indians of different nations meeting together for the purpose of establishing peace, and giving their pledge to each other to live by it forever. I am very happy, indeed, to see and meet with my eastern brothers in council. We older men know correctly for what these nations of different tongues convoked, and we are glad that the peace, rarely known among us, is established for our good. It is our duty to teach our younger people—who do not understand the transactions to-day—the true meaning of our council; and let our rising generations be trained up and grow fast in this great white talk we are receiving to-day. Brothers, our lives are not in our hands; we cannot last always; the Great Spirit will call us away some day, and will put somebody else in our stead. I consider this talk to be like the roots of grass; in every spring the green and beautiful blades will shoot out, and blossoms of sweet odor; the autumnal moon will come and bite them off with its white teeth, but it has no effect on the roots. It is just so with us, we cannot die with this talk. While we live, we make this talk sweet to our people around our council fires, but after we are gone, this talk still survives, and still has it odorous smells to allunited nations. [Here he held up his right hand toward Heaven.] May the Great Spirit sanction our doings to-day, and faithfully make us keep this good talk given us from our brothers at the rising sun.

The Ohio has Two Sides.

We had spent some five days in creeping up the uninteresting Mississippi, with its low banks and muddy waters, and were now on the beautiful Ohio. We had seen nothing but slave villages, which as clearly as the impress of a signet ring, wore the stamp of the institution. I hope there are ten righteous men in Grand Gulf and Helena, and other such places. I say, I hope so. One morning we saw a very bright village, the only specimen of a northern town I had seen for a long time. It really did my heart good. My bump of "points of the compass" is strangely deficient, and I am much more likely to be "turned round" in a place than otherwise, and so I thought I at last saw one thriving slave village.

"What a fine Kentucky town," said I; "that looks like a New England village."

"No you don't!" said a neighbor, "that is in Illinois."

"Well, I thought it was a fine production for slavery; but really I supposed it was the Kentucky side."

"You can always know which side of the river a town is on, by the look of it; put the sunshiny towns on the free side, and the scaly towns on the slave side."

"And is the difference marked?"

"I once had a friend with a very long nose, say for instance six inches, the difference is as plain as the nose on that man's face."

Ballooning in Siberia.

A Siberian correspondent of the Independence Belge gives an account of the introduction of ærial navigation for practical purposes in that country. It seems that the enormous quantity of water produced by the melting of the snow, occasions a great rise in the rivers in the spring of the year, intercepting the communication between certain manufacturing works on the Oural, at the distance of three and a half verstes from each other, and separated by a small stream. In order to keep up the communication, and permit the workmen to pass and repass, a large stationary balloon is fixed by three cords over each of the factories at the height of about 200 metres. From each of these balloons is suspended a cable reaching the opposite factory, where it is attached to timbers constructed for the purpose. Between these two points, the cable is also supported by three intermediate balloons. The principal cable is provided with a pulley, on which is hung a light sheet-iron boat, holding two or three persons without inconvenience. The pulley itself is commanded by two cords attached to opposite points, permitting the boat to be drawn toward either factory at pleasure. The cord designed to draw up the pulley after it has descended on the cable, and from which the vehicle has been detached, passes over a small pulley connected with the lower part of the balloon, so that these two cords, and consequently the pulley to which they are attached, are managed by persons on the ground. The main pulley has also an arrangement for the convenient mounting of the boats, subject to the control of the passengers, and the boat is provided with a parachute in case of accident. Thus far the contrivance has worked in a very satisfactory manner.

The New Bedford Standard says, that six whale-ships which have arrived at that port brought home 9,093 barrels of whale oil, and 3,770 barrels of sperm oil, the aggregate value of which is $259,200.

EARLY RISING REQUIRED BY A WILL.—In the will of the late Mr. James Sergeant, of Leicester, is the following clause:—

"As my nephews are fond of indulging themselves in bed in the morning, and as I wish them to prove to the satisfaction of my executors that they have got out of bed in the morning, and either employed themselves in business, or taken exercise in the open air, from 5 till 8 o'clock every morning from the 5th of April to the 10th of Oct., being three hours each day; and from 7 till 9 o'clock in the morning from the 10th of Oct. to the 5th of April, being two hours every morning; this is to be done for some years, to the satisfaction of my executors, who may excuse them in case of illness, but the task must be made up when they are well; and if they will not do this, they shall not receive any share of my property. Temperance makes the faculties clear, and exercise makes them vigorous. It is temperance and exercise united that can alone insure the fittest state for mental or bodily exertion."

"THE OLD-FASHIONED BIBLE."—An English paper states that a copy of the first complete edition of the English Bible, printed by Miles Coverdale, bearing date 1435, was accidentally discovered, a short time since, in the false bottom of an old oak chest, at Holkham Hall, Norfolk, the seat of the Earl of Leicester. There are numerous imperfect copies of this Bible in existence, two being in the library of the British Museum, one in the Bodleian library at Oxford, one in the Cambridge University library; in fact, most of the great libraries and public institutions in England, as well as many private individuals, possess a volume. The copy now brought to light is the most valuable specimen of Miles Coverdale's labors hitherto known, being in every respect perfect; whereas all the other known copies are deficient of many leaves, both at the beginning and at the end. The proprietor at Holkham has had the book appropriately bound, and enclosed in an oaken box; and it now graces the shelves of its magnificent library. A London bookseller is said to have offered $500 for this bibliographical treasure.

MORE JAILS EMPTY—WHY?—The Burlington (Vt.) Courier says that last year when the present jailor took charge of the jail, there were seven in its cells, and that there have been, at different times, thirty others; but now, since the Vermont Maine Law has had time to produce its legitimate effects, locks and keys are useless, as the jail is without a tenant. This is the third jail in Vermont which has been emptied by the new prohibitory liquor law, and the editor very properly adds, "The simple truth is, the sale of liquor peoples jails—prohibiting its sale empties them—and it is in the power of the people to say which they will have."

VARIETY.

A young lady named Pierce, from one of the towns on Cape Cod, who was visiting friends in Blue Point, Scarboro, Me., in returning from a visit to the sea shore, on Tuesday evening, with a friend, instead of taking the public road back, took a path across a pasture, which was shorter. In the pasture, there were a few cows, who were playing together, and joining horns in sportive contest, which frightened the girl, who supposed that they would attack her, and notwithstanding the assurances of safety by her companion, who was familiar with such demonstrations, she fell into convulsions, through fear, probably ruptured a blood vessel internally, and died in three hours afterward.

The present mode of coupling cars is very awkward, and not always safe. George A. Wagner, of Addison, Steuben County, has invented a very simple substitute in the form of an iron tongue which slides into the coupling frame, and is attached or separated by the movement of a lever which rises to the platform. The connection or separation is effected instantaneously. But the most important feature of the invention is that if a car turns over, the tongue immediately slips out, leaving the deranged car disconnected.

We gave an account, not long since, of a society of young men in Cincinnati, formed some twenty-five years ago, for an annual dinner. It was called "the Society of the Last Man." It was then mentioned that but two of the original members were living. Since that announcement, one of these members, Mr. Tatem, has died, and Dr. Vattier becomes the sole survivor—"the Last Man." He is, according to his agreement, to dine alone on the next anniversary, with his six empty plates and chairs around him.

A marriage solemnized in South Carolina is indissoluble, either by the consent of the parties, or by the judgment of any foreign tribunal or statute of any foreign Legislature. No judicial tribunal in South Carolina has any authority to declare a divorce, or no divorce has ever been granted by the Legislature of South Carolina. Bad State for unhappy couples to reside in.

Grasshoppers are committing great ravages in Central and Northern New York. A letter from Adams says that a train of cars on the Rome and Watertown Railroad was recently stopped by them—so many having been crushed on the track as completely to oil it.

Every young man should remember, that the world will always honor industry. The vulgar and useless idler, whose energies of body and mind are rusting for want of occupation, may look with scorn—it is praise; his contempt is honor.

The great iron railroad bridge across the Monongahela river, about one mile above Fairmont, Va., was completed last week. It is stated that it cost four hundred and ninety-six thousand dollars.

Union Academy.

C. ROLLIN BURDICK, A. B., Graduate of Rochester University, Principal.

Mrs. H. A. BURDICK, Preceptress.

This institution, located at Shiloh, Cumberland Co., N. J., three and a half miles from Bridgeton, the county seat, and thirty-eight miles south from Philadelphia, will open its first term for the year 1853–4, on Wednesday, Aug. 23, continuing 14 weeks.

The officers, feeling grateful for past favors, and confident of giving satisfaction, solicit a large attendance for the coming year. The teachers flatter themselves that they can give satisfactory instruction in all the branches usually taught in Academies. Young gentlemen and ladies preparing for College, can here fit themselves for an advanced standing, and thus save considerable expense. A competent Pianist will be secured.

Good Board can be had at the Boarding Hall, or in private families, on reasonable terms.

TERMS.—Tuition, settled in advance, from $3 50 to $5 00. Incidentals, 25 cents. Piano music, $10 00. Drawing, crayoning, landscape painting, and painting in water colors, $2 00 each.

HON. LEWIS HOWELL, President.

SHILOH, N. J., July 26, 1853.

DeRuyter Institute.

Faculty.

REV. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., Principal, and Professor of Intellectual and Moral Science and Classical Literature.

Miss JOSEPHINE WILCOX, Preceptress, and Teacher of Parker's Aids, French, German, Botany, and Astronomy.

J. HENRY L. JONES, A. B., Professor of Mathematics and Natural Sciences, and Adjunct Professor of Greek and Latin.

Miss L. ELEANOR CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other competent Teachers will be employed to assist in the various departments, as occasion may require.

Calendar.

The ensuing academic year is divided as follows:—

First Term commences August 31, 1853; closes Dec. 6, 1853

Second Term commences Dec. 8, 1853; closes March 21, 1854.

Third Term commences March 23, 1854; closes June 27, 1854.

Information.

The Trustees deem it justice to say, that, having adopted a radical change of policy, by which they relieve the Faculty from all pecuniary responsibility, they design to place the School upon a firm and permanent basis, and give it a character of respectability among the first grade of Academies in our country. Grateful for past favors, they are determined to extend their sphere of usefulness, and thus command a greater degree of respect, and a still more liberal patronage from the public.

Discipline.

It is the policy of our Board to teach young men and young women to govern themselves; while at the same time it is expected that our Faculty will aim, in the most prudent and efficient manner possible, to secure that systematic order in all their exercises, which shall prepare students for the responsible duties of active life. While we cultivate the intellect, it shall be our aim also to develop those nobler faculties of the soul, which shall prepare the young to become useful and influential members of society.

Terms.

Tuition, which must be settled strictly in advance, is as follows:—

Primary course, per term,	$3 00
Middle course,	4 00
Advanced course,	5 00
Incidentals,	50

This Seminary is confidently commended to the public as a first-class Institution, supplied in an eminent degree with all the facilities of education usually found in the Colleges and Universities of this country. It is provided with ten departments of Instruction, having an able and experienced Instructor at the head of each, thus giving such a division of labor as can alone secure the highest ability in conducting each department. Students can here complete an entire course of collegiate education, or be prepared for usefulness in mechanical, agricultural, or commercial pursuits, or for entering immediately upon professional studies. The Teachers' Department supplies the public with at least one hundred and fifty experienced teachers of common schools annually, and the Department of Elementary and Agricultural Chemistry affords the young farmer all the facilities desirable in the best agricultural schools. Having recently completed another spacious and elegant edifice for a chapel and recitation rooms, and being now engaged in extensive enlargements and alterations for the accommodation of a much larger number of students than hitherto, the Trustees express their intention that the high character which this Institution has acquired, for thorough instruction, for strict moral and social training, and the best of educational advantages at a very moderate expense, shall be fully sustained. The location, on the N. Y. and Erie Railroad, two miles from the Alfred depot, is romantic, retired, and one of the healthiest in the world. Circulars, &c., gratuitous, on application to Prof. W. C. KENYON, or to Rev. N. V. HULL, Pres. of Trustees, Alfred Center, Allegany Co., N. Y.

THE BIBLE IN OUR COMMON SCHOOLS.

Number Seven.

BY C. ROLLIN BURDICK, A. B.

Our country is like a mighty mountain standing alone amidst a stormy ocean. The angry billows may lash its base, hurricanes and tornados may sweep over its sides, and the raging storm-demon may launch his thunder-bolts against its summit; yet it stands unmoved, the proud, defiant of storms. Its foundations are below the deeps, broad and ample. Its building is of adamant, and the storm cannot affect it. But when internal agents are at work, and we begin to feel the heavings and swayings of the earthquake, and hear the rumblings of internal commotion and strife; when we ascertain that its foundations, broad and ample though they may be, and of adamant, are melted and consumed by subterranean fires, and see its top flaming with volcanic light, and its sides scorched and scathed by the floods of molten rock, belched out from its crater, and flowing over them; then let us flee from it, and seek rather the mercies of the ocean than its protection. Its soil is deceitful—we cannot trust it. It may yield to our tread and precipitate us into its burning entrails. Or, perhaps, the next shock of the earthquake may loose its foundations, and sink it in the ocean, a shattered and fire-scathed wreck, where the waves and ocean storms shall chant its requiem. Such is our country. Her foundations, planted on the eternal and immutable principles of the Bible—righteousness, temperance, justice, liberty, equality, and brotherhood—will stand the shock of invading foes, and never fall; but when consumed by the fires of intemperance and lust, and shaken by the commotions of injustice, tyranny and oppression, her destruction is imminent and unless its work be stayed, her doom is sealed.

Among the crimes that stain our national escutcheon, and cry to Heaven for the avenging hand of God to be raised, is Slavery—the foulest, the most detestable, the most execrable system that ever found a place in any nation, or caused heaven to weep over the depravity of man. It is even now shaking the very foundations of our national superstructure, causing them to totter as if on the brink of a final overthrow. A great work is to be done to arrest the storm that is gathering in our horizon—for a terrible storm is gathering, though some of the false watchmen on the walls of Zion are crying "Peace, peace, when there is no peace." Not one groan or tear of the poor slave is lost. God hears, and sees, and remembers them all. He will not always suffer us to grind down our brother in the dust, and compel him to work for us without pay. The day of redress is not far distant, and if we do not take it into our own hands, God will call out other ministers to perform His work. In the Bible is my only hope for safety in this crisis of our national affairs. Slavery, held up in the full blaze of light which it sheds, will appear abominable, and I trust my countrymen will see it so, and be led to break every yoke, and let the captive go free. But this, as I believe, must be a work of time, and may God spare our country until that time shall be completed. The chains which hold the slave are not forged alone by the master, nor is it at the South alone that slavery exists. Its principles are interwoven into the woof and warp of our very existence as a nation. There seems to be an almost universal dislike among Americans for the negro race, which is at once the result and cause of slavery at the present time. Having been accustomed to see him degraded, we have learned to look upon him as an inferior being, and treat him as such. This makes us indifferent to his wrongs, and we do not use that power which God and the Constitution of our country gives us for his benefit. We suffer him to clank his chains, to weep, to bleed and die, unpitied and uncared for. He is disfranchised at the North, and hated by those who call themselves Christians. This colorphobia is deep-rooted, and cannot be easily removed from the minds of the people. Yet, thank God, I think it is yielding to the sway of the gospel of liberty and equality. Hope cheers me, and bids me labor on, throwing my mite into the scale for the negro's enfranchisement. But I despair of the possibility of rooting this entirely from the minds of the present generation. The mind of age is too rigid to yield to the truth when opposed to long-cherished prejudice. To our children we must turn for the consummation of this great work. Into their minds we must instill such principles as will cause them to redress every wrong which the negro race has suffered at our hands. This can be most effectually done by introducing Bible teachings more extensively into our schools. There is a generous impulse in the bosom of youth, which prompts to be just, unswayed by prejudice or passion. Let us seize upon this, mould it, and give it a right direction, by the aid of Bible teachings, and the work is done. The slave becomes a free man, liberated by this generous impulse.

In this age of free thinking and free acting, when men are forsaking the old channels of thought, throwing off the shackles of long-standing prejudice, unriveting the chains of church proscription, and learning to think and act for themselves, there is danger of carrying freedom of thought and action too far, and embracing errors more deadly than those of conservatism. This danger exists in both politics and religion. Facts go to prove it. One class of men, looking upon the enormities of the slave system, and seeing them protected and perpetuated by the strong arm of legislative power, and seeing also the extreme depravity of the license system as it is in vogue in many States, as well as other state and national crimes, have embraced the strange dogma that all civil governments are nuisances, and should not be tolerated in this enlightened age; that, left free to himself, man would be far happier than when restrained by legislative enactments. This seems to me like etherealization in the superlative degree, and altogether too untangible for man in his present state It must be reserved for those good followers of Mahomet, who are so happy as to attain to his seventh heaven; for Paul, who was caught up to the third heaven, and there saw unspeakable things, such as are not lawful for man to utter, did not dare stake his reputation upon the inculcation of such highly reformatory doctrines, but, on the contrary, taught the very opposite; that is, the necessity of such institutions, and the duty of obedience to the powers that be. These men labor, with might, to overthrow, to pluck up, root and branch, these grand hindrances to the progress and happiness of man. Could they have their way, kings and princes, and gray-haired senators, would alike be dethroned, and driven from the halls of legislation. Their palaces would be pulled down, and their legislative halls demolished. Disorder must, of course, succeed; justice would be hurled down from her pedestal; anarchy and confusion would set up their reign of terror; and the world, reformed to death, would become a moral and political wreck. Such absurd dogmas in politics open the way for the inculcation of still more glaring absurdities in other departments of thought; and, coming in collision with Bible teachings, as they evidently do, they inculcate infidel doctrines, thus showing themselves to be entire and unmitigated evil. Garrison and his followers nullify, stultify, kill, all the good influences they might command for the benefit of the slave, and for the general advancement of society, by their wild fanaticism, ultraisms, and ridiculous notions.

Things are equally bad in the religious world. All sorts of extravagancies are embraced as orthodox in this age of reform. Men, dissatisfied with their old tenets of faith, and breaking loose from the restraints of church government, throw up their hats for no-creedism, no church organization, nothing that is like things of old. Honest, whole-souled men, among whom might be named some of the first reformers of the age, by a strange freak in logic, have been led to embrace some of these curious doctrines, and thus have been the instruments of doing much evil instead of the good they intended. Men, cut loose from all church restraint, often act like silly pigs just released from their pens—they will caper and perform all manner of uncouth and awkward evolutions, just because they are free. So some men will believe any and every absurdity, just because they can, and nobody can hinder. Among this class of curiosities, I have been acquainted with one community holding to Second Advent doctrines. They tolerate no creeds, no church organization, and have carried their reforms in ethics still farther, by denying the immortality of the soul, a future state for infants, and contending for the destruction, instead of the eternal punishment, of the wicked, after judgment. The influences of these doctrines are at once visible, and show themselves, as might be expected, extremely pernicious. Public spirit is dead; wranglings, backbitings, tale telling, jests and discords are rife; brotherly love is defunct, and the order of the house of God is not observed.

The whole Christian world is a babel of unknown tongues. The church of Christ, shattered into a thousand fragments, by jars, discords, and heresies, is bleeding at every pore. The infidel world points the finger of scorn at our religion, because we quarrel so much over it. The Protestant knows the Roman Catholic to be false, because he is an idolater; while the Roman Catholic will swear that the Protestant is a heretic dog, because his clan is so much divided. Some men hoist the flag for Mormonism, some for Shakerism, and some for Socialism. This man is a Methodist, that a Baptist, and the other a Presbyterian. One Christian says there is no Sabbath; another says there is, but it is Sunday; and a third says, "Thy seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord the God." This man will eat the Lord's Supper with all Christians; that one will eat with none who do not believe as he does. One says Christ is equal with the Father; another says he is not. Some know that the Bible teaches election and final perseverance; and others know to the contrary. One man says you must be plunged under water to obey God; another says sprinkling or pouring will do; while a third says you need not be baptized at all. All this strange congeries of beliefs, cliques and clans, professedly finds its warrant in the Bible. This is extremely humiliating, but not the worst feature in the present condition of the Christian world. The wranglings, heart-burnings, jealousies, and hate, engendered by such a state of things, are enough to make an angel weep, were it possible for a pure and happy spirit; and, surely, nothing can be more detrimental to the progress of the gospel. It all arises from a want of proper understanding of the Bible. Let its truths and doctrines be more universally disseminated, and their spirit more fully imbibed, and these erroneous notions concerning civil government, these foolish religious teachings, and sectarian hate and exclusiveness, would find no place among Christians. I will venture my reputation, be it worth little or much, upon the assertion, that were the Bible placed in the hands of children, without note or comment, either oral or written, and its study more perseveringly enjoined, they would form more nearly correct notions of its teachings than are now held by the religious world, and the number of sects would be diminished tenfold. This affords an excellent reason for its more extensive use in our common schools.

Trust.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

The same old baffling questions! O my friend,
I cannot answer them. In vain I send
My soul into the dark, where never burn
The lamps of science, nor the natural light
Of Reason's sun and stars. I cannot learn
Their great and solemn meanings, nor discern
The awful secrets of the eyes that turn
Evermore on us through the day and night,
With silent challenge and a dumb demand,
Proffering the riddles of the dead unknown,
Like the calm Sphinxes, with their eyes of stone,
Questioning the centuries from their veils of sand!
I have no answer for myself or thee,
Save that I learned beside my mother's knee:
"All is of God that is, or is to be,
And God is good." Let this suffice us still,
Resting in childlike trust upon His will,
Who moves to His great ends, unthwarted by the ill!

A TALE OF WONDER.

The following letter, written on board the Hermes, the vessel which carried Sir George Bonham on his visit to the Chinese insurgents at Nanking, "tells very quietly a tale of wonder," as is remarked by The London Times.

H. M. S. HERMES, SHANGHAI, May 27, 1853.

I have just returned from Nanking, having taken Sir George Bonham there.

The Governor of this place, and other Chinese authorities, having proclaimed that we were going to assist them with 15 steamers, and it also appearing that the movement was religious, Sir George thought right to show that we were neutral, and, by going up, ascertain their intentions relative to foreigners.

On going up to Chin-kiang-foo, which was in the possession of the insurgents, they, taking for granted the truth of these proclamations, fired on us; and we, supposing this was the cause, and being anxious to come to an understanding, did not return their fire. On finding this, they desisted, but the imperial flotilla coming up, they reopened their fire, so we passed on; but the insurgents higher up, and on the opposite side, at Kiou Chou, not knowing the state of affairs, also fired, but we passed this also without firing. However, to prevent the recurrence, we seized two Chinese, and promised them some dollars to take a letter to the insurgents at Nanking; the result justified the precaution, for on our approach they opened fire, without any injury to us, as we remained out of gunshot.

On understanding from our messengers that we were neutral, they flocked on board with the greatest confidence, and continued to do so all the time we were there, evincing a curiosity quite unusual with Chinese. Some of the first that came at once suggested our coming nearer to the town, and actually fell to the capstan and clapped on the catfall to assist in the operations.

After inquiry I was going to write, but the fact is they let us know immediately that they professed Christianity—Protestant Christianity—and I believe sincerely, and many of them intelligently so; nor can there be a doubt of their Protestantism, for their expression is characteristic; they always said—as also the imperialists in speaking of them—that they were worshipers of Jesu, in contradistinction to that of worshipers of Tien-chu.

They circulate tracts, not copied from missionary tracts, but drawn from the Scriptures by themselves, and written in a far superior style of Chinese to that current, or, perhaps, possible to foreigners.

They are iconoclasts, and destroy every vestige of idol worship.

They adopt the Ten Commandments, translated by themselves, to which they have appended annotations; thus, they state under the seventh Commandment, that smoking opium is always associated with the sin mentioned there, and must be discontinued.

They behead for smoking opium, and bamboo for smoking tobacco.

They said they had the whole of our scriptures, but we only saw Genesis. I gave them two New Testaments in Chinese, and a naval and military Bible. This was, of course, English. On the occasion of my giving the New Testament the first time, there was no one present who could interpret, but the chief opened it, and after reading two or three passages, showed by his manner that he understood what it was and valued it; and, on the interpreter returning to my cabin, I told him he was to present it to his prince. He rose and made several bows, and otherwise expressed his thanks for the present.

They are very severe for any infraction of morals, and separate the sexes to prevent improprieties of any kind. They hold an open court, confronting litigants; not so in the old Chinese courts, where they nearly always have recourse to torture. They style the army the "Holy Army," and the name of Nanking they have changed to that of the "Holy City." They style each other "brethren," and they invariably called us "foreign brethren."

I rode with an interpreter about twelve miles, and must have passed 20,000 people, carrying rice, furniture, &c., and the interpreter assured me that he only heard one expression that could offend the nicest ear, whereas one can hardly move as many paces elsewhere without hearing many—indeed, I am told the very children use the grossest expressions in their ordinary play.

It was obvious to the commonest observer, that they were practically a different race. They had Gutzlaff's edition of Genesis, and the person they spoke most of was a Dr. Hobson, of Canton, or Lobside, also a medical missionary. The first belongs to the London mission, the other to the Rhenish mission. Perhaps the latter is the more probable, as he was attached to the same society as Gutzlaff, and is said to have itinerated in Quangsi, where the movement took its rise.

On inquiring of an imperialist belonging to the gunboats above Nanking the cause of the outbreak, he said that a number of them were in the habit of meeting in Quangsi for the worship of Jesu, and that the mandarins prohibited them, stating that they allowed no societies for the propagation of depraved doctrine; and as they persisted in meeting, they had some of them beheaded. The remainder took up arms in their own defense, commencing with 200. They now state they have 1,000,000 adherents. I have no doubt they have several hundred thousand at Nanking, Chin-kiang-foo, Yang-Chow, and Kwa-Chow.

They had about 20,000 daily employed while we were there, conveying rice into Nanking; and assuming that they had 1,000 full junks, many of which, we know, contained about 400 tuns each, they must have 150,000 tuns, all which the imperialists have been deprived of, being government tribute.

They were organizing their forces, and we saw them erecting batteries and putting guns in them—some of them good 24 pounders.

They seem very sanguine of success, and hold the imperialists very cheap. With similar arms, the former would have no difficulty in going direct to Pekin in a few days—certainly in a very short time. I believe, as it is, the insurgents will walk out of Nanking when they please so to determine. Meanwhile the difficulties of the imperialists are increasing, and with that their senseless policy of squeezing the people, even their most faithful adherents, and the feeling in favor of the insurgents is daily on the increase. They often say, "We knew this would be the last of his race;" and an English merchant at Shanghai told me that a Chinaman told him, several years ago, that this was the feeling existing in the breasts of some at that time.

While some of the imperialists are saying, "It is the will of Heaven that Tae-Ping Wang should succeed," others are saying, "Wait a little, and you will see that it will all blow over." The insurgents continue to strike heavy and decisive blows. A Chinese that we took up with us, describing the insurgents, said, "They are men of their word. If they say they will give you 20 licks of a bamboo, make your mind easy; they will not stop short at 19." Now, it is most unusual for a Chinaman to do what he says or mean what he says.

They are most frank in their manner, quite unlike what we are accustomed to in the Chinese; and, but for some misunderstanding about a claim of supremacy which they were said (I think improperly) to have set up, we should have understood them better.

They are fanatical, but not to the extent at first supposed, and, I dare say, less so than we think, and with little difficulty, I think, might be made less so.

They believe they have a mission from Heaven to kill all the Mantchoos, and they certainly put this in execution as far as they can; and, without attempting to justify this practice, I believe that nothing short of driving them out of the country can make civilization progressive in China.

They state that their king was taken up into Heaven, and there invested with power to reign; but this is mixed up with that which must be figurative, and therefore may mean no more than is said of all Chinese emperors, that they are empowered by Heaven to rule.

They say that their king has received revelations from time to time from God; but it is to be observed, that these are all respecting temporal things, and do not refer to the rule of life: they refer to things of temporary import.

I am the more inclined to believe that they do not hold these extravagant notions, from their saying that their scriptures were the same as ours, and that we were brethren, &c., and from Tae-Ping-Wang so distinctly commanding that his people should not use toward him even those expressions which are used in speaking of all their former sovereigns, such as "supreme," "high," and "father," as these belong only to God.

Then he makes somewhat light of rulers in comparison of what the old covenanters and others would call "the elect," and properly so, when he says the rulers are chosen of God and are His children, but they who are good are specially so.

They have no priests or ordained teachers, holding that all believers are qualified for such purposes; yet they have people with ecclesiastical titles.

Be they fanatical or not now, as they take the Bible for their rule of life, and circulate it freely, it will produce its necessary fruits, and eradicate all such errors. That they value the Bible, I can have no doubt. One of our men offered to buy one that was given to one of them, but he refused to sell it, neither would he let it out of his hands.

The only specific information we could obtain relating to the imperialists was from the insurgents, and was to the effect that they were in considerable numbers close up to the walls of Nanking; in fact, that their respective advanced posts were within gunshot of each other, yet this did not seem to affect the insurgents in the least; for during the few days we were there they had at least 20,000 men employed unloading and carrying the rice into the city, many more were employed carrying guns, &c., into position, others in erecting batteries, and others throwing up breastworks on the opposite side of the city to the imperialists, intending to repel us should we attack them, or the imperialist flotilla; but there was no chance of its going higher than Chin kiang foo.

Confidence was said to be on the increase among the old population, and they were gradually returning to their homes, and I fully believe this to be the case, as we saw many carrying furniture and clothes, &c., into the city. We observed, also, that the houses of the better classes of Chinese were sealed up by the insurgent chiefs, I fancy to prevent their being plundered; not so those of the Mantchoos, which they evidently considered fair game—the disgorgement of unjust gain and plunder from them or other Chinese. Their clear principle is China for the Chinese.

No reliance can be placed on the statements of the imperialists, but they may be estimated somewhat as they were in the latter part of their war with us—in proportion as they said they were gaining, in that ratio were they losing.

Yesterday they posted up here, notwithstanding that the authorities knew to the contrary, and also that we knew full well to the contrary, that Ching-kiang-foo was retaken by the imperialists on the Friday before we passed up. We knew that it was in the hands of the insurgents (and likely to continue so) a week later.

It was said for some time, that a descendant of the Ming dynasty (the last Chinese one) was at the head of this movement; but on our asking them if this was so, they said not, and seemed indifferent to the influence which they would lose by the denial, for the idea was not without its weight among the Chinese.

They say they are merely waiting a mandate from Heaven (this is the statement of a subordinate) to proceed to Pekin, seeming to make quite light of the fact that there is a Mantchoo army on the route. What a set of imbeciles the Imperialists are, may be gathered from the fact that the general commanding the armies at Nanking was in command in Quangsi, and was disgraced for not having put down the rebellion in its earlier stages, but by the successive degradation of his superiors, has again risen to the chief command, and the Emperor has lately invested him with viceregal power over seven provinces; and how little dependence there is upon his achieving any thing, may be gathered from the fact that he has been professedly beating the rebels and destroying them all the way up from Quangsi; and with this conquering army at their heels, that they brought their wives and families up with them, and have them now, with few exceptions, at Nanking.

It has been argued, that the insurgents must be very weak, since they have not held any of the towns they captured as they passed along—without much reason, I think; for they knew full well, that if they took the capital, the country would fall into their hands, since the numbers that understand who have the reins of Government are few, and these would turn round to hold or get place, for they have no affection for Mantchoo rule. Determined to win the Empire, they were regardless of keeping a retreat open. In this they resemble Cortes in destroying his ships; they gained both moral and physical force; and, strange enough, on any other supposition than that the Imperialists are horrid poltroons, though these insurgents show no disposition to return to their own province, the Imperialist Chinese Army has planted itself in their rear, instead of forming, or endeavoring to do so, a junction with the Mantchoo Army, to protect the approach on the capital, or to raise the siege of the Grand Canal, the investment of which is starving the capital out.

It is horrible to think that they cut off 20,000 Mantchoos, even to the infant at the breat, but they seem hostile only to them; yet it is still more horrible to think that the Mantchoos, in two of the many provinces, cut off as many within the year—(we know of 2,000 in six weeks)—and this in the name of justice! The former is the exception, the latter is the rule. It may prove the least sanguinary practice in the end. Like Cromwell's severity at Drogheda, it has struck terror into their opponents; the Mantchoos are chop-fallen, and almost afraid to approach them; they say that six of them would beat any twenty Imperialists; they talk of their strength, when we know a multitude of them are but boys, and of their red eyes, &c.

If they succeed—and I fancy they will, and soon—they will deliver 300,000,000 from the grossest immoralities, the most groveling of idolatries, and the most grinding of tyrannies. China will be opened to light, life and civilization, all which will be thrown, with all their influences and importance, into the Anglo-Saxon scale.

If they fail, Protestant Christianity—for whether spoken of by themselves or Imperialists, they are always styled "Worshipers of Yésu," which is characteristic—will be proscribed, because they are identified by individuals among, if not by, the Imperialists, as connected with Protestant Christianity, but who are now too politic to proclaim it, lest it should originate a sympathy among us. A partial despotism will be reëstablished for a few years: meanwhile the Jesuits will be active, working through their old ideas and forms of idol worship, and may establish a Romanist dynasty—that is, a court professing the Roman Catholic religion; and if the influence of the three hundred millions be thrown into the Popish scale, unless God himself work a miracle for our deliverance, good night to liberty.

The French Consul at Shanghae says it is a conspiracy got up by the Protestant missionaries and Canton servants of the English houses; and there can be no doubt that he will make every political use to their and to our disadvantage if they fail.

The French have long shown their hostility to the movement, yet they professed ignorance of its plans and principles, stating that they had no information; but since our return they have confessed that they had men (if not missionaries) among them—in disguise, however; for one of the insurgents confessed to us privately, that he was a Roman Catholic; and it is clear that they must have known, for the Taoutai governor of Shanghae told me that they had killed several Roman Catholics. This might well be of convetrs to the Jesuits, who permitted in their convents the worship of ancestors, and also a sort of baptized Buddhism.

One of the Hong Kong papers mentioned some time since that a number of military-looking priests had landed at Canton, as he supposed to assist the insurgents, thinking at that time that the movement had been originated by the Jesuits; most likely they were going to assist the Imperialists, as the French wanted us to do, and even got a requisition made upon us to do so.

Thousands of the insurgents visited the Hermes, and some few—very few—spoke a little broken English, and said they had been at school in Hong Kong. One said there were those among them who could translate the English scriptures.

One said, on going down among our men, that he was a Protestant; several said they were of the same religion as them; others, again, said that they were of the "Ten Commandment religion," the same as the schools at Hong Kong; and one said he was of the same religion as "King Victoria."

When we went into the city to see the chiefs, we were guided by a very nice boy of about 16, who, it appeared, had run away from his farther. He spoke good Mandarine, and gave us tolerable information on some points. The earnestness with which he enjoined the avoidance of certain vices and the adherence to the Ten Commandments, was amusing, stating that they knew they would not get the empire unless they kept them, and interlarding this with petitions for a double sword.

He told us that Tae-Ping-Wang had 36 wives; the princes twelve, eight, six, four, &c; but that polygamy was not allowed among the people generally. But on being asked whether they were small footed, he said they were all large, as they came up from Quangsi. This satisfies me that he could not have been well informed, as I think it was impossible that they could have brought up so many from Quangsi, and that it was very questionable whether they allow polygamy to any. However, it may be so, as they seem to have more knowledge of the Old than the New Testament.

We took them by surprise in our visit, and as some of their chiefs were absent, they had to be sent for. After detaining us a little, one of them came in and apologized for the delay, assuring us that this was the cause, and entreating us not to suppose that any slight was intended. However, when they did come, we did not get on, from some difficulty or fancied difficulty—I fully believe the latter—about etiquette; and therefore we were obliged to leave, in the opinion that it was a fancied difficulty, and that they did not claim supremacy. I think I am borne out by their wanting us to stop, dine and sleep, and see Tae-Ping-Wang in the morning. This was 5.30 P. M., and as we had six miles to return, we knew they would be anxious about us on board, so we left abruptly. They, however, came out among the crowd to see us away, wishing us to wait for chaises or better horses, and would not hear of us walking, as one or two wished to do. Numbers crowded round, but all were civil and good natured.

An imperialist told us that he had heard it stated as a reason for the movement, that Huen-su-chuen, or the Tae-Ping-Wang, had passed the first examination for literary honors, but that, on appearing a second time, though a very clever man, and fully entitled to his next step, the examiner, from some improper motive, would not give it him; and he said it might be that he was discontend at this treatment, and so stirred up a rebellion against authority.

On our repassing Chin-kiang-foo they fired on us, and in consequence of our returning it, the General came down with a letter of apology, and sent it off. A moutsee, one of the aborigines that have never been conquered, and who live in the mountainous districts of Quangsi, came off for the answer. This man stated that his people had had the scriptures for 200 years; and on questioning him through an interpreter, stated that these scriptures had come down from heaven about 2,000 years before, and were the same as those the remainder of the insurgents had; that they had been taken to Pekin about 1,000 years ago; and that it was thence his people got a copy, which they had multiplied. They were most hostile to the Mantchoos for their continuous persecution.

I fancy they have settled the vexed questions as to the proper rendering of God into Chinese. I fancy they say, "I am Shangti, and thou shalt have none other eikons but me." I have no doubt they will also show us that the Chinese translators have used other improper expressions, and have so been misunderstood, because the teachers that such translators have to assist them are seldom Christians, and are therefore nearly unacquainted with religious nomenclature. A literary Chinese thinks very little of a man that uses a common-place style, either in writing or speaking.

The quiet self-possession and confidence of the leaders we came in contact with was quite un-Chinese. When it was told them a second time, that we should in future return their fire, they seemed to think that we wished to frighten them, and said, "Well, do as you please; we are not afraid." Another time they said, "If you are come to assist us, we shall be glad; but do as you please; we are independent of your assistance; only, if you are going to join the Mantchoos, be good enough to let us know." And when told if they came to Shanghai and attacked any of our people there, they would be treated as the Mantchoos were in '42, they said, "But why should we fire upon you? We are brethren, and worship the same God."

Their policy is only to be known by first knowing their religion; and this, because of imperfectly understanding their language, we are not clear about. On the interpreter's first visit, he endeavored to explain to one of the princes the power and resources of England; he said, "We don't want to know that; we want to know your religion."

An hour of solitude, passed in sincere and earnest prayer, or the conflict with and the conquest over a single passion or "subtle bosom sin," will teach us more of thought, will more effectually awaken the faculty and form the habit of reflection, than a year's study in the school without them.

There are few higher gratifications than that of reflection on surmounted evils, when they were not incurred, not protracted by our fault, and neither reproach us with cowardice nor guilt.

Talk not so much of thy duties. Life is short. The time allotted us for action and achievement is hurrying to eternity.

THE GOSPEL IN CHINA AND THE REBELLION.

That the Gospel was carried into China at a very early period, is well known. Whether the Syrian tradition that Thomas, one of the Apostles, traveled into that country, is reliable, we need not stop to inquire. The Nestorian Christians, however, had their churches in China, as early as the seventh century, if not earlier. Two monks, who came to Constantinople in the year 552, bringing with them the eggs of the silk-worm, (from which period is to be dated the culture of silk in Europe,) had resided for a long time in China. The probability is that these monks were Nestorians, and that they had labored in China for the promotion of the Gospel. But be this as it may, the discovery, at Singan fu in Shensi, in the year 1625, of a stone tablet, bearing a remarkable inscription, setting forth that in the year 636 the Christian religion was introduced into the Empire, and received the sanction and countenance of the Emperor, places it beyond reasonable doubt that the missionary labors of the Nestorians were carried on quite extensively. According to this document, "There was a man in Judea of superior virtue, called Olopun," who came into China promulgating the Gospel. The Emperor made inquiry regarding the religion, and being convinced that it was true, gave command for its promulgation. "He raised Olopun to the rank of high priest and national protector. The law spread in every direction. The wealth of the state was boundless. Churches filled all the cities; and the families were rich, illustrious, and happy."

It must be borne in mind, that Singan was at this time the capital of the Empire, and the sovereign was one whose efficient administration made China one of the happiest nations on the earth. He enjoyed a world-wide renown, the princes of distant countries sending him their salutations by their Embassadors. Even the Greek Emperor Theodosius sent an Envoy to Singan, carrying presents of rubies and emeralds, as did also the Persians. Such was the favor shown to the Nestorian missions by this Emperor, and such the progress of Christianity under his reign, that while Europe was wrapped in the darkness and degradation of the Middle Ages, China was a land of light and religious freedom.

How extensive the prevalence of Christianity was, may be judged of, in some degree, from the fact that no less than three thousand priests, of the sect that came from Ta Tsin, [Judea] were by an imperial edict in the year 845 commanded to retire to private life. Numerous as the Christians were, however, and flourishing as were their churches, the wars of Gengis Khan and his descendants, which threw all Asia into commotion, and gave prevalence and strength to Mohammedanism, involved them in many trials. The systematic opposition of the Roman Catholic missionaries, who had in the meantime obtained a footing in the country, also contributed to undermine them. At length, in the 14th century, all traces of their churches and efforts were lost. And though there may still exist, somewhere in the isolated parts of the Empire, some writings or journals, which indicate the measure of success which they enjoyed, they have not yet come to the knowledge of the world. The probability is, however, that Budhists and other opposers have sought out and destroyed such books as existed. We must await the disclosures of the future, therefore, to ascertain the names and labors of those teachers of the Nestorian Church who lived and died for the Gospel among the Chinese.

According to a statement which appears on our first page, it appears that the Christianity of the Rebels, now moving against the Manchu Dynasty, dates back 200 years; at least, they profess to have had the Scriptures in their possession for so long a time. Their copy of the sacred records, they say, was obtained from Peking, to which place they had been taken a thousand years ago. There is nothing in this statement, which enables us to trace any connection between their Christianity, and the labors of the Nestorians. A thousand years ago falls somewhere near the close of what is called the Tang Dynasty, near the beginning of which the Nestorians first came into China. But though the reigning sovereign treated the Nestorian missionaries with kindness, and heard them rehearse the leading tenets of their doctrine, there is no certain evidence now remaining that any portion of the Bible was done into Chinese at that time. Still it is not improbable that a translation may have been effected. But why should it have been carried to Peking? It were more reasonable to suppose that, if the translation was effected at all, it was laid up at Singan, the capital, among the archives of the State, or in some apartment of the temple which the emperor ordered to be erected for the Christians. For Peking did not become the capital of the empire till some hundreds of years afterwards.

It is still more difficult to connect the Christianity of the Rebels with the efforts of the Romish missionaries. The first epoch of Roman Catholic missions in China is the thirteenth century, or about six hundred years ago; and it is not three hundred years since they assumed any degree of importance. It also appears that, during the sway of the Mongol princes, the Roman missionaries carried on their labors chiefly among their tribes, and did not labor much among the Chinese.

As for modern Protestant missions to China, none of them date prior to the commencement of the present century. Whence originated, then, the Christianity of the Rebels? How came they by the Scriptures? Whence came their knowledge of God and of his Son Jesus Christ? If faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God, by what means were they brought into contact with the truth which makes free? These are interesting questions upon which we trust future disclosures will throw some light.

Certain it is, that no Protestant missions have been planted in that part of China where the Rebellion took its rise. But may it not be, that some traces of Nestorian missionary labor yet remain in the mountainous and secluded parts of Quangsi? In those parts dwell a race of people that were never subdued by the Tartars, and between them and the rest of the empire there has been but little intercourse. They have ever been actuated by that love of freedom, which the gospel always inspires; and may it not be, that among them has lingered that knowledge of divine truth, which the Nestorians once communicated, and which God is now making the animating principle of a mighty revolution? T. B. B.

FAITH AND FORGIVENESS.

Manifold are the ways pursued by those attempting to produce reforms, either individual or social; but there can be no true, soul-purifying, life-giving reform, without the Bible for its starting point and guide. No one can truly cleanse his way without taking heed thereto according to the word of God. Ps. 119: 9. And, farther, the great fundamental principles of the Bible are to form the great and only foundation of all true Christian reform and perfectibility. The great central principle of the Bible relating to man's change and holiness, is faith in Jesus Christ. There can be no true change of heart—no true holiness—for him that hath sinned, without this faith.

True, there may be much advancement in morality—great attainments in all of the outward forms of right—also great quickness in the intellectual perception of right and wrong; the conscience may be ready in its promptings; we may yield implicit obedience to all its dictates. But without faith in Christ there can be no sense of forgiveness of sins. How cheerless are all reforms without the blessed assurance of forgiveness of past transgressions! We may reform in our lives; but if we feel that all of our past sins are enveloping us, like a dark shroud, and spotting and polluting the inmost recesses of our souls, how saddening, how sickening, the thought. On the other hand, if we start in a reformatory course—in the path of holiness—with the the assurance of forgiveness for all sins hereto fore committed, it throws an indescribable halo of light and glory around our pathway—spreads joy and love throughout our souls.

Again, what is repentance, one of the antecedents of all true individual reform, without the possibility of forgiveness? You have, doubtless, heard or read of those who have stood by the grave of departed friends, and shed bitter tears of regret for injuries done those friends during their life-time. What was it that made those tears so bitter? Did it not spring from a consciousness that there was no hope of forgiveness? Who, in such a situation, would not give worlds, if he but had them to give, if that departed friend could be restored to life just long enough to say, "You are forgiven?" So, likewise, when we repent of our sins against Heaven, and resolve upon a reform in our lives, the first and most important response we look for is—"You are forgiven." This cannot be attained but by faith in Christ, with humble repentance. Here must be the starting of every soul striving after holiness. This is the foundation of all true righteousness—all true holiness of character. Are we going about to establish our own righteousness in any other way than this? Are we striving to build up a system of morals independent of repentance and faith in Jesus? If so, we shall most assuredly fail. We may, it is true, independent of this, by rules, resolutions, and severe discipline, attain to a good degree of morality; yet, what will all this profit, if we have no sense of forgiveness, with the higher love and communion ever attendant upon the true child of God?

We not only wish to feel a sense of forgiveness for the past; but all along our pathway, we shall continue to slip. Frequently we shall feel the sense of guilt resting upon our souls. We want some friend to whom we can go at such times, with the full assurance that he is able and willing to forgive all that come unto him aright. Christ is such a friend. We can always go to him with the assurance, that if we go in the right spirit, he will never cast us off. He will not only grant free pardon, but give us aid in the hour of temptation.

Thus prepared, pardoned of all our sins, reconciled with Heaven, with Christ for our friend, his Spirit for our guide and comforter, we are prepared to start in the road leading to perfection—prepared to commence reformatory measures upon others—upon the world. The moving, energizing principle of life and activity should be love—pure love to God and man. Without love, in its grand and disinterested forms, moving us to action—action guided by the idea of duty—all of our labors will amount to but little. We may, indeed, be precise formalists, paying tithe with exactness and care, but neglecting the weightier matters of the law. We may, indeed, be furious zealots, or hot-headed, hair-brained fanatics, running wild with some favorite idea; but we can never be the true Christian reformer, without the Spirit of Christ. Without true love and faith, we shall labor as labors the slave, fearing the lash and chain; with them, we shall be like the child clinging to the arm of his father, looking up into his face, and saying, by every expression and gesture, Father, what is thy will concerning me? May such faith and love and joy, with their everlasting rewards, be ours. *

YOUNG PREACHERS.

The way of encouraging young men to prepare themselves for the work of the ministry, is a good deal talked of in these days. The Methodists particularly are discussing it through their papers, and suggesting methods not heretofore thought of. No doubt good would come of it, if other denominations would give more attention to the subject. It has always seemed to us one of the most difficult things, to administer aid and comfort in such cases so as to be sure of doing good and not hurt. There are doubtless many modest and retiring young men, almost unconscious of their abilities, who would be eminently useful if they could be brought forward to try their gifts, and thus put in the way of seeing what they might do. On the other hand, there are young men, of more confidence and pretension than abilities, to whom the same course of treatment would prove injurious. Much wisdom and grace are necessary to the invariably successful discharge of duty in this respect, on the part of individuals and churches. The following paragraph on the subject, from the Western Christian Advocate, a Methodist paper, contains valuable hints to pastors and churches:—

"To counteract the deficiency in our present race of young men, either with scholastic attainments or with a small portion of them, we propose that preachers, official members, and members, agree to furnish more opportunities to young men who are believed to be called to preach, so that they may exercise their gifts more frequently as exhorters and preachers. At the prayer-meetings let them often exhort. Let the preacher in charge absent himself occasionally for this purpose. Let the young preacher preach on the week-day evenings occasionally, and let him also preach occasionally on Sabbaths. Let the church members make it a duty to hear the young man, and bear with his short-comings, avoiding criticisms, except with special reference to himself; and let this be considered a solemn duty of preachers and lay members to aid and duly encourage the young man. Let all consider that the ministry is God's ordinance, and that it is deposited in earthen vessels—these vessels surrounded with human infirmities. But God, by his Spirit, is with the ministry, and the power is of him. With such a spirit in the people, there would be less demand for mere eloquence and great gifts, and a greater reliance on God. Much prayer on the part of the members, and a greater reliance on God, would be of infinitely more importance than shining attainments in the ministry."

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

During "anniversary week," in May last, a meeting of friends of the Temperance Cause was called in New York, to make arrangements for a World's Temperance Convention to be held in the month of September. At that meeting, certain women claimed the privilege of participating by way of speech-making—a privilege which the majority did not think best to grant them. Hence they and those who sympathized with them withdrew, after considerable sparring, and resolved to hold a Convention on their own account, to come off one week before that of the old-fashioned temperance people.

This Convention, called the "Whole World's Temperance Convention," was held at Metropolitan Hall, New York, on the fifth and sixth days of last week. It was tolerably well attended, and its proceedings were quite spirited. Rev. Thomas W. Higginson, of Massachusetts, presided, assisted by eighteen Vice Presidents, among whom were John Pierpont, P. T. Barnum, and Horace Greeley. The principal speakers during the first day and evening were Cherles C. Burleigh, Rev. Miss Antoinette L. Brown, Horace Greeley, Mrs. Mary Jackson of England, Richard D. Glazier, Rev. Thomas Goldsmith, P. T. Barnum, and Miss Lucy Stone. On the second day of the session speeches were made by Eusephius Bernard, Rev. W. H. Channing, Joseph A. Dugdale, Arnold Buffum, Rev. Mr. Armstrong, Rev. Mr. Whitney, Mrs. C. P. Nichols, Oliver Johnson, Rev. Mr. Ebaugh, Mr. Sabin, Dr. DeWolf, Miss Emily Clarke, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Mrs. Frances D. Gage, Rev. John Pierpont, and Col. E. L. Snow. Of course we can not think of giving even an abstract of these speeches. It must suffice to give the Resolutions upon which they were made, and to the general drift of which they were for the most part conformed.

The Resolutions.

1. Resolved, That the cause of Total Abstinence from All that may Intoxicate—whether considered with regard to the magnitude and virulence of the evils it combats, to the good it has already achieved, to the work which it has still to do, or to the power of the selfish interests and depraved appetites which it combats and must vanquish—deserves the warmest sympathy and the most active, devoted support of every servant of God, every lover of Humanity.

2. Resolved, That it especially behooves the Christian Church, in all its divisions and denominations, as also every other religious organization, to coöperate with all its might in the great work of Temperance Reform, by the diffusion of light and truth with regard to the nature and effects of Alcoholic Liquors, by the enforcement of Total Abstinence as a part of its imperative discipline, and by the restraining of all whom it may influence, all who recognize its authority, from any participation in the guilty gains of the Liquor Traffic.

3. Resolved, That the manufacture and sale of Alcoholic Beverages, in view of the moral certainty that they will be used, nine times in ten, to the injury if not the ruin of their consumers, is an immoral and destructive business, in which no one who recognizes the obligation of Love to God and Man can henceforth engage without guilt; and we do most earnestly entreat those involved in it to ponder well their steps, and ask themselves this question—"Is [illegible] business of a distiller, a brewer, a rumseller, one wherein I ought to be willing to live and content to die?"

4. Resolved, That the State should be every where and to the extent of its ability a guardian of the weak, a protector of the assailed, an admonisher of the beguiled and tempted, among its citizens or subjects—that it should ever revere and conform to the Divinely prescribed supplication, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil"—and that there is no position toward the Liquor Traffic which it can consistently and worthily maintain but that of declared and uncompromising hostility.

5. Resolved, That the fundamental, undeniable, scientifically demonstrated fact, that Alcohol is a poison, of itself suffices to prove that it ought not to be presented in such forms and combinations as will tend to disguise its character and blind the uninformed to its baleful potency; but should always be sent forth from the drug-store and the chemical laboratory, where alone it should be sold, either pure and undiluted, or in such combinations as do not disguise its deadly properties, and do not tempt a depraved appetite or a reckless desire for novel sensations; for, since Satan is only perilous to the peace and happiness of Eden when disguised, it is a crime to assist him in disguising himself.

6. Resolved, That we impeach the use of fermented or Alcoholic Wine in the solemn celebration of the Eucharist, as a profane and impious desecration; since that which poisons and destroys men can be no true symbol of that which purifies, restores and saves; and we challenge the current assumption that Wine devoid of Alcohol is unattainable, in a country where the grape grows so profusely, and in an age when the resources of chemistry are so abundant as in ours, as founded in the grossest ignorance, the most indolent heedlessness, or the most flagrant dishonesty.

7. Resolved, That while all well-directed efforts to reclaim to virtue, self-respect, usefulness and happiness, the unfortunate victims of Intemperance, should receive our ready and ardent coöperation, it is nevertheless a truth not to be concealed, that DRUNKENNESS IS A CRIME—that no father, husband or son—no mother, wife or daughter—has any moral right to be a drunkard; and that they who are such are deserving of sympathy only in common with the libertine, harlot, gambler, thief, burglar, robber and assassin.

8. Resolved, That ample experience has demonstrated, what the prescience of sages and philanthropists long ago affirmed, that all wise effort for the removal of evils should begin at the root and deal with causes rather than effects; and that to attempt the eradication of Intemperance without objecting to the License System or opposing the legal protection of the Rum Traffic, would be as shallow and absurd as to attempt the destruction of a living tree by pruning off some of its outermost branches.

9. Resolved, That Human Laws should in all things be based upon and conform to the sovereign Law of God, as summed up in those Divine injunctions, "Love God with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself," and "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you;" and therefore the licensing of men to sell Intoxicating Beverage is irreconcilably at war with any just idea of the nature, functions and ends of Government, as well as with that Higher Law which bids us "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

10. Resolved, That THE MAINE LAW, so called, is superior to all preceding enactments respecting the Liquor Traffic, in that it consistently and explicitly forbids all traffic in Intoxicating Beverages as such, makes the rumseller's liquor and implements of trade conclusive evidence of a guilty intent to sell, instead of requiring specific proof of a particular, positive act of sale, confiscates and destroys those implements, like those of the gambler and counterfeiter, authorizes prompt and efficient searches of suspected premises on oath or information that the Liquor Traffic is probably prosecuted there, and places generally in the hands of Temperance men the means of thoroughly breaking up and suppressing the work of death wherever they faithfully and fearlessly do their duty; and we most earnestly entreat our brethren in every State and county to spare no effort to procure the general enactment of this Law, so modified and improved, according to the dictates of experience, as to render it a most efficient terror to evil doers and a mortal blow to the Liquor Traffic.

11. Resolved, That the cry, "The Maine Law is ineffectual," is raised entirely by those who never desired, or at least never tried, to have it otherwise; while we have abundant evidence, in the hostility and alarm of our adversaries, as well as in the direct testimony of friends, that the Law does work a gratifying diminution of the Liquor Traffic, even where public sentiment and public officers prove unfaithful to the duty of giving the Law full force, and thus stopping the desolating traffic altogether.

12. Resolved, That we do most earnestly entreat our fellow-citizens friendly to the Temperance Cause, in voting for law-makers, to subordinate all partisan or other considerations to the securing of Legislators that will enact, uphold, and from time to time improve, Laws of Prohibition—regarding that as of infinitely greater consequence than any thing else likely to be affected by the manner in which their votes are this year cast.

13. Resolved, That the present exigencies of the Temperance Cause imperatively demand the immediate and rapid multiplication of Temperance Tracts, more elaborate Essays, and Charts illustrating the effects of Alcohol on the Human System; and we therefore call upon our Publishers, Booksellers and Periodical Agents to issue or purchase such tracts, essays, and charts in infinite variety and limitless abundance, pledging ourselves to promote their circulation by every means within our power.

14. Resolved, That in the prosecution of the Temperance Reform we are determined to know no distinction of Creed, Caste or Sex—of section, party or condition—but to fraternize thoroughly and act cordially with all who in heart and life, by word and deed, prove themselves worthy and earnest champions of Total Abstinence.

15. Resolved, That we respectfully and affectionately exhort all who receive as truth the sentiments expressed in these Resolves, to live and labor in consistency therewith, and to lose no time in forming or perfecting organizations calculated to ensure efficiency to their efforts and triumph to their cause.

Resolved, That we urge our fellow-citizens to petition Congress so to modify our Tariff laws as that they shall no longer protect and justify the importation of intoxicating liquors into States which have prohibited, or may hereafter prohibit the sale and diffusion of such liquors.

Resolved, That a natural, proper and efficient counteraction to the appetite for debasing indulgence and pernicious excitement is to be found in providing for all legitimate and healthful sources of pure, innocent, elevating pleasures of social and spiritual enjoyment; and, therefore, that the library and reading-room—the lyceum and music hall—galleries of paintings and sculpture—social assembly-rooms and pleasure grounds—should take the place of the bar-room and rum-cellar.

Resolved, That sound political economy concurs with sound morality in condemning the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating drinks, since their cost to the consumer exceeds the actual cost of their production, in a proportion five times as great as obtains in the case of useful articles; therefore, if the money spent for alcoholic beverages were devoted to the purchase of articles of utility, the present extravagant profits of distillers and rumsellers would be employed in cherishing legitimate branches of productive industry, which give to the labor bestowed upon them five times as great a proportion of their price as now goes to the labor for producing alcohol.

A "SABBATH" LECTURE.

BERLIN, Wis., August 29th, 1853.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

According to previous appointment, the Rev. Mr. Bristol delivered his lecture on the Sabbath yesterday, at half past four o'clock, at Bluffton. His texts were Col. 2: 16, and Rev. 1; 10. His first position was, that in consequence of the rotation of the earth, there is great difficulty in regard to exact time, and therefore exact time is not important to the sabbatic rest. In the second place, he attempted to show, by a critical examination of the term Sabbath days in his text, that the "Jewish Sabbath" was abrogated. This critical examination consisted mainly in quoting Matt. 12: 1, and 28: 1; Mark 1: 21, 2: 23, 27, 3: 2; Luke 6: 5; John 7: 22, Acts 1: 13. In all these places, he said, the terms were the same in the original as that in the text, and as these referred to the "Jewish Sabbath," the term "Sabbath days" in the text also referred to the same day. And, in addition, he referred to Tract No. 6, Reason 9th, to prove that Seventh-day Baptists maintain the same position. Having disposed of Jehovah's Sabbath so much to his satisfaction, he then proceeded to his next text, viz., Rev. 1: 10. But as the text did not say what day is the Lord's, he proceeded to show from Ignatius, Barnabas, Pliny, Theophilus, Ireneus, Dyonisius, Tertullian, and Eusebius, that it is the resurrection day, the queen of days, the first day of the week. In the first part of his discourse, he declared that any thing could be proved by history and the fathers; and really it seemed to me to be true. This discourse took opposite ground to that of Mr. Cobb and most of the first-day people in this section, as it left the resurrection out of the question as argument. But as Mr. B. is a popular preacher of the Congregational order, we shall undoubtedly see a rallying around the new doctrine. Surely, the Sunday arguments are legion. The rotation of the earth seems to be a great hobby for Sunday sticklers to ride on in this part of the West just now. Perhaps it is Dr. Potts' echo, which has just reached Wisconsin. One thing is certain, they are on the roll, and all that we have to do who have Jehovah's truth to defend, is to let our light shine. They have gone around the world till they are dizzy; and probably, when they are satisfied that Seventh-day Baptists know that the earth is round, and like a ball seems swinging in the air, something else will be concocted. Yours for the truth

AFFAIRS IN CHINA.

The English papers received by the last steamer bring Hong Kong dates to June 23d, and Shanghai dates to June 9th, one week later than previously received.

At Hong Kong and Canton all was quiet, but matters were still in a state of uncertainty, the authorities being apprehensive that the storm of civil discord and war was not far off. The defenses are not altogether neglected, but, should the Christian forces venture to attack the place, the capture would be an easy matter. Among the Chinese the prevailing opinion appears to be, that on the fall of Pekin, the people of Canton, the Executive included, will declare in favor of the new dynasty.

The conduct of the rebel force in possession of Amoy attracts a good deal of the public attention. Inquiry has determined that the Amoy insurgents are in no way connected with the Christian army at Nankin, but consist wholly of members of the Triad Societies, or "small knife" men, who, taking advantage of the political distraction of the Empire, have resolved to carve out a small province for themselves. Although these insurgents consist of the rabble, it is clear that the heads of their Societies possess a great amount of influence over them.

The Friend of China supplies the following interesting items relative to the state of affairs at Amoy:—

"Although the so-called small knife society, in possession of Amoy, are not in direct connection with that larger body of revolutionists who, for distinction sake, must in future be called the Christian army, still their conduct and promises are of such commendable character, that we should feel great regret at seeing them displaced by the Tartars, whose antecedents leave us nothing to hope in the way of progress, and much to fear from the impression now generally entertained by the friends of Hienfung, that, had the entrance of Christianity been opposed, things would never have arrived at the present pass. An instance of this kind of opposition was recently experienced at Changchow, whence a request was received by an English missionary that he would come and preach the word of life—that word under which insurgents in the north were fighting and conquering. Responding to the call, two Chinese preachers were sent from one of the American societies, but, unfortunately, while they were there, a riot occurred, and, with twelve others, one of the Chinese Christian preachers was captured by the Tartars—who still maintain some show of government in the place—and with very little form of trial all of them were immediately decapitated, the preacher suffering, it is alleged, because he was a Christian."

From Shanghai there is but little further intelligence of the condition and progress of the Christian army in possession of Nankin. The imperial officers at Shanghai were making the most active preparations for defense and offense. The difficulty of transit through the interior of the country, arising from the unsettled state of affairs, had become very great. Money was exceedingly scarce, and it was impossible to realize hard cash for bills on London and India.

THE INDEPENDENT DEMOCRACY.

The Independent Democracy of New York held a State Comvention at Syracuse, on Fourth-day, August 31st, for the purpose of nominating a ticket for the coming election. William Jay of New York presided, and among the speakers were John P. Hale, Gerrit Smith, and Senator Chase. A series of resolutions, defining the position of the party, was adopted, from which we copy the following:—

Resolved, That upon questions affecting the internal policy of this State, we continue to affirm the doctrine of previous conventions; and hence we maintain that a wise and true policy demands that the constant care of the State be directed to the passage of laws which shall secure equal rights and privileges to all its citizens, and the right of trial by Jury to all, without regard to color or condition; to encourage the diffusion of general education among all the people; to promote the interests of agriculture; and especially by the establishment of schools and colleges devoted to agricultural science, and by encouraging the conversion of all leasehold estates into estates in fee; to hasten a development of all the resources of the State by fostering a wise and prudent system of internal improvements; to provide for the preservation of the public morals and the right of each citizen to be secure from the vices of every other citizen; to reduce taxation and crime by proper and stringent legislation directed against the cause of taxation and crime; and finally, to attach to the soil of the State those who may be born upon it, by recognizing, in all its policy, the high destiny to which a gracious Providence has manifestly invited it, by becoming the first among the States of the earth.

The following ticket for State officers was put in nomination:

Sec. of State		CHAS. B. SEDGWICK.
Controller		SETH M. GATES.
Attorney-General		JOHN JAY.
Treasurer		NATHAN SOULE.
Canal Com.		CHAS. G. CASE.
Prison Inspector		HORACE BOARDMAN.
State Engineer		SILAS CORNELL.
Judge of Appeals	(full term)	LEONARD GIBBS.
Judge of Appeals	(short term)	EDWARD I. CHASE.
Clerk of Appeals		THOS. G. FROST.

SUNDAY ANTI-SLAVERY MEETING.—As there were a great many anti-slavery lecturers in New York last Sunday, the City Anti-Slavery Society arranged for meetings at Metropolitan Hall in the afternoon and evening. They were well attended, and stirring speeches were made by Elizabeth Packson, C. C. Burleigh, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, an old colored woman named "Sojourn Truth," Mrs. Lucretia Mott, and Miss Lucy Stone. In the evening, while Miss Stone was speaking, a gang of rowdies commenced making a disturbance. She managed to say what she wanted to, however; but the voices of subsequent speakers were so drowned by the commotion of the rabble, that it was deemed expedient to adjourn the meeting in the midst of their display of zeal for the Union.

FARE TO THE ANNIVERSARIES.—Charles Potter of Adams informs us, that arrangements have been made with the Rome and Watertown Railroad to take delegates from Rome to Adams and back for one fare—tickets to be obtained at the office in Rome after October 3d, and hold good till October 14th. The fare from New York to Rome is $3 26. From Rome to Adams and back about $1 70. Persons leaving New York by steamboat at 6 o'clock Third-day evening, will reach Adams Fourth-day afternoon.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The Crystal Palace is now in order for visitors. Nearly all the boxes have been opened and their contents arranged; the room for machinery is complete, and the machinery in motion; the pictures, of which there is a large collection, are tastefully arranged in a gallery built expressly for them. Evening exhibitions have commenced, giving visitors an opportunity to see the articles by daylight and gaslight. The Palace is open from ten o'clock A. M. to ten o'clock P. M. Tickets are now issued for one dollar admitting the holder one week.

"WONDERS OF THE INSECT WORLD," is the title of a beautiful twelve mo. volume of 336 pages, published by Phillips, Sampson & Co., Boston. It is from the pen of FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH, and forms a sequel to his previous publications on Quadrupeds and Birds. The work contains a great variety of facts and anecdotes, gracefully told, and is admirably suited to a juvenile library.

☞ Eld JOSHUA HILL has located at Montra, Shelby Co., Ohio, and requests his correspondents to addressed him accordingly.

Severing the Pastoral Relation.—The election of Dr. E. P. Humphrey, 18 years pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church in Louisville, to a professorship in the new Theological Seminary at Danville, and his consequent tender of his resignation to the church, called forth a strong remonstrance from the latter, who declared it to be their "deliberate judgment that the pastoral relation which he sustains to the church ought not to be dissolved," and appealed to the presbytery "to leave undisturbed a union cemented by mutual love, redounding to the glory of God, and promising a future so bright, and full of hope to the Christian." This was sustained by a petition, signed by 275 young men, "not members of the church, but occasional and stated attendants;" another by 50 members of the bar, and 95 other citizens, and a third by a long list of ladies. The result is thus given by the Presbyterian Herald :—

"Presbytery, after hearing all these affecting appeals to them to spare the pastor, and duly discussing the whole matter, and having a decided expression from the Dr. that he still felt it to be his duty to obey the summons, granted his request, and directed Rev. Dr. Breckinridge, or Dr. W. C. Matthews, as his alternate, to preach in the pulpit on the coming Sabbath, and declare it vacant. We have rarely witnessed a more solemn and affecting scene than was presented in the church during the progress of the discussion. The deepest anxiety was depicted on the countenances of the waiting congregation, which, when the final vote was announced by the Moderator, suddenly changed into unmingled sorrow and disappointment. Tears flowed down the cheeks of some whose eyes were unused to weeping. It was a lovely exhibition of the feeling which exists between a faithful pastor and his flock."

Negro Meetings in Maryland.—The following paragraph from the Baltimore County Advocate, shows that in Maryland even—sometimes boastfully called the home of religious liberty—one class of citizens at least is very decidedly restricted in the matter of attending religious meetings :—

"We understand, from an undoubted source, that Lloyd W. Williams, Esq., our State's Attorney, has given instructions to Sheriff Storm, to summon a force sufficient to arrest and imprison all slaves or free blacks, who may hereafter be found congregated together within the borders of our County, attending negro camp-meetings, &c., and that he has given due notice of this to the officers of the Companies of such Railroads leaving the city of Baltimore, who have been in the habit of transporting negroes, in large parties, to any point in our county."

A Floating Monster.—The following description of the Arctic, one of the Collins line of Atlantic steamships, is from the pen of Rev. W. H. Bidwell, editor of the New York Evangelist :—

"The Arctic is 3,060 tons burden; is 300 feet long; 46 feet beam; 76 feet over the paddle-boxes; 33 feet deep; wheels 35 feet diameter; 900 horse-power in her engines; carries 1,200 tons of coal; consumes 90 tons per day; expenses from New York to Liverpool and back, $45,000. The captain, crew, and all hands to work the ship in all its departments number 150. In the present voyage she carries 214 passengers; took in 5 tons of fresh meat, fish, and fowl; 18 barrels of salt beef; 6 barrels of salt pork; 4 barrels of ~~salt~~ fish; 2000 pounds of butter; 6000 eggs; 600 pounds of lard; 22 barrels of flour; 26 barrels of bread, and vegetables in variety to match."

Hotels and Homes.—A correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot, in a general critique on public houses, and particularly on the rage for elegant, showy ones, makes the following inquiries, which are worth considering :—

"In considering the costliness and splendor of the modern hotels, the question, What is the use? cannot escape us. Why should people want to live in so much show and splendor abroad, with even less comfort (that good old English word) than at home? Is it not merely that we are, for the most part, out upon a spree, and want to see the world? Perhaps that is as good as any answer that could be given to the inquiry; but will it improve the love of home, or the morals and manners of the traveler? These are questions I will not enter into."

Sunday Omnibus Case in Pittsburg.—A dispatch from Pittsburg, Pa., dated August 31st, says: "Alderman Buckmaster, of this city, yesterday afternoon delivered his decision in the Omnibus Cases, dismissing the charges against all the drivers, and ordering the persecutors to pay the costs. The decision is a very able argument, and has given much satisfaction to a large majority of citizens, who are opposed to the movements of the so-called 'friends of the Sabbath.'"

Baptist Contributions for Benevolence.—The following are the amounts contributed during the past year to the Baptist religious societies:—American Baptist Missionary Union, $134,112; Bapist Home Mission Society, $35,354; American and Foreign Bible Society, $44,212; Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, $21,438; Southern Home Mission Board, $13,094; Southern Bible Board, $8,073.

"Mapleton; or, More Work for the Maine Law," by Pharcellus Church, D.D., author of "Philosophy of Benevolence," prize essay on "Dissensions," "Antioch," etc., published by Lewis Colby and Company, 122 Nassau-st., New York. This is a temperance tale, as its title indicates. The fact that it has already reached a fourth edition is good evidence that it is well conceived and well written.

A German traveler has discovered a race of negroes near the kingdom of Bambara, that are Jews in their religious rites and observances. Nearly every family, he says, have among them the Law of Moses, written on parchment; and although they speak of the prophets, they have none of their writings.

European News

We have seven days later dates from Europe.

In Eastern affairs no change has taken place since the announcement already received, that the Porte accepts without modification the note prepared by the four powers, and already acceded to by the Czar.

The long promised debates on Turkish affairs had taken place in Parliament, and were generally regarded as unsatisfactory. The English funds opened next day with a further depression, although they afterward revived from other causes.

Lord John Russel stated, in reply to Lord Dudley Stuart, that the negotiations with the United States, regarding the Musquito Territory, were still pending, but he hoped they would be brought to a satisfactory termination before the next session.

The Parliamentary Report on the decimal currency strongly recommends its adoption, making the sovereign the unit of one thousand millions—retaining of the present coins the half-sovereign, crown, florin, shilling, sixpence—calling in the penny, three pence and 4d., and issuing new silver coin of ten millions and twenty millions, and new coppers of five, two and one millions.

The Royal Agricultural Society's trial of Reaping Machines was terminated in Berkshire on the 17th. Five competed, viz: Bell's, McCormick's, Hussey's improved, McCormick's improved, and Crosskill's. Prizes were awarded to Crosskill's and Bell's.

The French news is entirely concentrated on reports of the grand fete of the 15th. A review of thousands of men, tournaments, a passage at arms between French and English knights on the field of the Cloth of Gold, balloon ascents, processions, boat races, &c., took place. High Mass was celebrated, and the proceedings wound up with a brilliant display of fireworks, and an unlimited supply of bread and Vin Ordinaire to the poor at a total expenditure of three-fourths of a million of francs. The weather was very favorable for this joint festival of Napoleon, and the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

In Spain trade is seriously affected from the interruption of business with Norway and Sweden by the cholera.

Four Days Later.

The steamer Atlantic, with four days later news, arrived at New York on Sunday last. The news is of a very favorable nature. The war question was of a less dangerous aspect, and all commercial news more favorable for American interests. A decree of the French Government suspends virtually the Corn Laws to the 1st January next. The excitement in Breadstuffs continues. Continental buyers outbid all others.

Admiral Sir George Cockburn died at Leamington Spa, on the 19th, aged 82. His name is associated with the British side in the American war, and to the history of that time we refer for his acts.

Major Gen. Lord Saltoun is dead, aged 69. He was one of Wellington's intimates and brother-in-arms, and served with Moore in the Peninsula.

Six actions had been brought against the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, for injuries sustained in a recent collision on their line. Damages were given in all the suits, amounting in the aggregate to over £7,000 sterling.

Foreign Postage.—The Postmaster General calls attention to the following regulations in regard to postage on letters to foreign countries:—

In the Mail to Great Britain, the single rate of postage is 24 cents, prepayment optional. On either a letter or packet of any weight the whole postage or none at all should be prepaid. If anything less than the whole is prepaid, no account is taken of it, and it is entirely lost to the sender. The British Post Office declines to change this rule, except on conditions considered inadmissible.

In the Prussian closed Mail to Germany, 30 cents is the single rate, prepayment optional. This pays from any part of the United States to any part of the German-Austrian Postal Union. A prepayment of any sum less than the regular rate of 30 cents is not recognized, and is of course lost to the sender. A note of fractions on the rate could not be taken without seriously complicating the accounts, besides causing much additional labor and trouble at the exchange offices. But, contrary to the practice under the United States and British Postal Convention, in the Prussian mail every full rate of 30 cents is credited, whether the whole postage on a letter or packet is prepaid or not, leaving any balance due to be collected at the office of delivery.

By the Bremen Mail the rule is the same as under the Prussian arrangement. The single rate to Bremen is 10 cents, to Oldenburg 12, to Hamburg 15, to Altona and Hanover 21, and to any other place in Germany 22 cents, prepayment optional. In either case a prepayment of any fraction of the full rate goes for nothing.

The rule for rating letters to all foreign countries, except the British North American Provinces, is to charge one rate for half an ounce or under, two rates if the weight is over one half and not exeeeding an ounce, four rates if over one and not exceeding two ounces, six rates if over two and not exceeding three ounces, and so on, charging two rates for every ounce or fractional part of an ounce over the first ounce. As this rule differs from that followed in respect to domestic letters, where each half-ounce or fraction of a half-ounce counts as one rate only, Postmasters who are not careful to observe this difference are liable of course to commit mistakes.

Ocean Penny Postage.—The movement in favor of Ocean Penny Postage is looking up in England. A government proposal of a uniform charge of 6d—a reduction of one-half—is before the Colonies. Meanwhile the question of penny postage has been brought before Parliament. In a recent session, Mr. Milner Gibson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, "whether, on further consideration, he thought there would be any obstacle to the appointment of a Committee to inquire into the general question of foreign and colonial postage, in the early part of next session." The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, in the course of his reply, "He had never expressed any disinclination to Parliamentary inquiry into the subject on principle; but he had an apprehension, which he thought well grounded, that, if the House instituted an inquiry of the kind this session, while the proposal—a uniform rate of 6d—was on its way to the Colonies, such inquiry would materially interfere with the success of the proposal, and prevent the Government from laying the groundwork of future favorable proceedings. It seemed unadvisable to give a pledge on the subject at present, but the subject of Ocean Penny Postage was a fit one for Parliamentary inquiry, and he should be glad to see that inquiry instituted next session."

SUMMARY.

The Illinois papers state that the affairs of the Bank of Illinois are about to be brought to a close. This Institution failed in the year 1842, and never resumed specie payment. The circulation was very large at the time of the suspension. On the 10th of April, 1845, when the assignment was made to the assignees, the circulation of bills and certificates amounted to $497,479 73. It is not expected, now, that anything will be left to the stockholders. The whole stock paid in, except the State Stock, will be lost to the stockholders—a result which was not anticipated a few years since.

An illustration of the inestimable value of ether in surgical operations, was furnished a few days since. Dr. Sands, of this City, amputated a man's thigh, and, as usual, ether was administered previous to the operation, to prevent the patient's suffering. The operation was performed, and as the poor fellow recovered his consciousness, those around congratulated him that it was "all over." "I know better," was his instantaneous reply. "You can't humbug me in that way!" And it was not until he had seen the amputated limb, that he could be made to believe that it had been cut off without his feeling it.

The efficacy of the signal system on railroads was recently proved on the Hudson River Road. An axle of a car in a train was discovered, near Oak Hill, to have become heated to such a degree that it melted. Immediately a brakeman jumped from the cars, exhibited the red flag, and in a moment, for miles distant, red flags were raised by the flagmen, notifying danger. Trains approaching were warned and stopped until the disabled car was switched off, and the train passed safely on its way.

A dispatch dated Montreal, Monday, Aug. 29, 1853, says, The Vigilance Committee, on Saturday last, arrested the Mayor of this city—Hon. Charles Wilson—for murder; on the 9th of June last, during the Gavazzi riot He was held to bail in the sum of $8,000, to appear on the 14th October next, to answer at the Criminal Court of Queen's Bench. Three more of the rioters of 9th of June have been arrested, namely: Garret Barry, Pierre C. Brouillett, and M. Moses. The latter was Second Assistant Chief Engineer in the Fire Department.

The Florida Republican states that two "powerful alligators" were shipped for New York via Charleston, on the 16th ult., per steamer Florida, to represent the State of Florida at the World's Fair. They are owned by Mr. T. G. Meyers, of Jacksonville, and were captured for the purpose of being brought to the Exhibition. One is 14 feet in length, lacking a foot of the measure for which a prize was offered by parties at the Fair. The other is somewhat shorter. Both are leviathans of their kind.

A dispatch dated Providence, Thursday, Sept. 1, 1853, says, The messenger of the Newport Bank was robbed this afternoon, on board of the steamer Perry, of a package containing, it is supposed, from forty to fifty thousand dollars. He had put the bag, containing the money, on a seat, and while his back was turned for a moment, another bag, precisely similar, and containing packages of newspapers cut to the size of bank bills, was substituted. He did not discover the robbery until he delivered the bag at the Merchant's Bank.

The Ladies of the Rochester Anti-Slavery Society give notice in Frederick Douglas's Paper, that they will hold their Third Annual Festival in December next, at Corinthian Hall. The object of this festival, they state, is to raise funds, to be devoted to assisting fugitives on their way from the house of bondage to a land of liberty, and the diffusion of Anti-Slavery knowledge, by speech, and by press, through the country.

Mr. Rufus Porter, who has been so long and earnestly engaged upon the "Æreport," or flying ship, announces, with confidence, that he will make an excursion in it from Washington to New York some time during the next month. The machine is now nearly advanced to completion, and a small amount of funds and labor will put it on the wing.

Hon. Horace Mann has sold his dwelling house in West Newton, and though we believe he has not yet actually departed for his new home in Ohio, no longer considers himself a resident of Massachusetts. At the recent Educational Convention at New Haven, his name appeared on the list of members as "Horace Mann, of Yellow Springs, Ohio."

A dispatch dated Niles, (Michigan,) Thursday, Sept. 1, 1853, says, A freight train on the Michigan Central Road, ran off the track last night, about nine miles west of this place. The locomotive and tender were badly smashed, and all the freight cars and goods piled in a heap. The fireman, named Goodrich, was killed, and the engineer slightly hurt.

The Journal of Commerce gives a statement of the Revenue of the Country for the fiscal year ending 30th June. The estimate of Secretary Corwin for the year, after the first quarter's statement had been received, was $51,000,000; the actual returns have overrun the estimate $10,000,000.

The Erie Railroad receipts for August add up, it is stated, $404,000, and would have been $425,000 if certain amounts had come in which belong properly to the month. This is an unprecedented amount of earnings on this road.

The Lexington Observer denies that Ashland has been sold by the will of Henry Clay; but it is to be sold on 20th September, at public auction.

Major John B. Seamans, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of La Fayette, Indiana, died a few days ago. Twenty-four years ago he issued the first number of the La Fayette Journal.

The Life and Works of Thomas Shepard, First Pastor of the First Church in Cambridge, Mass., have been issued by the Doctrinal Publication Society. He died Aug. 25, 1649, in the 44th year of his age. Among his dying words were these: To those standing around him he said: "O, love the Lord Jesus Christ very much; that little part which I have in him is no small comfort to me now." To several young ministers who called to see him, he remarked: "Your work is great, and calls for great seriousness. As to myself, I can say three things; that the study of every sermon cost me tears; that before I preached a sermon, I got good by it myself; and that I always went up into the pulpit as if I were to give up my account to my Master."

Rev. Nicholas Murray, D. D., better known as "Kirwan," has just completed the twentieth year of his pastorate in Elizabethtown. He improved the occasion by preaching from Gen. 31: 38—"This twenty years have I been with thee." The sermon was a review of his ministry for that period. There were 556 members in the church when he came to it. Of these, less than two hundred remain. The additions since have been 753. The aggregate of communicants is greaterly 100 than it was when the Doctor began his pastorate, though many have been dismissed to form other churches. He has preached 6,252 sermons, made 3,850 pastoral visits, solemnized 280 marriages, and sprinkled nearly 500 children.

The London Times says: "In fifty years Ireland will be Protestant to a man. Both the Roman Catholics of Ireland, and the race identified with that faith, are all leaving Ireland. Ere long there will be none left. At the present rate of emigration, which cannot be less than 200,000, chiefly Roman Catholics, in a year, our children will see the time when the Celts will be as obsolete in Ireland as the Phœnicians in Cornwall."

We are deeply pained (says the N. Y. Tribune) by the tidings of the death of William Edmonds, Warden of the City Prison, who has suffered severely from dysentery for some weeks past, but was at one time supposed to be convalescent. He relapsed, however, and was finally attacked by mortification, against which medical skill proved utterly unavailable. Mr. Edmonds was a native of Ireland, over fifty years old, and leaves a wife and several children to deplore his loss.

A dispatch dated Cincinnati, Thursday, Sept. 1, 1853, says James C. Hall, late Postmaster here, and now President of the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad Co., was attacked in the street this evening, by Dr. Ames, a returned Californian, who discharged a pistol at him, the ball entering the abdomen and lodging in the back of Mr. Hall. The wound is considered dangerous, and Ames has been arrested.

A dispatch dated Baltimore, Wednesday, Aug. 31, 1853, says: A terrible explosion of gunpowder occurred on the wharf at Wheeling on Monday. A keg fell from a dray, became ignited, and communicated to the dray, exploding about twenty kegs. The drayman was instantly killed, and another man was seriously injured and blown into the river. The wharf boat was completely demolished, and the steamers Orion and Salem were damaged. Thousands of dollars worth of windows were broken throughout the city.

The New Orleans Delta, Aug. 23d, says the twenty-four hours from 6 o'clock A. M. on Saturday, till 6 o'clock on Sunday, the 21st, constitute the blackest day in the gloomy annals of the fearful pestilence, which has desolated our city. It is, we trust, the maximum point of our calamity. The reported deaths for this period were 269, of which 230 were of yellow fever, and fifteen are not stated.

It is something remarkable, that while Jesuits or other Romish priests are to be found sedulously attending to the interests of the various Indian tribes which are scattered over the western part of Canada and the States, there is not a single black gown to be found amongst the settlements of Negroes.

The old woman who had a lease of the old building on the corner of Church and Warren streets, N. Y., which interfered with certain improvements purposed to be made by the owner of the property, but resolutely refused to give up her rights for less than $10,000, has finally condescended to receive, in consideration, the sum of $7,000, or thereabouts.

The distinguished American who recently gave in his adherence to the Papal church while at Rome, turns out to be not Senator Douglass, as first surmised, but the Hon. Joseph R. Chandler, one of the Pennsylvania delegation, whose wife has long been a member of that communion.

The Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Railroad was completed to Chicago in June, 1852. The first fiscal year of the Company ended on the 30th June, 1853. The aggregate earnings for the year exceeded $1,200,000. The rival line of the Michigan Central Company earned during their fiscal year ending 31st May, 1853, 1,153,660 91.

A duel took place near Bladensburgh, Aug. 30, between S. G. Davis, member of the Virginia Legislature, and Robert Ridgway, of Virginia, editor of the Sentinel of Liberty. Mr. Ridgway was the challenger. Mr. Davis fired without personal damage to his antagonist. Mr. Ridgway declined firing, and the parties became reconciled.

The Peach Trade of this City is beyond the belief of those who are not well posted up in the matter. It is estimated that the receipts week before last, for several days, were 60,000 baskets per day. Nine steamboats are principally occupied in the carrying trade.

The editor of the Elmira Republican notifies his subscribers and others, that his "fighting hours are between 10 and 12 A. M., when we will be happy to see any one who wants any thing."

An Anti-Sectarian Convention is called to be held in Auburn on the 13th and 14th of September. Gerritt Smith and other able speakers are announced to be present.

A dispatch dated New Orleans, Aug. 29, 1853, says: The total number of interments in this city during the past week were 1,628, of which 1,442 were from Yellow Fever.

The black vomit is prevailing at Acapulco—many deaths had occurred. General Manuel Villada died of the disease.

Twelve million torpedoes were manufactured and sold by one man in New York during the six months preceding the Fourth of July.

The corner-stone of an Episcopal Church was laid recently in Havana, Chemung Co. It was designed, and is to be erected at the sole cost of Charles Cook, Esq., late Canal Commissioner. It will involve an outlay of $12,000, which Mr. Cook has devoted to that object.

Two brothers, named Paul, were killed at Troy, N. Y., on the 11th inst., by the explosion of a steamboiler in the foundry where they were working.

The deaths from yellow fever at New Orleans, for the week ending August 1, were 669. A few cases of unmistakeable yellow fever have occurred at Mobile.

The deaths in New Orleans, from Yellow Fever, were—Aug. 10, 195; Aug. 11, 200; Aug. 12, nearly 200.

The public debt of Pennsylvania is stated at $41,474,000. Its gross revenue for 1852 was $3,351,767.

DIED.

In New Salem, Harrison Co., Va., June 12th, widow Mary Maxson, in the 47th year of her age. She had been suffering for many years from a very painful disease, and bore her sufferings with Christian resignation. She obtained a hope in Christ in early life, and united herself with the Church at New Salem, the place of her decease. She left a family of five children, and an extensive circle of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. But she has gone "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest."

In Waterford, Ct, on the 25th of Aug., of consumption, Mr. Barton Saunders, in the 73d year of his age. He was a member of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., and died in hope of final salvation through the merits of Christ.

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 25th of Aug., Mrs. Hopestill Crandall, widow of the late Phineas Crandall, aged 88 years. She was a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church of Waterford, Ct.

Bells! Bells! Bells!

THE Subscribers manufacture and keep constantly on hand all sizes of Church, Factory, Steamboat, Ferry, Locomotive, School House, and Plantation Bells. These Bells are hung with the patent iron yokes with moveable arms. They can be turned around so that the clapper will strike in a new place, which is desirable after a bell has been rung a few years. Springs are affixed in a new way to prevent the clapper from resting on the Bell, thereby prolonging the sound. These Bells are manufactured from the best stock and are cast in iron casings. At this Foundry these were first used and are found to be a great improvement. We give a written warrantee that if Church Bells break within one year from date of purchase, with fair usage, we will recast without charge. The tone of all Bells is warranted. Nearly 9000 Bells have been cast and sold from this Foundry, which is the best evidence of their superiority. We have 15 Gold and Silver Medals, awarded from the various Fairs "for the best Bells for sonorousness and purity of tone." We pay particular attention to getting up Peals or Chimes, and can refer to those furnished by us. Our Foundry is within a few rods of the Hudson River, Erie Canal, and Railroads running in every direction. As this is the largest Establishment of the kind in the U. S. and has the largest assortment of Bells, orders can be filled with great dispatch. We can refer to Bells in any of the States. Old Bells taken in exchange for new ones. Levels, Compasses, &c., constantly on hand. Address

Miscellaneous.

Agricultural Statistics of New York.

The Tribune condenses from the Census of 1850 the following interesting statistics of agricultural productions of the State of the New York:—

The richest of all the counties appears to be Dutchess, whose farms are valued above $25,000,000; and the poorest, Hamilton, which is set down at $220,000. The first county in horses is Jefferson, which has 15,400, and the first in asses and mules, Suffolk, having 214. Orange, on the other hand, takes the lead in working oxen, her number being 12,000, or double that of any other county, while in milch cows all are excelled by Oneida, which has 48,000, or 13,000 more than even Herkimer. The first county in sheep is Steuben, having 156,000, while Dutchess is the chief in hogs, her pig pens containing near 50,000 individuals, or but a few thousand less than her human population. In value of live stock Oneida is first, her figure being $2,600,000.

Of wheat, Monroe produces 1,450,000, Livingston 1,111,000, Ontario 929,000, Niagara 917,000, Orleans 854,000, Genesee 734,000, Steuben 653,000, Wayne 614,000, and Hamilton 223,000 bushels. Of rye, Columbia is the greatest producer, her crop being 526,000 bushels; Dutchess comes next, with 321,000, and Ulster next with 305,000. The great producer of Indian corn is Dutchess, 782,605; next Onondaga, which has 782,220 bushels; Monroe yields 767,000, Chautauque 704,000, Oneida 645,000, Wayne 660,000, and Washington 600,000. Taking these three grains together, Monroe is far ahead of all the other counties—her produce in all 2,216,000 bushels; Hamilton produces but 6,415 bushels.

Dutchess raises 1,000,000 bushels of oats, and Columbia and Otsego exceed 900,000 bushels each. Onondaga is first in barley, with 440,000 bushels, to 304,000 in Cayuga and 295,000 in Madison. Albany raises more buckwheat than any other county, her yield being 219,000 bushels; next to her is Ulster, with 150,000. There is no very great difference in number of bushels between the crops of buckwheat, barley, and rye, taking the whole State together. The oat crop is about double that of wheat, and above 50 per cent. greater than that of maize. The number of bushels of potatoes (15,400,000) is two millions less than that of maize, and two millions more than of wheat; this esculent is also produced in more equal proportions in the different counties, the largest crop (600,000 bushels) being in Rensselaer; in Albany 2,222 bushels of sweet potatoes are returned.

The State produces 10,000,000 lbs. of wool, the largest share of which, or 669,000 lbs., we owe to Chautauque; and 940,000 lbs. of flax, of which Rensselaer has 268,000 lbs., and Washington 230,000, or more than half of the whole. The hemp crop might as well have been omitted, the entire State having only four tuns to boast of.

The value of orchard products is set down at $1,760,000 for the State, and this sum is much more equally distributed among the counties than we should have supposed; Oneida has $88,000; Wayne, $83,000; Oswego, $70,600; Westchester, $67,500; Monroe, $67,000; Onondaga, $66,000; Washington, $65,000; Queens, $63,000; Cayuga, $60,000; Rensselaer, $56,000; Herkimer, $47,000; and Erie, $45,000. In market gardening, the lead is taken by Queens, which returns $309,000, and next to this New York, which we are astonished to find figuring in agricultural tables, but which raises of vegetables a crop worth $121,000. Kings is next on this list, her product being $688,000; Monroe also claims $85,000, and Albany $59,000—all dependent on nearness to the markets of large cities.

In butter, St. Lawrence stands peerless, producing nearly 5,000,000 lbs., or above a third of the whole product of the State. Oneida has 3,960,000 lbs.; Orange, 3,770,000 lbs.; Delaware, 3,780,000; Jefferson, 3,580,000; 5 other counties exceed 2,000,000, and 25 exceed 1,000,000. Of cheese, Herkimer is the great producer, her amount being 9,548,000 lbs. to 5,218,000 in Oneida; 4,290,000 in Erie, and 4,190,000 in Jefferson. Kings, New York, Richmond and Rockland produce no cheese.

The production of hay is quite equally distributed, Oneida taking the lead with 167,000 tuns, to 132,000 in Jefferson, 124,000 in Chenango, 129,000 in Delaware, 126,000 in Chautauque, and 122,000 in St. Lawrence. In silk cocoons Chautauque takes the lead, producing 511 lbs. to 306 lbs. in Yates and 200 lbs. in Chenango; the whole production of the State is 1,774 lbs. St. Lawrence is ahead in maple sugar, its yield being 1,236,000 lbs., to 788,000 in Cattaraugus and 787,000 in Chautauque. Beeswax and honey are quite equally distributed. In value of household manufactures St. Lawrence takes the lead, with $82,000, followed by Jefferson with 80,000, Steuben with $76,000, and Allegany with $64,000. In value of animals slaughtered, of course New York is set before every other county, her return being $1,600,000.

Wheat Drilling.

An Ohio correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune urges in the following manner the advantages of putting in Wheat by the Drill:—

In order that those who are disposed to heed facts may have some information in regard to the advantages that have been secured by machinery for putting seed in the ground, I propose, hereinafter, to embody the results of a careful and somewhat extensive investigation—made not by myself, but by experienced farmers, to whom I shall refer.

In many of the counties of Northern Ohio, the drilling, or planting of wheat by machinery, has been thoroughly tested, to the entire satisfaction of a large majority of those who have made any observations or experiments in regard to it.

It has, however, met bitter opposition. When first introduced, (about five years since,) ignorant prejudice frowned darkly at the meagre show of progressive spirit that gave it encouragement. But it has gone on conquering the ancient prejudice and custom of sowing broadcast.

Two years ago last fall John Sickman, an intelligent farmer of Wayne County purchased a Wheat Drill, and resolved to test it fairly. His neighbors were deeply interested in the project. Some laughed at, and some encouraged him. A committee was chosen; a given number of acres chained off; one-half the wheat was sown broadcast, and the other half planted with the Drill. The following summer, when the wheat began to put forth heads, the field was an object of much speculation. Many said the broadcast was as good as the drilled, but those who carefully examined the grain, proved that the drilled wheat was growing regularly—that of the broadcast irregularly. Harvest approached; the Conservatives were sanguine—but the friends of the drill said, 'If you go into the field, you will discover that the heads of the drilled wheat stand up side by side, and nearly every one has six rows. The broadcast wheat has but few stalks equal in hight, and some have only four rows of grain in the head. Wait till harvest, gentlemen." When the wheat was cut and separately threshed and measured in the field, it was ascertained that from the half which had been drilled, there was a yield of 43 bushels to the acre—from the half sown broadcast a yield of 32 bushels, showing an advantage of nine bushels to the acre in favor of drilling.

So well satisfied with this experiment was Mr. Sickman, that the following season, in order to get drilling introduced among his neighboring farmers, he offered to purchase a drill worth $75 for one of them, if, out of 35 acres he had to put in wheat, he would sow one acre broadcast, and drill the residue, and give him (Mr. S.) what grain was gained over that sown broadcast.

Christian Napp, of the same county, who purchased a drill for $75, in company with a neighbor, put in for himself 35 acres of wheat the first year, and when he harvested he stated that he was willing to certify that on his farm the drill had paid for itself. Mr. Molan, of the same county, at a political convention in Harrisville last summer, declared to a number of the farmers there collected, that he put in his wheat, corn and oats, with a drill, and that he would not be without one for three times its cost, because it had fairly increased his crops more than one-third.

When ground has been plowed once and harrowed once, it is ready for drilling. Twelve acres may be easily drilled in a day, by one hand with one team and a seven-tube drill. If a nine-tube drill is used, one team will put in eighteen acres a day.

The seed is all deposited 3½ inches below the surface, in rows 8 inches apart, at the rate of 1½ bushels of seed to the acre.

Drilled wheat is not easily picked up by the fowls, as broadcast may be. Last fall, during seeding, the pigeons were very plenty in Northern Ohio. Farmers reported that sportsmen had poor luck watching grain fields where the wheat had been drilled, but fields sown broadcast were covered with them.

Drilled wheat, it has been thoroughly ascertained, is not winter killed as often as that sown broadcast. Being evenly deposited, and well covered, it stands drouth better than broadcast—the roots having a firmer hold in the ground, the stalks are not so liable to be thrown down; and for the same reason, in seasons when the fly makes havoc in broadcast wheat, that drilled is but slightly injured, if at all.

Standing in rows, through which there is a free circulation of light and air, in wet seasons drilled wheat is never so seriously injured by rust as broadcast, and because light and air have unimpeded opportunity to nourish the stalk and the grain, while the roots lie deep in the ground and sustain the stalk erect. It is rarely found that a head of drilled wheat has less than six rows, and it is seldom that the kernels are not more plump than adjoining fields of broadcast-sown.

When farmers examine their broadcast wheat, they find that the tall stalks having heads with six rows are firmly rooted in the ground, with the roots well covered. They then naturally reason, that if every stalk were as well planted, the yield of grain would evidently be much larger.

Saving Seed Wheat.

The importance of carefully selecting and saving wheat intended for seed, is beginning to be appreciated. The following article upon the subject, prepared for the Patent Office Report of 1850, by Euzebus Weston, a Maine farmer, is well worth reading and considering:—

"It has been suspected for a long time, that our seed was in fault, at least for a part of the deplorable deficiency in the wheat crop. I could not see why a flour-mill cleanser should not be the best thing to prepare wheat for sowing, till an experienced miller told me it would kill one-half of it. Reflecting on this fact, I was led to see what effect the common threshing-mill would have, when many kernels are broken in the operation. These suggestions have been experimented upon, and it is found, on repeated trials of samples sown in common saucers and broadcast in the ground, that one-fourth or more of the largest kernels are killed, and never germinate, and some will produce a shoot and no root—the root sprout being killed by the machine. This accounts, in some measure, for our wheat coming up thick enough, but shortly becoming thin. Many kernels, from native strength, shoot up, but having no roots, die.

"In our flour-mills may be seen the caps of the root sprout, blown out by the blower or fan, under the hopper, by quarts at a time, besides that which is blown out above. One farmer told me he had tried the experiment by accidentally having a barrel of wheat threshed by hand, and sown with another barrel threshed with a machine, and the difference was at least one-quarter. Thus it is seen, that one-quarter of the seed is killed by the machine for threshing; and then the whole is run through an ordinary fanning mill, all together, and sown from the mass. We raise our wheat, year after year, from about three-quarters of the seed sown, and that of the poorest quality, the best and fullest being killed. Now, to my mind, this is enough to account for the diminution of the wheat crop from 20 or 30 down to from 5 to 12 bushels. No seed on earth could stand such a test. Formerly, the wheat was threshed with a flail, and winnowed in the north-west wind, and then the seed taken carefully from the north-west corner of the pile, so that very little was sown except the first order of kernels. Some even went so far as to select heads of the largest and best growth, by pulling them from the sheaves. A gentleman, who tried the last experiment, had a quart of wheat, which was sowed on a corner of the field; and he assures me that he could see the difference in the grain, 40 or 50 rods, the plants being a darker green, broader leaf, and taller growth. If this be so, it is high time that it was attended to. In 1850, over 500,000 bushels of wheat were probably sown in Michigan. We have not at hand the statistics of the other Western States, yet if this statement is correct, not only were more than 100,000 bushels of wheat thrown away in one State, but the next crop was much diminished."

Seventy Swarms of Bees at War.

Ezra Dibble, a well-known citizen of this town, says the Conneaut (Ohio) Reporter, and for many years engaged in the management of bees, communicates to us the following interesting particulars of a battle among his bees:—

He has seventy swarms of bees, about equally divided on the east and west sides of his house. On Sunday, Aug. 14, about 3 o'clock, the weather being warm, and the windows open, his house was suddenly filled with bees, which forced the family to flee at once to the neighbor's. Mr. D., after getting well protected against his assailants, proceeded to take a survey, and, if possible, learn the cause which had disturbed them. The seventy swarms appeared to be out, and those on one side of the house were arrayed in battle against those on the other side; and such a battle was perhaps never before witnessed. They filled the air, covering a space of more than one acre of ground, and fought desperately for some three hours—not for "spoils," but for conquest; and while at war no living thing could exist in the vicinity. They stung a large flock of Shanghai chickens, nearly all of which died, and persons passing along the roadside were obliged to make haste to avoid their sting. A little after 6 o'clock quiet was restored, and the living bees returned to their hives, leaving the slain almost literally covering the ground, since which but few have appeared around the hives, and those apparently stationed as sentinels to watch the enemy. But two young swarms were entirely destroyed, and aside from the terrible slaughter of bees, no other injury was done. Neither party was victorious, and they only ceased on the approach of night, and from utter prostration. The occasion of this strange warring among the bees is not easily accounted for, and those most conversant with their management never before witnessed or heard of such a spectacle as here narrated.

The Carson League.

The editor of the N. Y. Tribune, who has recently met that "plain, unpretending farmer of Onondaga County," THOMAS CARSON, the founder of the "Carson League," gives the following account of his plans and movements:—

Mr. Carson began as a worker in the Temperance ranks, but found his efforts embarrassed and impeded by the fact that the apparent, immediate, palpable pecuniary interest is all on the side of Alcohol. The Distiller, the Brewer, the Dealer, the Grocer, the Inn-keeper, are all making money, or expecting to do so, by their business, while the opposition to it is entirely a matter of Principle, Conscience, Philanthropy. And, while these are apt to nod or relax their vigilance, Self-Interest is sure to keep its weather eye steadily open. Thus the Temperance Meeting is held perhaps weekly, and with something of effort at that; while the Tipplers' Seminary is found at almost every frequented corner, and is hardly ever shut.

And yet there is an interest antagonist to that of the Rumseller, which is even more extensive and powerful than his, if it can only be organized and brought fully into action. It is the interest of the Tax-payer. Every dollar of profit realized from the Liquor Traffic, it is demonstrated, is more than paralleled by consequent additions to the aggregate of Taxation. The Crime, the Litigation, the Pauperism, resulting from the Liquor Traffic, more than consume all the profits of that Traffic, which lives only because one set of men grasp the profits and saddle the payment of the expense mainly upon the residue of the community. Mr. Carson's aim is to put the saddle on the right horse.

To this end he calls together the Taxpayers and sets the facts before them in a homely, colloquial fashion. He says to them, "Let us make this entirely a matter of business. You are now paying about fourteen cents a year in taxes on every hundred dollars of your property, as valued in the Tax Lists, for the support of the Pauperism and repression of the Crime whereof the Liquor Traffic is the cause. What I propose is, that you form an association, and engage with each other to be taxed, so far as may be necessary, inside of the burthen thus imposed on you, for the suppression of that Traffic. If you don't like the Temperance cause enough for this, do it to save your money, now unjustly taken from you to fill other men's coffers."

It is not necessary to set forth the details of the plan based on the foundation above stated. Here is a township, for example, wherein the Tax-List shows a property valuation of $300,000, two-thirds of it held by friends of Temperance, or at all events by men averse to being taxed merely to line other men's pockets. These two-thirds join the Carson League, and club their votes or obligations accordingly, binding them to spend as much of their property respectively to suppress the Liquor Traffic as they are now compelled by law to pay for the punishment or subsistence of its victims. They establish an office and employ an agent to keep a stern eye on all the dealers in Alcoholic poisons, and haul them up whenever they break the Law.

Transplanting Plants, Flowers, &c.

I presume it will be satisfactory to many to be informed when the different species of garden plants may be most advantageously transplanted. The months of August and September are preferable, in this State, and in the States to the north of it, for transplanting the following species; and the months of September and October for the States adjoining them on the South, as far as the line of the Potomac; and October and November for the most Southern States.

Strawberries of all kinds, if planted as above-stated, will produce a fair crop the ensuing summer. It is preferable that the beds be three feet wide, and that four rows lengthwise be planted in the beds, the plants a foot apart each way. This width will admit of all the fruit being gathered from the sides, without trampling on the beds, as is of necessity the case when the beds are of greater width. It need scarcely be stated, that the ground should be previously well plowed, or deeply dug and mellowed. A moist soil is preferable, and on no grounds will as heavy crops be produced as on drained meadow land. The Strawberry will, however, flourish on drier soil, and produce fair crops. The same periods are suitable for transplanting the fine large varieties of Rhubarb, for tarts, the Sea Kale, Asparagus, Globe Artichoke, Horse-Radish, Patience Dock, (the latter the best of all early greens, and very hardy, permanent and economical,) as they then become well rooted and established before the winter sets in. All the hardy species of Bulbous Flower Roots, such as Hyacinthe, Tulips, Japan and other Lilies, Crown Imperials, Gladiolus, Bulbous Iris, Crocus, Narcissus, Jonquils, Fritillaries, Ornithogalum, and various others, and all the magnificent varieties of the Shrubby (called Tree) Peony, and of the Chinese and other Herbaceous Peonies, will, if planted, thus early, become much more vigorous, increase more rapidly, and bloom with increased vigor and beauty.

Fruit and Ornamental Trees, and Shrubbery and Roses, cannot be safely transplanted in this latitude until the first of October, and those intended for the South should not be forwarded until the first November, at which time vegetation will have become sufficiently dormant for their safe removal. To the Western States, inland, they may be safely forwarded the beginning of October.

WM. K. PRINCE.

The Parks of London.

If you enter Hyde Park between seven and eight in the morning, when all the world of fashion is asleep, you will fancy, after you have left the gateways, that you have made a great mistake, and strolled out into the country unawares. Scarcely a person is to be seen at this time of day, unless it be some lonely foot passenger, who looks as though he had lost his wits or his way, at this early hour. But you see broad grass meadows, with scattered groups of trees, and your impression that you had got astray, and quite out of the reach of the metropolis, is confirmed by hearing the tinkling of sheep bells. But this is Hyde Park in dishabille. Go in again in the afternoon, any time during the London season, and the place will be so altered and animated by the dramatis pesonæ, that you hardly identify it as the locale of the solitary country ramble you took in the morning. The Kensington Gardens are not only more spacious and grand than Hyde Park, but the trees are larger and more grove-like, and the broad blades of soft, green turf, are of a darker and richer green. The grand avenue of elms is some hundreds of years old, and is always majestic and venerable. No carriages or horses are permitted in Kensington Gardens, but its shadowy lawns are sacred to pedestrians, and are especially the gambol-fields of thousands of lovely children. It is said that as many as two hundred thousand persons have been in Hyde Park and Kensington Gardens at once. Regent's Park comprises about three hundred and thirty-six acres of land, ornamental plantations, drives, and carriage roads. It has a younger look than the others, and among its attractions are the Royal Botanic Garden, and Zoological Garden, some twenty acres in extent, where may be seen thousands of living animals.

About Tomatoes.

BAKED TOMATOES.—Wash them, and cut them in two parts, round the tomato, that is, so as the cells can be divested of the pulp and seed which they contain. To six tomatoes take half a pint of bread crumbs, one large onion finely chopped, one ounce of butter, pepper and salt to the taste. Fill the cell of each piece with the dressing, put two halves together, and tie them with a piece of thread. Put them in the pan with an ounce of butter and a gill of water, set them in a moderate oven, and cook them till they are soft. When done, cut off the threads and serve them.

TOMATO FRICANDEAU.—Get some slices of veal cutlets, pound and wash them, season them with pepper and salt, and fry them slowly till they are done. They should be of a light brown on both sides. Stew some tomatoes very dry, strain them through a sieve to get out all the seeds, pour the pulp into the gravy after the meat has been taken out, and thicken it with a piece of butter rolled in flour. Pour this over the meat, and serve it hot.

SCALLOPED TOMATOES.—Peel fine ripe totomatoes, cut them up in small pieces, put in a pan, a layer of bread crumbs, then a layer of tomatoes, with pepper, salt, and some pieces of butter; then put another layer of bread crumbs and tomatoes, and so on till the dish is full. Spread some beaten egg over the top, and set it in the oven and bake it.

FRIED TOMATOES.—Wash them, cut them in halves, take out the seeds, and season them with pepper and salt. Have ready some melted butter in a pan, put them into it, and fry them slowly till very soft.

DRIED TOMATOES.—Take fruit fully ripe, strain through a sieve, cook slowly half an hour, spread on clean plates, and dry in oven twelve hours. It is capital when carefully prepared.

Not so Poor.

Charles Jarvis, the artist, tells the following anecdote of his father's travels in the western part of Kentucky:—

At the close of a day in midsummer, Mr. Jarvis and his companion rode up to one of the most dilapidated log huts they had ever seen. The window was stuffed full of rags, and the cracks between the logs were partially choked up with the same articles.

"What an awful shanty that is!" exclaimed Jarvis, as he rode up. "It is evident they are unable to accomodate us here."

"Not so poor as you mout think, stranger," said a head that showed itself among the rags; "for I don't own this place."

"Have you anything in there to eat?" said Jarvis; "any bread and ham?"

"Not a smell, stranger—all gone; every smitch—not a crust left!"

"Have you any feed for our horses?"

"Not a corn, nor an oat, stranger—haven't no use for none!"

"Well, can you accommodate us for the night?"

"Wall, we can't, stranger. There is no floor to the house, and the straw is all out."

"Why, I never heard anything like it" said Jarvis, impatiently. "Why, how do you do here?"

"Putty well, I thank you," said the Kentuckian, "how is all the folks down your way?"

That was enough for them—they rode on to better quarters.

A MODEL STATE.—Vermont is in the enjoyment of about as many real blessings as any of her sisters of this great Confederacy. First, she has her model Prohibitory Liquor Law, which, among other things, has emptied three of her county prisons. She has no public debt. Her system of Education flourishes with 2,594 school districts, and nearly 100,000 scholars. She has also three flourishing collegiate institutions, and a large number of academies and private schools. She has 23 libraries, containing 35,000 volumes. The whole number of newspapers and periodicals published in Vermont in 1850, was 36. There were 564 churches in the State, which accommodate 226,466 persons, and are valued at $1,216,120. On the first of January last she had 427 miles of Railway in operation and 40 miles in construction.

ICE IN CHOLERA MORBUS.—Dr. J. E. Snodgrass, of New York, makes the following statement in the Tribune: "The remedy for cholera morbus is ice. Not 'ice water,' nor even ice taken into the mouth, to melt and find its way into the stomach as water, but crushed ice swallowed, or ice pills. The primary seat of this disease is the stomach. There the intense thirst and disagreeable bitterness characteristic of cholera morbus originate, although experienced in the mouth. There the ice should be applied, with the view to absorbing the morbid excess of caloric or heat. Iced water by its greater bulk distresses the stomach, while the ice itself, applied directly to the part affected, swallowed in small lumps, not suffered to trickle down, relieves it almost certainly."

ANOTHER RACE FOR FREEDOM.—The Toronto (Canada) Ledger gives the following account of a remarkable escape of a colored man from his pursuers, while on his way to a land of freedom—Canada!

"A runaway slave had succeeded in reaching the State of New York; but when he arrived at Oswego he was closely pursued. He got on board a vessel there, which, however, turned out to be bound, not for Canada, but for Youngstown. When the fugitive arrived at the latter-named place, he was no better off than before. The dread of instant capture spurring him on, he secured an old gate and floated himself upon it, expecting to be able to reach the Canada shore. He, however, got out twelve miles in the lake, instead of going across to Niagara. He was found on the old gate, twelve miles from shore, by the Chief Justice, and by her landed in Toronto."

VARIETY.

Lord Chief Justice Holt, when young, was very extravagant, and belonged to a club of wild fellows, most of whom took an infamous course of life. When his lordship was engaged, on a certain occasion, at the Old Bailey, a man was tried and convicted of a robbery on the highway, whom the judge remembered to have been one of his old companions. Moved by that curiosity which is natural on a retrospection of past life, and thinking the fellow did not know him, Justice Holt asked what had become of such and such of his old associates. The culprit, making a low bow, and fetching a deep sigh, said, "Ah! my lord, they are all hanged but your lordship and I!"

Those who think that, in order to dress well, it is necessary to dress extravagantly or gaudily, make a great mistake. Nothing so well becomes true feminine beauty as simplicity. We have seen many a remarkably fine person robbed of its true effects by being over-dressed. Nothing is more unbecoming than over-loaded beauty. The stern simplicity of the classic tastes is seen in the old statues, and in the pictures painted by men of superior artistic genius. In Athens the ladies were not gaudily but simply arrayed, and we doubt whether any ladies ever excited more admiration.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican says that D. D. Warren, of that city, has recently sold a cow to Wells P. Hodgett, on the following curious terms: Mr. Warren is to feed the cow for thirty days, and Mr. Hodgett is to give at the rate of $10 a quart for the milk which she averages over sixteen quarts per day, for the whole thirty days. Thus, if she averages only sixteen quarts a day, he is to give nothing for her. If she averages twenty quarts, he is to give $40, and if twenty-five quarts, $90. It is not at all unlikely that she may do the latter.

The prosperity, happiness, and reputation of a family, depends, in a very great measure, on the judicious and prudential management of the household department. With economy and skill, a family may be made comfortable, happy, and respectable, with one-half the expense on the part of the husband, that is required with the extravagance and mismanagement that prevail in some families. This will make all the difference between prosperity and the accumulation of a competency, and failure and want.

Twenty-three years ago, Professor Henry went to Albany from the country, as a teacher, upon a salary of $600 a year. He was then a young man, with very limited means, and without family influence; but he had industry, integrity, indomitable energy, and a resolve to be somebody. He has worked his way up the hill of science; has won a world-wide reputation.

The Episcopal Recorder calls attention to the fact, that in parts of Pennsylvania where Episcopal chrches once flourished, they have so completely faded away, that their very existence has become a tradition. This region, too, is within a hundred miles of two great cities, where, as the Recorder says, the Church is found rolling in wealth and influence.

Major Morris, the distinguished engineer of Philadelphia, states that there is a vessel now on the stocks at Greenpoint, which will probably be completed by the first of February next, that will make the passage from this city to an English port in less than six days. He is the builder of the machinery, and John W. Griffith of the hull.

It is calculated that there are about 650 tanneries in the different States of the Union, turning out at least 12,000,000 sides of leather, valued at $33,000,000. It is estimated that upwards of five millions of dollars are invested in the different kinds of business growing out of the manufacture of leather.

Mix ignorance with sudden wealth, and we produce a chucklehead whose insolence will be equal to a hundred pounds to the square inch. We can imagine no greater nuisance than an ill-bred man suddenly raised to the rank of a millionaire.

Knowledge may slumber in the memory, but it never dies; it is like the doormouse in the ivied tower, that sleeps while winter lasts, but awakes with the first breath of spring.

An Address delivered before the Young Ladies' Philomathic Society of Genesee, N. Y., August 14, 1853, by Rev. J. Bailey, and published by request of the Ladies of the Society.

Ladies of the Philomathic Society—

I have selected as a theme on which to address you, "The Character and Culture of Woman." In this age of progression and innovation, when all the active elements of society are agitated—when man takes his position in the strife between conservatism and reform—when the wisdom of the past becomes the folly of the present, and society is receiving a more elevated character, socially, politically, and religiously—it is proper for woman to reëxamine and rearrange her position, and find her proper sphere. To her the philosophical settlement of this question is equally a duty and an interest. Caprice and custom are unsuited to the progress and matter-of-fact character of the present age. All the holy considerations of righteousness and justice forbid her to be servile when she should be free. The beatings of her mind for intelligence and usefulness are not to be quieted by an arbitrary law of society. Her love and culture of the beautiful and true, of the elegant and useful, the active and commanding, are not to be smothered by the notions that had their origin in a more barbarous age. Woman's mind may and must be permitted to exert itself in the great intellectual efforts, that is, investigating and shaping science, law, morality, and customs. And now, when free thought, free speech, and free action, are moulding characters and societies, woman should freely assert her freedom to be free from arbitrary customs and rigid rules of restraint imposed by others. Whatever comes within her reach, of intelligence, of mental culture, of greatness and usefulness—whatever she may do to give shape to her character and position, and to mould, elevate, and shape the character of society, and improve and bless the world—comes within her appropriate sphere, and no custom of society may forbid her.

The proper sphere of woman is now more than ever a subject of inquiry and speculation—the law of progression claiming for her a more advanced position, and conservatism bidding her be quiet in the sphere she has long occupied. In this strife, the two extremes of unphilosophical advancement and effeminate and servile obedience to unnatural restraints, are to be avoided. The whole question is settled by the law of ability and aptitude. To this standard there is now a steady progression. And this law will ultimately regulate both woman's and man's position. The ability to occupy usefully and honorably any position, is to be, in the settlement of the affairs of society, the great test, the last resort. The anomalies that now embarrass the free operations of society, are to give place to the law of ability. Many years since, a wise man said, "As a jewel of gold in a swine's snout, so is a fair woman without discretion;" thus teaching, that gaudy trappings, graceful forms and motions, and rich attire, without intellectual culture and strength, are unseemly contradictions. A drunkard in the pulpit, a maniac in the legislative halls, a coward at the head of an army, are no more unseemly than the false arrangements of woman's position. The free-born mind of woman, that is capable of grasping and shaping whatever comes under the operation of mind, is entirely out of place when it is allowed to revel only in the simpering ignorance and empty circles of fashionable etiquette. Woman's mind was never designed for such useless purposes, nor her person for a moving automaton of fashion, bedecked by all the tressel ornament and fashionable drapery by which the tradesman makes his wealth. In a country church-yard in New Jersey, there stands a plain monument, with this inscription, "Julia Adams, died of thin shoes, April 17, 1839, aged 19." Were all the monuments of the dead as truth-telling as this, mantuamakers would become laundresses, and rich tradesmen would become hod-carriers, as the faithful inscriptions of church-yards, ghost-like, haunt their visions with the truth, "died of whalebone and stays, aged 18"—"died of spinal irritation, induced by heavy drapery and bustles, aged 17"—"died of naked arms and neck, January 1, aged 16"—"died of fashion, aged 20." Were the insane asylum also permitted to utter its voice, we should hear the clamorous cry of "Insane from the last novel, aged 25"—"hopelessly insane from magazine literature, aged 23"—"a raving maniac from the last love legend, aged 27." And, venturing into the domestic circle, and listening to its secrets, we might hear, "Ah! she is bed-ridden, or pale-faced, or nervous, or consumptive, induced by fashionable life."

Such is not the God-given and natural employment and destiny of woman. A higher and holier sphere of operations is her birthright—a nobler destiny is her rightful heritage. The word of God gives her an immortal soul. The Gospel of the Son of God gives her the hope of salvation. He who appointed her as the help-mate for man, gave her a mind suited to all the emergencies of her complicated duties. By all these divine rights, should she assert her claims and assume her position as the companion, the help, the equal of man, and occupy her position as a reformer, a philanthropist, a free member of the community, a living, practical Christian, unrestrained by the artificial, the mind-enslaving, the body-torturing, the spirit-enervating, arbitrary customs of fashionable life. Side by side does she stand naturally with man in clear perception of right, in mental vigor and sagacity, and in moral power. If she maintains not that position, it is not because of unfitness and incapacity, but because of arrogant assumptions on his part, and cringing servility on her own part.

But to establish the position I have assumed, and demonstrate the equality of woman with man, allow me to give you a hasty glance over her past history in the noble strife of life.

Among the distinguished mathematicians of former ages, we find the names of several women. Madame Dacier was a philosopher and mathematician. She wrote a treatise on the philosophy of Leibnitz, and translated Newton's Principia into French, and added an algebraic commentary of her own. It is said of Maria Cunitz, who understood five different languages and more than one of the fine arts, that she particularly excelled in mathematics and astronomy. Maria Kirch was an eminent mathematician and astronomer, and wrote learned treatises on Astronomy, and constructed almanacs that were used in different cities of Germany. Scattered through past ages we find occasionally woman grasping the abtruse science of mathematics, and solving its most difficult propositions, and at the same time solving the question of her ability to investigate and understand all that comes within the reach of mind. And while it is often asserted, that her quick perception grasps at once conclusions that man arrives at by investigation, it is also true, that she can reason with mathematical clearness and certainty, and in detail elaborate and demonstrate the most abstruse propositions of mathematics.

In Music, Poetry, Painting, and all the Fine Arts, she has ever excelled. The celebrated Corrinna bore away the palm in five poetic contests with the celebrated poet Pindar. Agnoside, for the sake of studying medicine for the benefit of her sex, wore man's attire. She succeeded, after a severe contest, in securing liberty for other ladies to do the same. Italy produced a large number of women who arrived at eminence in the fine arts, in the sciences, in languages, in oratory, and in politics. Among them was Fidelia Cassandra of Venice, who was versed in the ancient languages, philosophy, theology, music and poetry. She was also a Latin orator, to whom learned societies listened with admiration, and whom Isabella of Spain endeavored to attach to her court, but was prevented by the refusal of the Venetians to relinquish her. Cornelia, also of Venice, could speak six languages, ancient and modern; she was also skilled in music, philosophy, mathematics, and theology. She received the doctor's degree at Padua, was made a member of many learned academies, and was accustomed to deliver lectures before them in Latin. Honorable mention might also be made of many other names of women who devoted themselves to literature, philosophy, theology, and politics. Madame Lehay was a linguist, a poetess, and also an artist. Her portraits and paintings are said to have been characterized by great truthfulness, vigor and grace. Marie Theresa Lambert was an elegant, pure-minded, intellectual woman, whose society was prized by Fenelon and Fontenelle, and all of whose writings were remarkable for purity of style, and high moral tone. It would occupy too much of your time for me to give a brief sketch of the many women who have obtained distinction by their intellectual and moral energies. It is sufficient to say, that in all ages there have been distinguished individuals of such a character.

But we have in modern times bright examples of woman's ability to occupy an honorable and useful position, and perform severe and dangerous labors. While Bayard Taylor has been exploring Central Africa, India, and China, Madame Ida Pfiefer has also passed through the Orient unattended, and made with remarkable facility and cheapness the circuit of the earth, and is now engaged in traversing the wilds and mountain fastnesses of South America. Margaret Fuller, an American lady, who afterwards became the Countess Ossoli, spent several months in Rome, engaged in investigating the political affairs of the Papal Hierarchy. In this enterprise she showed uncommon sagacity, and her letters from thence gave the most philosophical and true representation of Italian politics. During her residence there she became acquainted with the republican Count Ossoli, and materially assisted him in his plans for the overthrow of the temporal power of the Pope. She afterwards married him, and when within sight of her native land, while on a visit here, she was most unfortunately shipwrecked.

Everybody has heard of Howard the philanthropist, who devoted himself to the interests of the prisoners of Europe, and who relieved untold miseries by his efforts. The indefatigable Miss Dix has been no less laborious and successful in the same department of Christian philanthropy. She has visited most of the United States, with a view of improving prison discipline, and attending to the physical and moral wants of the prisoners. She is, equally with Howard, entitled to the appellation of philanthropist. Elizabeth of Thuringia was also a person of like qualities. When Germany was oppressed with famine and pestilence, she caused many hospitals to be erected, and fed a multitude of the poor from her own table. She went about in a humble dress, relieving the sorrows of the distressed. She was regarded as a saint by her admiring cotemporaries, and at length died in one of the hospitals she had built. A beautiful church and costly monument have been erected over her tomb. It is now one of the most splendid remains of Gothic architecture in Germany.

Nearly at the same time that the renowned Kossuth was electrifying the country with his eloquent pleadings for Hungary, the no less celebrated Swedish Nightingale, Jenny Lind, was holding enraptured crowds in enthusiastic admiration of her songs. While the former received thousands of dollars for the redemption of his countrymen, the latter laid even more at the shrine of popular education of the youth. They have both left our shores, the one going to marshal men to the battle of freedom, the other leaving behind her the peaceful remembrance of her soul-satisfying melody.

Woman has long been regarded as a graceful writer of poetry. The names of our countrywomen, Mrs. Sigourney, Lucretia and Margaret Davidson, and others, have gained an enduring fame. Mrs. Lincoln and Mrs. Willard and others have added much to our works on Natural Science. Miss Catherine E. Beecher has endowed a Female Seminary with twenty thousand dollars from the profits of her literary labors. The daughter of Professor Stuart, Mrs. Phelps, has given to the world several valuable legacies, in her "Sunny-Side," "Peep at No. 5," "Tell-Tale," and "Last Leaf of Sunny-Side." Beside all these precious gems of thought, we have the incomparable "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of Mrs. Stowe. Never before has any writer so succeeded in captivating the masses. Never before has any book received such universal circulation. It is the first great success in book-making.

The time is within my own recollection, when the course of study for girls was far below the course of study for boys. It was counted absurd for girls to study mathematics. It was even thought that woman's mind was unsuited to the course of mental culture that was presented for the "lords of creation." Thus, all our colleges were endowed for man's benefit, and all our collegiate titles had a masculine prefix to them. Now there is no branch of science, no department of literature, no classical legacies left unexplored by woman, If an ambitious youth would explore more critically the recondite treasures of learning, he can find no place where woman has not already ventured before him. Into our literary, classical, medical, and theological schools, woman has found her way, and sits there as complacently, as ambitious, and confident of success, as the crowd of bearded youth who are contending for the mastery.

From the ranks of women reformers are now coming forth, and taking the position of public teachers and lecturers. As public lecturers and orators, some women have already succeeded, and are perhaps doing more to mould public sentiment than an equal number of men laboring in the same work.

From an abundance of facts like these, which we have selected from woman's history, we arrive at the conclusion, that she has all the natural qualities of mind suited to success in all things that come under the operation of mind. We also judge, that she would have been more intellectual, more useful, more respected, more happy, had not arbitrary rules given her a secondary position, and had not civil law made her the inferior of him whom she vastly surpassed.

The culture of woman's mind, and the selection of her sphere, should always be in obedience to the law of aptitudes. Whatever is inherent in her nature should never be laid aside for that which is unnatural. Nor should there be a failure to cultivate all her powers, and fit them for all the exigencies of life. And especially should that false culture of mind and habit, which makes her any thing but a rational, responsible actor in the drama of life, be avoided.

Among all pagan nations, woman has been treated as a menial, whose only business was to please him who claimed the right to rule over her. In Italy, woman is an accomplished and fascinating creature of sense—~~ardent, imaginative, beautiful, and fond of~~ graceful ornament. In France, woman is the great originator and cultivator of fashionable attire. The attractions of home and domestic life are alike unheeded in the gay circles of flaunting drapery and costly ornament. She glitters in the public assembly, and seeks sensual rather than mental or moral enjoyments. In Germany, woman is less coquettish and brilliant than in France, while the cultivation of the heart and the sentiments is in advance of the French, with a more cordial and sincere love, and a stronger attachment for home and husbands and domestic life. In England, the artificial distinctions of rank have served to depress the energies of the common people, and render the aristocracy one of wealth and rank, and not of intellectual vigor and moral worth. In the one class woman is too much of a menial; in the other, too much of effeminacy and costly attire and ennui are her characteristics. In our own happy land are to be found all the varieties of female character that abound in all the countries of Europe. Parisian fashions glitter in the promenade and the soiree; the trappings of English royalty bedeck the aristocracy of wealth, while the Swiss, the German and Norwegian woman, in simple and homely garb, devote themselves to the duties of domestic life, and the culture of the soil. It belongs to Yankee women to mould all these contradictory elements into a perfect system, suited to the aptitudes of woman's being. On the one hand, cringing servility, and menial and oppressive servitude, are to give place to intellectual culture and social refinements; while on the other the simpering ignorance that is bedecked with profusion of ornament and costly attire, is to be educated in all the arts and virtues of intellectual refinement and social intercourse. The structure of American society is eminently suited to promote this reform. The freedom of thought and sentiment that prevails, and is the birthright of every individual, will frown upon all aristocracies of money, of dress, of birth, of ignorance. It will at the same time inspire the degraded and the menial with a praiseworthy ambition, which will soon elevate them to the broad level of a common sisterhood, with its equality of rights, of intelligence, of usefulness and respectability.

It is not proposed that woman shall step aside from that which is inherent in her nature, to assume a position for which she has not the capacities. She has not the physical power to fell the forests and cultivate the soil, nor to perform many of the more laborious duties of man. Neither is it to be argued, that because of this inability she must be a menial in domestic life, bound to the endless round of kitchen and nursery duties. There is no law of life that compels them to a particular course, because they have an aptitude for it; for, at the same time, they may have an aptitude for other and more important and congenial occupations. Hence it is, that some are rising above the slavery of custom, and are assuming other positions, and performing honorably other duties. If woman has the ability to conduct a publishing establishment or a mercantile house, or if she has the ability to compete in trades, or serve honorably and usefully in the learned professions, she has the natural right so to do, and no man may forbid her. And yet nothing is more unseemly, and out of place, than the occupancy of a position for which she has no aptitude. Nor does man escape the censure of inconsistency when he aspires to that for which he is unsuited.

A false arrangement of society is often seen, and most keenly felt, when man, who by custom is made the supporter of the family, and the supplier of its wants, is removed by death. Then many a woman feels the falsity of her education and her position, and hopelessly mourns over the false and unnatural arrangements of society, by which the duties of domestic life, and the necessity and responsibilities of maternity, were declared to be her only and appropriate sphere in the drama of life.

Most unrighteous, unequal, and oppressive, is that civil law which gives to man the sole control of all property when his wife dies, and to woman one-third when her husband dies. Together, perhaps by equal labor and economy, has it all been gained; but when death comes, and robs woman of her husband, the civil law may perhaps take also her home, and the thousand comforts with which it is invested, and leave her afflicted, desolate. Ah! shall it be said that woman is out of her place when she assumes a position of independence, that shall never leave her such a perfect bankrupt—a crushed mass of helplessness and grief? You, ladies, have the power to prevent it. Would you be out of your place in using that power?

But think not that I would have the domestic circle broken up, and its duties neglected, because I thus plead. While it should be made the heaven of earth—the quiet resting place of the vigorous actor in life's duties, it is to be a mutual home, cheered and enlivened by the mutual attentions and kindnesses of all its inmates. Man also should be so much of a domestic as to find in home his best friends, his most pleasant place of enjoyment. His presence there should be like a genial sun, shedding joy and gladness on all its inhabitants. While society bids woman remain around the domestic hearth, to enliven it with social comforts, it should not bid her abide there alone. Moreover, if man finds duties elsewhere, so may also woman.

Young ladies, I have spoken chiefly of duties in advance of your present position. I undersaand the object of your Society to be prospective, not looking so much at present enjoyment as to future usefulness and happiness. In early mental culture and moral discipline there is much embodied. To you it is of great account. Your proper position and duties of life have been fixed by God, and he has given you all the necessary abilities for the duties of that position. Let the proper culture and use of them be your greatest ambition. Your artificial position in society has been regulated more by caprice and fashion than by prudence and the law of aptitudes. Every day clamorous custom and inexorable fashion are making demands on your time, on your abilities, and seeking to rivet still stronger the relentless chains of prejudice, of popularity, and servility, which shall keep you in perpetual servitude to its unnatural demands.

Young ladies step aside from their appropriate sphere, when they consent to whirl in the tide of fashionable life. They were not designed to be the walking signs of Parisian fashions, or of the merchant's wares. A well-selected, convenient, chaste wardrobe better becomes her. She is more graceful, and is better prepared for the varied positions she is called to occupy. An exuberance of finery, an extravagance of drapery, an excess of brilliants, are fair indications of mental imbecility or servility at the shrine of fashion. There was as much truth as wit in the remark of the editorial wag, that the delicate bonnets of the ladies were as light as the heads that wore them. And amid ostentatious display, one can hardly refrain from repeating the words of Burns, when he saw a louse on a gay lady's bonnet at church:—

"O would some power the giftie gie us,
To see ourselves as ithers see us;
It wad from many a blunder free us

Young ladies, be cautious how you receive poison from the literature you read. There is not a more fatal delusion thrown upon the world, from the pit of its origination, than the so-called polite or popular literature. Its simple and almost inevitable effect is to mislead your active imaginations, and poison them by the breath of pollution that is overlaid by graceful construction of language. Better consign the richly-ornamented magazine to merited flames, than transfer its mental and moral poison to your heart.

One object of your Society is mental improvement. This is not secured by studying the visionary and false—the time-serving and popular—by flattery and coquetry. This object you will secure by investigating the laws of your being, the construction and objects of society, and the laws of physical science. There is enough of the true and useful, requiring no resort to the fanciful and false.

But the great object of your life is that moral and religious culture which shall prepare you for the duties and enjoyments of life. You are now in the spring-time of life. Sow plentifully the seeds of morality, of virtue, and religion. Your summer then shall be prolific in usefulness, and your age be blessed with the fruits of goodness.

Religion stands before you as the great beacon light to guide in usefulness, in virtue, and happiness. Outside of its radiant light primeval darkness reigns unbroken, in which the lovers of pleasures, the gay, the fashionable, the sensual, are ever ebbing and flowing on the tide of fancy and feeling—ever seeking, but never finding, the quiet place where they can say to the immortal spirit that throbs within, "Peace, be still." Your life is not a fanciful vision, bright in all its changes. It still is a stern reality, invested with cares and duties and consequences of infinite account. So occupy its fleeting hours, that their memory shall be blessed, and their termination be the dawning of an immortal day of blessedness.

THE "TRIMETRICAL CLASSIC."

In our notices of the revolutionary movements in China, frequent allusion has been made to a publication of the Insurgents called the "Trimetrical Classic." It is a poem of about six hundred and fifty lines, each line containing three words, and each verse four lines. The British correspondent of the Independent gives the following synopsis of it.

In three verses the creation and the institution of the Sabbath are described, thus:

The great God
Made heaven and earth,
Both land and sea
And all things therein.
In six days,
He made the whole:
Man, the lord of all,
Was endowed with glory and honor.
Every seventh day worship,
In acknowledgment of Heaven's favor:
Let all under heaven
Keep their hearts in reverence.

Then in about 100 lines the history of the Jews is given, very closely and accurately, with this introduction:—

It is said that in former times,
A foreign nation was commanded
To honor God.

The Celestial Law given to Israel by Moses cannot be altered, but it was disobeyed through the devil's temptations, and men fell into misery:—

But the great God
Out of pity to mankind,
Sent his first-born son
To come down into the world.
His name is Jesus,
The Lord and Savior of men,
Who redeems them from sin,
By the endurance of extreme misery.
Upon the cross,
They nailed his body;
Where he shed his precious blood,
To save all mankind.
Three days after his death
He rose from the dead;
And during forty days
He discoursed on heavenly things.
When he was about to ascend,
He commanded his disciples
To communicate his Gospel,
And proclaim his revealed will.
Those who believe will be saved,
And ascend up to heaven;
But those who do not believe,
Will be the first to be condemned.

A very brief notice of the religious history of China is then given, and the purity of the early or patriarchal religion is asserted. There is only one God (Shang-te,) the Great Ruler, without a second, who in the early ages regarded the Chinese:

Down to the three dynasties
They honored God,
As history records.

This would be down to about 200 years before Christ. Several rulers are described, among them Ming of the Han dynasty, who welcomed the institutions of Buddha, and set up temples and monasteries "to the great injury of the country!" Things grew worse:

But Hwuy, of the Sung dynasty,
Was still more mad and infatuated,
For he changed the name of Shang te (God)
Into that of Yuh hwang (the pearly emperor.)
But the great God
Is the supreme Lord
Over all the world,
The great Father in Heaven.
His name is most honorable,
To be handed down through distant ages:
Who was this Hwuy,
That he dared to alter it?
It was meet that this same Hwuy
Should be taken by the Tartars;
And together with his son
Perish in the northern desert.
From Hwuy, of the Sung dynasty,
Up to the present day,
For these seven hundred years,
Men have sunk deeper and deeper in error.
With the doctrine of God
They have not been acquainted;
While the King of Hades
Has deluded them to the utmost.

At this point the Trimetrical Classic treats of the Insurrectionary Leader, and becomes far less clear and satisfactory, suggesting thoughts of Mahomet, Joe Smith, and the Jesuit missionaries. Hung-sew-tsean, the leader of the insurrection, is introduced as having a divine mission—sent of God as His son. He had studied the classics, had then been, in 1837, received up into heaven, and personally instructed of God, who Gave him odes and documents,

And communicated to him
The true doctrine.
God also gave him a seal,
And conferred upon him a sword,
Connected with authority,
And majesty irresistible.
He bade him, together with the elder brother,
Namely Jesus,
To drive away impish fiends,
With the co-operation of angels.
There was one who looked on with envy,
Namely the king of Hades;
Who displayed much malignity,
And acted like a devilish serpent.

The devil opposes, but he is overcome by this "Son," who re-ascends to heaven, where he is graciously received by personages with whom Protestant theology has little acquaintance—"the Celestial Mother"—probably the blessed virgin of the Jesuits, and by the "elder brother's wife,"—by which it would seem the wife of Jesus is meant; after this, the last, or present mission of the son, or sons, was resolved upon in heaven:—

The Celestial elder brother's wife
Was virtuous and very considerate,
Constantly exhorting the elder brother
To do things deliberately.
The great God,
Out of love to mankind,
Again commissioned his Son
To come down into the world;
And when he sent him down,
He charged him not to be afraid.
I am with you, said he,
To superintend everything.
In the Mow-shin year (1848)
The Son was troubled and distressed,
When the great God
Appeared on his behalf.
Bringing Jesus with him,
They both came down into the world;
Where he instructed his Son
How to sustain the weight of government.
God has set up his Son
To endure forever,
To defeat corrupt machinations,
And to display majesty and authority.
Also to judge the world,
To divide the righteous from the wicked;
And consign them to the misery of hell,
Or bestow on them the joys of heaven.

The Trimetrical Classic concludes with a code of morals:—

Heaven manages everything;
Heaven sustains the whole:
Let all beneath the sky
Come and acknowledge the new monarch.
Little children,
Worship God,
Keep his commandments,
And do not disobey.
Let your minds be refined,
And be not depraved.
The great God
Constantly surveys you.
You must refine yourselves well,
And not be depraved.
Vice willingly practiced
Is the first step to misery.
To insure a good end,
You must make a good beginning;
An error of a hair's breadth
May lead to a discrepancy of 1000 le.
Be careful about little things,
And watch the minute springs of action;
The great God
Is not to be deceived.
Little children,
Arouse your energies;
The laws of high Heaven
Admit of no infraction.
Upon the good blessings descend,
And miseries on the wicked.
Those who obey Heaven are preserved,
And those who disobey perish.
The great God
Is a spiritual Father;
All things whatever
Depend on him.
The great God
Is the Father of our spirits;
Those who devoutly serve him
Will obtain blessings.
Those who obey the fathers of their flesh
Will enjoy longevity;
Those who requite their parents
Will certainly obtain happiness.
Do not practice lewdness,
Nor any uncleanness;
Do not tell lies;
Do not kill and slay;
Do not steal;
Do not covet.
The great God
Will strictly carry out his laws.
Those who obey Heaven's commands
Will enjoy celestial happiness:
Those who are grateful for divine favors
Will receive divine support.
Heaven blesses the good,
And curses the bad;
Little children
Maintain correct conduct.
The correct are men,
The corrupt are imps.
Little children,
Seek to avoid disgrace.
God loves the upright,
And he hates the vicious:
Little children
Be careful to avoid error.
The great God
Sees everything.
If you wish to enjoy happiness,
Refine and correct yourselves.

JEWISH CUSTOM.

From a recent work on the modern Jew, we extract a passage which shows the tenacity with which the Jews cling to the letter of the Mosaic law, and which throws light upon a well-known requirement of that law:—

"The Jewish wife, as well as her Gentile neighbor, may become a widow. When such happens, and she be without issue, it is the duty of her husband's brother to take her in marriage, or to set her free to marry any other person. This ceremony of giving her leave to marry another, is called Chalitzah, i. e., the taking off of the shoes, and is founded on Deut. xxv. 5–10. Should the living brother be born after the decease of the dead brother, he is not under obligation to marry his sister-in-law; or should he already be married, he is only expected to put her free, for without this freedom she cannot marry a second time. This ceremony is performed in the following manner:—The parties having informed the authorities of the fact, it is announced in the Synagogue in the evening, that a Chalitzah will take place the following morning. After the morning service, according to announcement, three Rabbis, the required witnesses, and the parties, meet; after hearing their statement, the Chief Rabbi questions the young man, and when he finds him determined not to marry his brother's widow, he calls for the shoe. This shoe is of a peculiar make, and used for this purpose only. It is made of black cloth list, of pointed form, and two long laces attached thereto; it is always kept in the Synagogue. When brought forward, the Rabbi commands the man to put it on, after doing which, he twists and ties the laces around his legs. The woman is then led by the Rabbi to the man, and taught to repeat the following in Hebrew: 'My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel; he will not perform the duty of my husband's brother.' In answer, he repeats: 'I like not to take her.' The woman then unravels the knots, which is rather a troublesome affair, as she must do it with her right hand only—takes off the shoe, throws it upon the ground, and spits before the man, repeating, after the Rabbi, the following: 'So shall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brother's house: and his name shall be called in Israel, 'The house of him that hath his shoe loosed.' All those present respond, 'His shoe is loosed! his shoe is loosed! his shoe is loosed!' After this the Rabbi declares the woman free to marry whomsoever she may, and the secretary of the Synagogue gives her a writing to that effect, when the ceremony is over."

"SABBATH DESECRATION" BY THE PRESS.

The following "Address" was sent us some two weeks ago, but was mislaid and forgotten, till it accidentally turned up a day or two since. This is our apology (if any is needed) for not giving it an earlier notice. We have no knowledge of the writer, nor of the position he occupies in community; but he seems to be a man who earnestly longs for the triumph of righteousness over sin. In this instance, he has evidently done what he supposes to have been his duty. Our comments are not intended to impeach his sincerity, but if he will weigh them candidly, he will see that there are some who are quite as sincere in supposing that the Sunday has no Bible ble claims to be considered a holy day. That our views do not coincide with those of the majority, is a matter of small importance, and if our correspondent is what he appears to be, he will feel that it is better to disagree with all men, than to disagree with God.

An Address,

To the Editors of the Daily and Sunday Press of New York City and the United States, on Sabbath Desecration.

Messrs. Editors:—Having some just appreciation of the Power and Importance of the Press, for "weal or woe," especially in this free country, we feel the deepest concern for the moral rectitude of the principles and views of its Conductors.

It is to us of very minor importance whether Editors of Daily Journals or Periodicals are politically "sound in the faith," to their being sound in the belief and practice of the great principles of a Bible morality and religion.
